Mayo To Deliver Speech

By NEIL SAWYER

Pamela Mayo will be delivering a speech to the Southeastern College Art Conference on Friday, October 31st. The conference will be held in Birmingham, Alabama. Ms. Mayo has the distinction of being the first under-graduate to ever speak at this gathering.

Her speech will be devoted to the lives and works of Lue Osborne and Cordray Simmons. This speech is one of the many fruits of Pam's labors which began over a year ago when she started research on these two early 20th-century artists.

Her research was started as an honors project and has included being Guest Curator of the Osborne-Simmons exhibit on display now at the Bedford Gallery, compiling the catalog for the exhibit, delivering a speech at the Sully Dinner, and finally delivering her Honors paper in the spring.

Pam Mayo has worked under the guidance of Dr. Elisabeth Flynn, Professor of Art History at Longwood, and Dr. Barbara Bishop, head of the Longwood College Art Department.

Mike Cross And Hot Shanty A Foot-Stomping Success!

By JOE JOHNSON

Do you like country, soul, Jethro Tull, old Irish songs, or just sing-alongs? Well, if you like any or all of the above, you would probably love Hot Shanty. They appeared Saturday, October 18, in Longwood's lower dining hall, along with another outstanding performer, Mike Cross.

Two guitar players and singers named Rick Bouley and Jim Magill are Hot Shanty. Their music, although a little hard to describe, is delightful. The songs are reminiscent of old English ballads, with a sprinkling of country twang to give it that down home flavor. They also played some stupendous up-beat songs and the amount of music that came from just the two players was remarkable.

Hot Shanty has played in such places as Augustania, Illinois; The Bottom Line, New York; Morehead City and Chapel Hill,

North Carolina. Chapel Hill is where they met their friend and sometimes companion, Mike Cross. The way Rick Bouley tells it, they were going by the Oxopus Music Shop in Chapel Hill when they saw this dude coming towards them swearing up a storm. Finally he yelled at them, "Hey, you got any E acoustic guitar strings? This — store is all out of them." Well, Rick said that they did, and the dude, who was in fact Mike Cross, got the strings; and after he tuned up, they started to play together. They've been playing ever since.

Mike Cross is about 5'6" with dark grinning eyes and a balding head. His features are perfect for his act, which is a cross between Jim Croce and George Carlin. That's right, a singing comedian, and he hit the nerve that sent Longwood wild with laughter. He played songs about strip poker with a sixth grade girl, alcohol and alka-seltzer, excuses for the boss, helium balloons and getting high, cocaine on the brain, and whiskey for breakfast.

Mike Cross plays an acoustic guitar, fiddle and a Bouzouki, which, he explained, is an octave mandolin. He sometimes travels with a partner, Zane McCloud, who plays electric guitar. They have played in Maryville, Tennessee; Lenoir, North Carolina; and during the winter, they migrate south to Key West, Florida.

Well, the crowd loved Mike Cross so much that he gave an encore which lasted well past 12. About 12:15, Hot Shanty joined in with Mike Cross and all hell broke loose. They did some intricate weaving of music which caught the crowd in its foot-stomping, hand-clapping net of exhilaration. They ended with the song, "Bid You Goodnight."

Mike Cross is appearing next in Athens, Georgia, on Halloween. He also has a new album out called "Rock 'n' Rye." He says it's great . . . I believe it!

Ann Chenoweth Exhibition

By NEIL SAWYER and PAO

October 22-November 24, an exhibit of paintings, prints, drawings and cut-out sculptures by Ann Chenoweth is on display in the Lancaster Library Gallery.

Ann Chenoweth has recently received a Master of Fine Arts degree from Virginia Commonwealth University and is presently employed as a Gallery Assistant at the Institute of Contemporary Arts of the Virginia Museum.

Her Longwood exhibit is not her first one-woman exhibit by any means. Ms. Chenoweth has been exhibiting solo since 1974 when her work was displayed at the Anderson Gallery on the V.C.U. campus. Recently, Ann Chenoweth has also been awarded a Virginia Museum Professional Fellowship.

The work on display at Longwood deals mostly with fish which the artist explains is an intriguing subject because of the variety of natural design qualities fish possess.

She is working on a series called "Fish Out of Water," in which the fish "were removed from their natural context (water) and placed in other environments — falling in a room, leaping against wallpaper, or juxtaposed over the skyline of New York City." Some of the works in this series combine the two-dimensional aspect of painting with three-dimensional cutouts of fish which are painted to give further illusion.

Also included in Ms. Chenoweth's exhibit will be a series of small landscape paintings of the Blue Ridge Mountains. These paintings were done on location rather than in the studio, resulting in a freshness of color and looseness of gesture.

The exhibit will be open during regular library hours.

Coffeehouse Brings Steve Hudson

By JULIE AUEL

What better way is there to sit back and relax after Oktoberfest and mid-term grades than to come to a quiet atmosphere and be pleasantly entertained? On Sunday night, Nov. 2, Steve Hudson will be making his first appearance at Longwood during Coffeehouse in the Snack Bar.

A native Virginian, Steve first started playing in Northern Virginia about six years ago as part of a duo, but has since then found himself more comfortable as a "one-man band". He has a natural guitar style, along with a flare for the piano, harmonica and trombone, and won't settle for second best in his performance.

Steve's music consists of country and western, folk, rock, country—rock, jazz and rhythm and blues—enough variety to please just about everyone's musical taste. He does his own songs, such as "Take me out to lunch" and "The Blue Cross, Blue shield Blues" plus a stream of well-known contemporary pop to which he sometimes adds a touch of originality. Coffeehouse is Sunday at 8 p.m. Come and enjoy yourself and get to know a performer with talent, a great interest in his audience and a sharp wit. He'll be sure to fill your evening with genuine warmth, inspired humor, and a lot of good music.

Ann Sowash Display

By NEIL SAWYER

Artworks by Ann Sowash will be on display in the Reading Rooms of the Lankford Building through November 12th. Ann is a senior Art major and is one of many seniors who have and will be exhibiting work at Lankford this year. So far this semester Jeanne Pearson, Keith Moore, and Marjorie Croxton have all exhibited excellent work.

The Reading Room shows give senior Art majors a chance to set up their own exhibits and display solely their work for the first time on campus.

The artwork of Sally Lowe will be on display starting November 13th followed by Cindy Carter starting December 1st in the Lankford Reading Rooms.

Halloween With The Music Department

How do you plan to spend your Halloween? Will it be just another lonely Friday night with nothing to do but watch the full moon rise, bob for apples in the bathroom sink, munch on popcorn, or watch your roomie turn into a bat? Well, whatever the case may be, the Longwood College Department of Music would like to invite you to spend your Halloween evening with them as they present Signor Deluso by Thomas Pasatieri, and The Medium by Gian Carlo Menotti. Both contemporary American operas will be performed in English on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1, at 8:00 p.m. in Molnar Recital Hall in Wygal Music Building.

another lead them to believe that each is being betrayed by the other. It is under the direction of Miss Patricia Lust, and its cast includes: Andrea Mott, Nathaniel Eismann, Katrina Harlow, Charles Lafferty, Cecilia White, Scott Noonan, and Trotman Simpson. It will be accompanied by Cynthia Hamilton and Jeanette VanWinkle.

The Medium is directed by Mrs. Thomas A. Williams, and is a tragedy in two acts. It tells the story of a medium who loses touch with reality and ultimately goes insane. Its cast includes: Mary Breeden, Chris Pace, Rebecca Nunez, Joanne Mosca, Douglas Blevins, Myrne McGonigle, with accompaniment by Emily Sue Wilkinson.

Tickets are $2.50, and advanced reservations are required. Longwood College students and faculty will be admitted free of charge. For more information call 392-9368. Come and enjoy a musical, mystical, and entertaining Halloween night (or Saturday night) with the Music Dept. and its creative productions.

Congratulations

Dear Red and Whites—

Wow, what a job you did this Oktoberfest!! We are so very proud of you and the talents you displayed in the name of the Red and Blue spirits. The skit was great and we were excited by your victories in the color rush and paint battle.

Now that Oktoberfest is over, you have many activities to keep you busy. The Juniors have the Ring Dance and Freshmen have Freshman Production right around the corner. Keep working and be proud of your color and your school.

However, never forget the valuable lessons you learned during Oktoberfest. It takes Red and Green to make the Blue spirit work well. Joan of Arc oversees us all. Remember that! And remember us and our—

Senior Spotlight

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"In some ways Longwood has changed a lot in the two years I've been here," began senior Frank Creasy. "The biggest change has been the addition of Lancer Hall. However, many of the traditions have remained basically the same. Students should realize that traditions are not static. They should live and grow day by day. Only students are capable of altering traditions and seeing that they live on; even when the students must change a tradition for it to adapt. I really think that everyone needs to re-evaluate their values and to seriously consider what school spirit means to them and to the student body as a whole before they make up their minds."

And Frank seems to be well on the way toward making up his mind about his life here and his future. A sociology major-English minor from Winchester ("the apple capital of the world," according to Frank), he plans to become "an apprentice in a good theater company and go on from there. 'But I'm not counting my chickens which is why I have a major in sociology.'"

Since transferring here two years ago from George Mason University, Frank has participated in many of the school's functions. He is the former vice-president of the Sociology-Anthropology Club and has previously written on the Rotunda staff. He is a member of Alpha Psi Omega, the drama honorary and of Longwood Players, two indications of his involvement in many of the Player's productions, most notably in the starring role of Paul Bratter in this year's opening success, Barefoot in the Park. Frank has also played soccer for two years and serves as a class representative on Judicial Board.

"I wish for more communication between the Student Government Association and the administration. The SGA can only represent the students. The main reason people become frustrated and lash out in irrational ways at the college is because of this weak link of communication. Vandalism is a prime example of this. The administration needs to be more responsive to the students. A lot of the problems seen as inherent in the student body by the Administration would suddenly disappear if the students were responded to in a more relevant fashion. However, you must remember that no school is perfect. Everyone should know that it takes more than just one loud mouth like me to accomplish something."

Because of Frank's many contributions to the student body, Geist tapped him to be an usher during the Oktoberfest activities this past week end. "I've enjoyed participating tremendously. I've been teased a lot about my clothes and the dances but most of the teasing came from my friends, so I didn't mind. I had a lot of fun."

Before going off to perform one of those dances, Frank did have one last comment today. "My graduating class has seen the best and worst Longwood could offer. That's not bad. Every individual has to decide what is best and right for him or her. At least in the time I've been here, I've been given this chance to decide what is right for me. That's what college is all about."

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Editor's Turn

There are times when things just don't seem to go the way we want them to go. This week end could have been termed one of those times because of the rain; however, the week end was a big success due to the cooperation of all those involved.

Several people need to be recognized for their excellent work. Pam Wagner, Geist's Chairman of Oktoberfest, and the other members had the week end organized and had the cooperation of everyone.

One group on campus that especially shined through to make the rainy weather bearable was the Physical Plant workers. A lot of times these men and women are over looked for everything that they do. All week the workers busied themselves getting ready for Oktoberfest. There were a lot of changes this year due to relocation of many events. The workers remained faithful and had everything ready for the Oktoberfest festivities outside.

When the rain threatened, the workers began preparations for Oktoberfest, inside style. As soon as the decision to move inside was made, the workers quickly made the transition. In a short matter of time, Midway booths had been moved off the Lankford lot and tables were set up for the Lower Dining Hall.

Another group that did an especially good job to make this year's Oktoberfest successful was the ARA Slater staff. Not many people realize just how much Gordon Inge and his staff have to do. Work for them on this week end begins several days before when the huge Oktoberfest cake goes into the oven. On top of this, they have to help plan and carry out the parents coffee, the picnic, and the parents cocktail and buffet. All of these events were moved inside due to rain.

That seems like a lot to contend with, but that is not all. ARA also aided many student organizations on Midway by ordering items for them. There were the hot dogs, the cokes, the pretzels, the cotton candy, and the list goes on.

There are many other groups that are behind the scenes, and never get recognized or are never appreciated for all that they do. Without these two groups, Oktoberfest der Geist rain style would not have been so successful. Rain or no rain, it has always been the spirit that counts — And this year's Oktoberfest proves it.

Congratulations to everyone involved in the event!

November 6-7 will bring the Longwood College Board of Visitors to campus for their quarterly meeting. These meetings are open to all students, and should be of interest to everyone. There is, however, always a shortage of people in the audience.

Come — find out about your school and the board that runs it. They are a very interesting group of people that you, as students, should want to know.

Imposition Of Sign-In

By MARK KARL SEGAL

I was always under the impression that a college would pride itself in preparing her students for life; to fulfill each student's social, academic and moral obligations to society and themselves. Longwood College has done an excellent job — up until now. I feel cheated, my friends feel taunted and to be truthful we are mad.

Since I was 14 years old I have paid taxes. Taxes to squelch poverty, feed the hungry, buy books, pay Congress, and welfare checks, etc., and defend our country. When I turned 18 I suddenly became aware I owed something to society — my life — I could be drafted into the armed forces with the swiftness of a rocket and the force of a locomotive. I can live and I can die for the U.S.A., but I cannot have a girl in my room past 10:00 p.m. on a school night.

Well then, Longwood is not preparing its students for life. Preparing students for life is not distorting reality. It is a mean world out there and if you plan on being competitive you had better be ready to defend yourself from getting your throat cut a few times. Like it or not, there are packs of cruel sharks out there with an insatiable thirst for your blood. Longwood's security blanket is preparing its women to take the back seat in society, and its men to get the socks scared off of them when they graduate. I would like to be able to sit at the helm of supremacy by way of Longwood. But there is this knife salted with Residence Board rules constantly stabbing me in my pride. If Longwood had the trust in me to behave like a gentleman with a girl in my room past 10:00 o'clock then maybe I would have the trust in Longwood any student should have for his or her university or college.

This is not 1925 nor is this 1984, but this is TODAY. Today is a time for us to remember yesterday and prepare for tomorrow. I can't prepare for tomorrow because of today's impositions. Not restrictions or rules but impositions! (Longwood is imposing on my rights as an individual in dealing with me like an animal or a rapist in a girl's school. I am not a child in a candy store, nor a dog catcher in a world of illegitimate puppies. I am a living breathing student at a co-ed state funded college in Farmville, Virginia.) An imposition on campus police and every member of the student body. Campus police should not have to open the door for a 24 year old man at 2:30 a.m. The doors should be open to all of the all male dorms. I can understand why the doors should be locked in the female dorms — for safety purposes — but not in Cox. I don't think any tender young flesh will be intimidated or trespassed. If the men in Cox can die for their country why should they be violated personally, morally and constitutionally because of a rule that was made when Longwood was a women's college?

To what advantage is it to sign-in and out every time you enter a dorm room of the opposite sex? Longwood is violating my rights and treating me with the starched attitudes of a Victorian society. It was rumored once that students should sign-in and out for fire and safety reasons. Well, that is a crock of bologna. Does U.Va. or Madison have this? No. This is saying that whenever a person enters my home I must list him in case there is a fire and he dies! That excuse for sign-in does not hold water. If L.C. wants to develop students to become leaders in society, then L.C. has a long way to go. There are no rational explanations for these archaic rules and impositions.

I am being violated personally, morally and intellectually. If L.C. wants to ever become THE university or THE college, then we must be treated as THE students of such an academic organization. I have heard talk of abolishing sign-in and having 23 hour visitation. But that was it. Just TALK! Squabbling, babbling, I don't plan on taking a back seat to anyone after graduation and I am sure you do not either. Speak up! Scream out! Don't tolerate petty incompetent personal violations. If it takes a radical stand to change these regulations I feel at least two-thirds of the school will do it.

I am not writing this because I feel cheated as a result of being caught. I have never been charged with any violation at L.C. I want to speak up for the student body who has been caught, who has been cheated, and has been riding rumble seat to those attending other institutions of higher learning. I believe L.C. can be a superior college, but we have to MAKE it one.

public has been bombarded with slickly-done television commercials, media events, and campaign speeches all designed to portray the proper image of the candidates — and in some cases have led to some nasty mud-slinging among the three camps. Although this bantering may make the election more interesting to watch, the voters must make a particular effort to see past the political games and personality shows to the issues and stands of the candidates. Whereas Reagan and Anderson can offer only dreams and theories on leadership, President Carter can point to his four years in the White House as proof of his strong convictions for a dominant, yet caring, government.

Some angry voters may scoff at the word "dominant" when applied to the U.S.'s position in foreign affairs; they feel that such problems as the Iranian hostage situation, the renewal of strife in the Middle East, and the Russian invasion into Afghanistan are Carter's fault because he has not made dramatic attempts with arms and force to bully other nations over to America's position. But Carter is dominant in that he has the strength and sensibility to examine those problems for mature, peaceful solutions. He realizes that the view of "might makes right" died with Theodore Roosevelt, and that America must update her responses to be in line with the challenges that the 1980's present. For example, by hammering out the Middle East Peace Treaty between Israel and Egypt, Carter resisted taking sides on the old "religion vs. oil" trap and instead started the framework for peace in the future. And though hostile words have passed between Washington and Moscow in past months, Carter has fought for a Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT) that is strong, yet balanced, in the hopes of leading the superpowers away from the temptations of engaging in "limited" nuclear wars or any other strategies that would spell holocaust for the world. Yet these labors do not mean that Carter is not concerned with maintaining a strong national defense; he has recently joined with NATO allies to develop a three per cent real defense increase every year.

President Carter has also taken this strong — yet understanding — policy into his handling of domestic affairs. Although he has said that inflation is the biggest enemy of the American taxpayer, he realizes that an across-the-board, Kemp-Roth style tax cut will not cure the economic woes of the country; the problems of unemployment and an inflated budget must also be tackled — and that he has done. In three years, Carter has slashed the deficit in the Federal Budget from an alarming $66 billion figure to a more manageable $26½ billion. In the same manner, he has lowered unemployment 25 per cent by creating 8½ million new jobs in the economy. And as always, Carter is concerned for the future; realizing that a good deal of the U.S.'s political and economic stability hinges on the maintenance of her energy needs, he won the enactment of America's first energy plan designed to make the nation less dependent on foreign oil. Additionally, he devised the Windfall Profits Tax, which is meant to aid lower-income families who cannot afford today's OPEC-inflated prices while also using some of the unearned profits from private oil companies to explore alternative energy programs such as solar power and safer usage of nuclear energy. These measures should all prove that President Carter can cooperate with Congress; in fact, four out of every five of the bills the President has introduced to Congress have been passed by that body, a record that is as impressive as John F. Kennedy's or Lyndon Johnson's.

Finally, Carter has attempted to be fair to all the different concerns and views that make up the values of American citizens. As promised, Carter has appointed more women to his cabinet than any other president, as well as appointing more Blacks, Hispanics, and other minorities to judicial positions than all other presidents combine. He has helped the older segment of America's population by saving the Social Security system from certain bankruptcy, while aiding the younger generations by increasing Federal support for education by 70 per cent. And though sometimes the President is forced to make decisions that might anger one special interest group or another, he knows that long-term results are what is important — not what view is shown to be popular by unstable public opinion polls. Though it is sometimes tempting to want another President when problems arise at home and abroad, a change simply for change's sake is not the best approach. What is needed is a man with foresight to see the proper goals that his country should work toward — a man like Jimmy Carter.

The College Politicians Speak

By JOE JOHNSON

Lesser of two evils, damned if I do and damned if I don't, undecided — all of these seem to be popular opinions of this year's presidential election. Popular, except for at least two opposing clubs at Longwood College, the Longwood College Republicans and Longwood College Democrats, two self-funding politically oriented clubs.

The Longwood College Republicans, led by Frank Cantone, have done enormous statistical work for the Republican Party this year. They have surveyed 35 per cent of the campus, conducted phone banks, sent out pamphlets and attended workshops and conventions sponsored by CRFV (College Republicans for Virginia) with whom they are chartered. Their 15 active members have also conducted polls which show Reagan 49 per cent, Carter 23 per cent, with the rest of the students undecided. They also plan to run a mock election before November 4.

The Longwood Democrats led by David Oakes is a younger but growing club. They now have 12 active members and are working on their charter. This group is associated with the Prince Edward County Democratic Committee working phone banks and distributing literature on President Carter. Each of these clubs has submitted an article on their candidate; the first is by Frank Cantone, Chairman of Longwood College Republicans; the second is by Cynthia Thurman, Vice President of Longwood College Democrats.

The Republican Candidate:

Ronald Reagan

Ronald Reagan was born February 6, 1911, in Tampico, Illinois. He was educated in Illinois public schools and was graduated from Eureka College in 1932, with a degree in economics and sociology.

Following a brief career as a sports broadcaster and editor, Reagan moved to California to work in motion pictures. His film career, though interrupted by three years of service in the Army Air Corps during World War II, encompassed 50 feature-length motion pictures, as well as six terms as president of the Screen Actors Guild and two terms as president of the Motion Picture Industry Council.

1966 marked the formal beginning of Ronald Reagan's public service career with his election — by nearly a million vote margin — as Governor of the State of California. Re-elected in 1970 Reagan was also Chairman of the Republican Governors' Association in 1969.

As President of the United States, Ronald Reagan wants to create the kind of healthy economic climate that creates more jobs. He wants to cut tax rates so the private sector can generate the kind of investment necessary to create these new jobs.

Governor Reagan actively opposes the peace-time draft and a standby registration. He believes that the Carter administration's approach to the all-volunteer force has failed. The Reagan-Bush team understands that we must provide men and women in the armed forces with salary and benefits which will attract and keep the best.

As Governor of California, Ronald Reagan also worked to increase scholarships for needy students by 500 per cent. During his term, student loans were increased by 900 per cent. He understands the importance of education in preparing young people for their roles in the future of America.

The highest priority of a Reagan-Bush Administration will be PEACE. Governor Reagan's policy is one of PEACE THROUGH STRENGTH. He knows that a strong national defense will protect America's most important resource — our country's youth.

Ronald Reagan and George Bush offer all Americans an alternative to the Carter administration's four-year record of high unemployment and the highest peacetime inflation rate in our history — an alternative to declining productivity, staggering budget deficits and more taxes — an alternative to a weakened defense and a foreign policy record underscored with loss of respect among our friends around the world.

The Reagan-Bush team brings an opportunity to each of us for progress, growth, and a renewed commitment to our country's greatness.

The time is now . . . Vote Reagan-Bush, November 4.

Tracks Was Terrific

By MITZ MASON

Thursday, October 23, at the Saturday Night Alive, many Longwood students and guests enjoyed music from Tracks. This group has appeared all over the state of Virginia. They are originally from Richmond, Virginia. Among many of their selections were songs by David Bowie, Joe Jackson, the Cars, the Stones, Led Zeppelin, Tom Petty, Cheap Trick and LeRoux. Comments from the audience were many. One person felt that "this concert was an enthusiastic starter to Oktoberfest week end." Since the Student Union sold half of the tickets in advance, and the remainder at the door; many people anxiously awaited the opening of the door to see if they would get in. After all tickets were gone, many people waited for people to come up selling extra tickets. Tracks has performed for the students of Hampden-Sydney frequently. They have also performed at the Red Lion Inn. This Saturday Night Alive was one of the best for this semester.

The Thrill And Tranquility Of A Canoe Trip

By TOM STANLEY

Although the weather was gloomy and the hour was too early for most of us, we began the two hour drive to Buena Vista, Va. Cat-napping and sightseeing along the way, we arrived at 9:30 a.m. at the James River Basin Canoe Livery to begin the canoe trip offered through the Military Science department.

Shortly after arriving, the decision was made to run the Maury River instead of the James River. Familiarity with the James from previous trips was the deciding factor to run the Maury, even though its water was comparatively lower. We all agreed that the experience of running an unfamiliar stretch of river was intriguing and exciting.

The owner of the canoe livery issued a map of the section of river we would be on to each tandem crew. He then explained the map in detail and gave instructions on padding, safety, and some basic principles of water currents. Last minute preparations were made, paddles were selected, and we headed toward the put-in, about six miles back to Buena Vista. Nervous laughter and intense anticipation filled the bus as we wound down the narrow macadam road leading down to the river.

After arriving, canoes were unloaded and carried to the river, gear was stowed in place, and we began the 10-mile paddle to the take-out below Locher Landing, ten miles before the Maury empties into the James.

The Maury River, originally named the North River, was renamed in 1873 in honor of Commander Matthew Fontaine Maury, a famous oceanographer who headed the hydrographic office of the U.S. Navy. The river is typically 60'-80' wide with a gradient of eleven feet per mile; making the total elevation drop 110 feet for the day.

The scenery was good with fall in its splendor and little evidence of development within sight of the river, after several miles downstream of Buena Vista. A bit of History was evident also, with as we spotted the remains of a number of old dams indicating that at one time the river was navigable by trade vessels.

The old dam sites provided some of the best rapids of the day; Keys Mill Dam being the first good rapid. The two small shoals before it were shallow, making the maneuvering rather difficult but providing little thrill other than suspense. The short scenic flat stretches of water gave everyone time to enjoy the solitude or joke about other's runs in the rapid before.

Early in the day it was apparent some had just been introduced to the sport of whitewater canoeing, while quite a few teams seemed right at home. Those that were stuck on rocks periodically, or found themselves in eddies along the shore, sometimes had the advantage. They were able to follow canoes that passed them, capitalizing upon their mistakes, and finding clearer channels; leapfrogging down the river.

We stopped at the remains of Goose Neck Dam to eat the bag lunches and discuss our strategy of running the rapid. The rapid required complex maneuvering between and around rocks, though the current was moderate. It was a good class II rapid and proved to be the most exciting and entertaining one of the day. Two canoes flipped there and one team broached on a rock for several minutes until three or four of the group helped right the canoe.

Much ribbing was directed towards two teams below this rapid but most crews had their moment in the spotlight or out of the canoe sometime during the day. There were at least six fairly good rapids between the lunch stop and the take-out and considerably longer stretches of flat water.

The threatening rain caught up with us about two miles before the end but thankfully it wasn't a downpour. There was talk of being cold and having sore muscles at the end but reflecting on the day as we rode back, it was very successful. For those who have never experienced the thrill of whitewater and the tranquility of floating down a secluded stretch of river, it is well worth looking into.

Backpacking Trip

By TOM STANLEY

Early Saturday morning, October 4, 28 eager and enthusiastic students departed for a five-day backpacking trip in the George Washington National Forest. The hike, a requirement of all Advanced Camping students was led by instructor Peter Cunningham and Sergeant-First-Class Tim Jordan. All of the students were enrolled in the class and half of them were also ROTC students.

Saturday afternoon at 2:00 the bus transporting the students arrived at the Downriver Canoe Company in Front Royal, Va. Shortly thereafter the Group began the first part of the five day excursion. Day one found the group about 3½ miles in the wilderness before setting camp. From all reports the first meal was quite a fiasco, as many of the students had little backpacking experience and nightfall came quickly.

Awakening to rain in the middle of the first night set a precedent that was not to be broken for the duration of the trip. Hiking in wet boots was a chore the next day for those who hadn't brought their boots in the night before. The second day was the most strenuous part of the hike as the group climbed 1900 feet uphill over a distance of five miles.

Camp was set near a mountain spring that night and the following night. The third day was highlighted by side excursions by some members of the group while others just relaxed and tended their sore feet. Several adventurous members of the group hiked five miles round-trip to the nearby towns of Dietrick, Ft. Valley, and Seven Fountains in search of libation. Names were omitted to protect the guilty.

The fourth day increased the wear and tear on feet as the group began the return for their rendezvous with civilization. Civilization found them a day early though, as they were camped that evening on posted land, and consequently asked to leave by the landowner.

Overall the trip was a huge success for those in attendance. The fall colors were starting to emerge and the experience gained from days and nights with nature will not be soon forgotten; nor will the wet tents, the lack of facilities, the sore feet, the puny fish, or the map-reading ability of David Sawyer and Bob Meeks.

Dr. Millar Publishes Book

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Dr. Gilbert John Millar, of the Longwood College history faculty, is the author of an in-depth study on the use of foreign soldiers in the English armies of the 16th century.

His book, entitled Tudor Mercenaries and Auxiliaries, was published in mid-August by the University Press of Virginia.

The major thesis of the book, according to the author, is that "foreign conscripts formed the only professional and therefore the most viable element in early Tudor armies." The study focuses on the armies of the English kings Henry VII and VIII, with special emphasis on Henry VIII's last war with France in 1544-46.

The foreign troops in the Tudor armies came from all the nations of Western Europe and even beyond. The majority of them were Germans and Spaniards, but there were also Danes, Dutchmen, Italians, Albanians, and others.

Some of the alien troops were auxiliaries, provided at no cost by allies of England. Others were mercenaries, soldiers of fortune with no national allegiance who sold their martial talents for the highest price.

These troops were paid directly from the king's treasury. It was not unusual for a war to bankrupt the king, since he often had to borrow heavily from foreign bankers.

The law in England at that time made every able-bodied man between the ages of 16 and 60 eligible for military service. These native soldiers were amateurs, called from their farms and shops in times of crisis. The mercenaries were skilled soldiers who were paid at a higher rate because of their special talents.

Dr. Millar's book is the first comprehensive study of the role of alien troops in Tudor military history. He has been researching this subject for over 10 years, including two years he spent in England conducting original research in the major historical archives there.

He has written several articles on this same subject which have been published in History Today (a British journal), Military Affairs, and the Journal of the Society for Army Historical Research.

A native of Kilwinning, Ayrshire, Scotland, Dr. Millar emigrated with his family to the U.S. in 1952. He was naturalized in New Orleans in 1960 and the following year received the B.A. degree from Southeastern Louisiana College.

He has since received the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Louisiana State University. He taught for two years at Arkansas State University and has been a member of Longwood's history faculty since 1970.

Musical Evening Planned

Piano students of Dr. Robert E. Blasch, professor of music, Longwood College, will present "An Evening with Robert Schumann and the David's League" at 8 p.m., Wednesday, November 5, in the Molnar Recital Hall (Wygall Building). This work consists of eighteen character pieces written in 1837 when the composer was beginning his work as a music critic. His literary works explain the nature of the imaginary David's Leaguers who combated Philistines in music; pertinent excerpts will be narrated during the program.

The pianists performing this composition are: Betsy Duncan of Farmville, Jane Elder of Fredericksburg, Michael Gould of Jamaica Plain, Massachusetts, Karen Hoffman of Waynesboro, Kristin Holberg of Surry, Michael Lawson of White Marsh, Sidney Long of South Hill, Dale Roller of Weyers Cave, Melanie Wallack of Disputanta, Sandy Walls of Richmond, and Gary Wyatt of Richlands.

The Year Is 1929...Farmville, Virginia

A beautiful Spring day. The laughing bobbed-haired ladies are covered by the thick shade trees on the Rotunda lawn. As they stroll along, the full white dresses rustle in the breeze as the girls pass White House Hall and meander downtown to Gray's Drug Store or Baldwins. The wind ruffles the chatter of home, boys, dances, or a good-looking professor.

Like the song says — Those were the days. Those were the days that the latest development in the field of commercial aviation was a coast-to-coast trip in forty-eight hours, partly by air and partly by rail. Those were the days when the word "Russia" was banned in all administrative organs of the USSR and replaced by "Soviet." Those were the days of Herbert Hoover's reign as president of the United States. Those were the days when the newest spring frocks at Baldwins were $4.85. Those were the days when Gloria Swanson, Greta Garbo and Lionel Barrymore movies could be seen at the Eaco Theatre on Main Street for 25 cents.

Womanhood in itself is a glorious heritage, but especially so when it has such a background as do the women of today. In 1839, the state of Virginia donated money to begin the "Farmville Female Seminary" with Henry Ruffner as president. Many girls of Virginian families embarked upon a career in the coveted position of "schoolmarm." The very ultra-modern, home-guarded girl dressed in crinolines ventured forth in 1884 — properly chaperoned by Mother — to study at the "State Female Normal School." In those early days of our school, the students had the charming Miss Mary White Cox to direct their feet in the paths of demeanor, along with John Cunningham as president. By 1914, the former name of the school became somewhat ridiculous; therefore the name was changed to "State Normal School for Women." During this epoch of the school's history, the starched white shirtwaist and ankle-length skirts became the mode. Bicycles were the "last word" in popular riding. The war brought on changes, chaos, and new ideas and adventures. Dr. Robert Frazer was president of the school at this time. In 1924, our school became a college and was renamed "State Teachers College" at Farmville. The modern girl with Jazz skirts and bobbed hair took charge. Joan of Arc became the ideal of every true STC girl. Dr. Joseph Jarman was a model college president; Miss Mary continued as the very lovely and sweet matron who lived with and looked after her girls. At last, State Teachers College became a college of traditions, love, honor, and friendships. The name may have changed, but these qualities have endured for fifty years here in Farmville.

There were seventy-seven girls in Mrs. Vivian Young Barr's graduation class of 1929. Mrs. Barr, of Richmond, said that 50 years ago, the students and teachers at STC were, in effect, one big happy family. After the deaths of many of the most loved faculty, the administration named a new building of the rapidly expanding college in their honour. Miss Mary White Cox, a graduate of the class of 1898, returned to STC in the position of Head of Home. Miss Mary was a matron who looked after the girls in their dormitories in the Main Building, the new Senior Dorm across from the Training School, and the Annex behind the Colonnade. Many grads of STC came back to teach at their alma mater, spending the rest of their lives here. Such is the case of Miss Virginia Bedford, instructor of Fine and Applied Arts. Miss Virginia came to teach at STC in 1828 and stayed almost 50 years until 1975. Miss Olive Iler and

Richmond, has placed the portraits of Thomas Jefferson, Horace Mann, J.L.M. Curry and Dr. W.H. Ruffner, first president of the college. Between each of these portraits is a symbolic picture in rich colors, representing the four purposes of the institution: Study, Meditation, Recreation and Rest. In this picture we have the very heart of the school, which gathers her daughters about her, shares with them her knowledge, inspires them with her spirit and sends them forth to train growing minds and growing ideals. Farmville, the oldest of all Government, YWCA, student publications (Rotunda and Virginian), and the Post Office. Across the entire front of the building ran the Lounge; a tastefully furnished room containing a large open fireplace.

In the late 1920's, the college bought "Longwood," the former estate of famed Confederate leader Joseph E. Johnston. The estate, which contained a sixteen room mansion and ninety acres of land, was originally bought as a recreation center for Farmville's students and was remodeled to suit their most fastidious whims. The estate served as a playground; students held picnics as well as YWCA conferences, the Circus (later "Oktoberfest"), May Day exercises, Thanksgiving games, and other holiday excursions. The cabin behind the home was also used as a retreat, just as it is now, 50 years later.

Not so many aspects of the college have changed in 50 years. The same chairs that were used in the library are still used in the reserve book room, the same tables are still used in the Dining Hall, and some of the same outdoor benches are still placed around campus. There is still a small minority which keeps up with daily classes faithfully and walk leisurely around with a smile of satisfaction over what seems to be a secret joke. There is still a majority that slink into classes with an air of upcoming tragedy, take notes with panting pencils on groaning paper, wildly working to pass, or catch a train, or just to be finished.

The majors offered at STC were Biology, Chemistry and Physics, English, History and Social Science, Home Economics, Latin, Mathematics, Modern Languages, Music and Education. Minors could be selected from the same group as well as from Geography, Physical or Health Education. The Education curriculum was the most important. Course I prepared for teaching Kindergarten and grades 1-3; Course II prepared teachers for grades 4-8 and Course III prepared students to teach high school. Each education major gained practical experience in her field by teaching the youngsters several days a week at the Training School on campus.

Classes were similar to those taught at Longwood today, yet some were totally girls' schoolish. STC taught Art Appreciation, but also offered Poster Making; the Home Ec department offered classes such as Anatomy, Corrective Gymnasium, Tumbling, Clog Dancing and Personal Applied Hygiene (a class no STC girl could do without). No one seemed to protest the rule of attending classes on Saturday, or the fact that there was only five minutes between class bells, but in the March 17, 1926 Rotunda, an article entitled "Are Exams Essential?" was published. Even as early as 1926, college students were finding fault with the rules of the institution — boy... if they could see us now!

Fifty years ago, dorm regulations were quite different than they are now. On each door was placed an official 1929 "busy" sign. Lights out at 10:00 p.m. Mrs. Barr, in her southern drawl said, "After the social after dinner, we went to our rooms and studied from seven to ten and at 10:00, all lights were out — exams till eleven o'clock. If you were caught with your lights on, a monitor would come down the hall and knock on your door and say 'lights out!' and if you didn't turn them out, she'd come back after you!"

The Home Department under the supervision of Miss Mary White Cox was responsible for keeping in close contact with the daily life of the students and to provide suitable chaperonage whenever necessary. If a girl was falling noticeably off in her studies or neglecting her duties as an STC girl, the Home Department gave her a nudge in the right direction. If a young woman did not show some disposition to conform to high standards, she could hardly be considered good material for a teacher. If this was found to be true in the case of an STC girl, she could be expelled permanently from the college.

Of course, at any institution, now or half a century ago, students are required to study, but at STC there was a comradeship quite unequalled by our college since. Students were required to eat at the same dining table all year. "Every evening after dinner," Mrs. Barr reminisced, "We would go down to the large recreation room underneath the Dining Hall for a half hour until 7:00. We would sit and talk, play records, and some girls would dance." As her face acquired a faraway look, Mrs. Barr smiled and said, "We had a ball!"

The girls had candy pulls in the kitchen as well as sings every Saturday night when they sang current hits such as "Down by the Old Mill Stream," "I Love My Baby and 'Baby Face.'" Girls sang solos, often duets, and always enjoyed themselves in the crowded auditorium. The girls were allowed to go to movies every Saturday afternoon and evening. The Hampden-Sydney fraternity men came over to STC for occasional dances; other schools such as VPI and VMI sent orchestras and drama clubs to perform at STC. The balconies on either side of the Dining Hall were used for orchestras or private parties. Hampden-Sydney and STC had joint concerts, debating matches and dances. In October of 1929 the Minuet Club of STC entertained the Virginia Reel Club of HSC. In 1928, leap year was celebrated by the girls being driven to HSC by chauffeurs to meet their dates and attend a basketball game. We may think this a sheltered existence, but to the girls, the night was a real treat.

Even as long as fifty years ago, STC girls were aware of the snotty Hampden-Sydney attitude. These jokes appeared in a 1929 Rotunda:

HSC: "A penny for your thoughts."

STC: "You would be cheated. I was only thinking of you."

STC: "It takes me fifteen minutes to dress in the morning."

HSC: "It only takes me ten."

STC: "But I wash."

"All we did was go to class and prank around like girls will. In that day and time, everybody's mother packed boxes of cakes and sent cookies. Then, of course, if anybody got a box from home, you could always have a party," said Mrs. Barr of STC entertainment. "Then of course, we could go to church on a feature story by Nancy Hewins

Miss Mary Barlow taught Health and Physical Education at STC for decades. Miss Iler still comes into the Tea Room every day for lunch. Mrs. Barr said, "Everyone loved her. She taught all the girls at one time or another. She was the nicest person!"

Miss Jennie M. Tabb served as President Jarman's secretary and Registrar of the college. Miss Jennie was perhaps the favorite of many of the girls at STC. A member of the class of 1893, she was more closely entwined with the traditions of the college than the majority of the faculty. Besides publishing a volume of poetry entitled For You, Miss Jennie wrote the STC Alma Mater.

The students lived for their teachers and the teachers lived for their students. The numerous unmarried female faculty lived with the girls as chaperones. There were student-faculty sings, games, and talent shows. The students often gave faculty members parties and banquets on their birthdays, and printed happy birthday notices in the Rotunda.

Dr. Joseph Jarman, the fourth president of the college at Farmville was a distinguished looking man with a prominent nose, wide lips, straight eyebrows and slick hair parted in the middle. President from 1902-1934, Jarman set the school in a fast stride toward the college it is today. During his reign as president, he added to the college many new buildings:

East and West wings to the Rotunda building, Training School, Infirmary, Dining Hall, New Senior Dorm and Annex, Laundry, Power Plant, "Longwood," and Student Building.

The buildings that stood on the main part of campus in 1929 were covered with thick ivy, giving STC the distinguished look that is enshrined in the hearts of thousands of girls who have attended here since then. An excellent description of the college appeared in the Norfolk and Western Magazine:

The college plant consists of a group of connecting buildings; the main building occupies the central place in the frontage. This building with its Ionic Columns, its old-fashioned doorway and its graceful rotunda, is a charming example of colonial architecture. Upon entering, a beautiful reception hall greets one; above are the balconies and the dome, with its magnificent paintings. Here, the artist, the late E. Malfalconi of Richmond, the Great Teacher.

In the academic year 1927, one thousand and twenty-five girls (600 of whom were freshmen) had to be housed in the small college. Girls lived in the Main Building, White House Hall, the Student Building (third floor) and after 1928, seniors lived in new Cunningham Hall which "from top to bottom is very modern and contains every convenience a girl could wish for — even an elevator." (1928 Rotunda)

A few houses on High and Buffalo Streets were converted into dorms with faculty ladies living in the houses as chaperones. Mrs. Barr lived in a large, white house directly across High Street from the Rotunda, in between the Episcopal and Methodist Churches. Dormitories housed only 846 students and for applicants in excess of this number, board was obtained in private houses at prices equal to the college boarding fees. Mrs. Barr sent her application too late to reserve dorm space in 1928 and was put in the house on High Street with four other girls. "The two Miss Hiners (Mary Clay Hiner, Associate Professor of English, and Miss Winnie V. Hiner, Treasurer of the college) were our housemothers. We lived in a nice big room, but with four other girls, it was kind of hard to study. If you wanted to do any serious studying, you had to either go to the library or go into the bathroom and study in the bathtub." Mrs. Barr's large, white house was torn down several years ago to make room for the bi-centennial park between the two churches.

The Training School was the main academic building at STC. The modern school facility was planned and constructed to meet the needs of a thoroughly up-to-date school (comprised of a Kindergarten, Elementary School and High School) and at the same time, to facilitate the training of teachers.

The Student Building, built in 1925 was a major accomplishment of Dr. Jarman's presidency. The completed building stood where French stands now, the original building burned in the forties. The building was the handsomest of the whole campus, standing in the east corner of the front campus. The first floor was given to the Physical Education Department and contained a very fine gymnasium. The fourth floor housed students, while the middle two floors were for the students and their activities, namely the Sorority rooms, Auditorium, rooms for the Student

A Smash Of A Splash

This year's Oktoberfest show presented by the Longwood College Catalinas was entitled "Different Strokes for Different Folks." The group is comprised of Carol Boyers, D.J. Forbes, Denise Goodie, Kim Guthrie, Susan Hall, Irish King, Beth Licari, Judy Luck, Pam Mayo, Beth Mills, Carol Monninger, Maureen Rogge, Cindi Satterwhite, Lynda Stratton, Berni Toner, Chris Fullington and Frances Vauloukis. The group is sponsored by Miss Nancy Andrews.

The show itself presented at 3 p.m. and 3:45 p.m. on Saturday, was divided into five parts. The first part was an interpretation of Vivaldi's "La Primavera." The girls started out gracefully dancing at one end of the pool and then before the audience knew it, they were continuing their graceful movements in the pool. The movements performed in the pool were done with grace, ease and flexibility.

The second part was entitled "Rompe." While George Gershwin's "American in Paris" provided the background music. This selection portrayed two of the swimmers as children at play, complete with chasing, tagging, and performing somersaults in the water. What was more intriguing was how the swimmers put there feet around each other's heads and rolled in a circle. With the lighting that was used, this particular movement was something to see.

The third part, "The Saturday Afternoon Square Dance," was put to the music of "She'll Be Coming Around the Mountain." Complete with cowboy hats and blue jeans, the swimmers reflected a downhome, country atmosphere for their square dancing. Different square dancing steps were performed in the water with such ease that one would have thought they were "down on the farm."

The next selection, "Jazz" was performed to Maner Ferguson's "Primal Scream." The swimmers performed jazz movements, quite pointed at times. They were jazz steps to thoroughly jazz music.

The finale of the show entitled, "Rocky II" was performed to the music from the oscar-winning movie "Rocky." The swimmers, complete with black eyes, portrayed, as Rocky did, those seeking a dream and a challenge. Their movements portrayed wanting to fight to win.

And that the Catalina's are, "winners." They are a great group who perform with grace and ease and then perform with fight and vigor to win. And that they did — they won the hearts of the audience for a show well done.

Lady Lancers Fall

By CINDY DROESKI

Last Tuesday Longwood's field hockey team was defeated by James Madison University 4-3. Longwood was not playing their usual fast moving hockey game. Madison dominated the game, but Longwood's tough defense held them to one goal. Halfback Kim Garber tied the game with a shot taken on a penalty corner. Longwood went into double overtime, first playing an extra 15 minutes then taking penalty flicks. Scoring on the penalty flicks was Mary Milne and Julie Dayton. Madison came back to score three goals in flicks.

Longwood was also defeated by VPI on Thursday 1-0. Goalie Teri Davis received a lot of action in the goal cage from VPI's forward line. Coach Dr. Harris feels "we missed the scoring opportunity." There were two changes on Longwood's line up, Cindy Swoop played forward line and Karen "Bird" Kilmer played halfback. The Oktoberfest game against Bridgewater was rained out. They will reschedule the game next week. Longwood is rescheduled to play University of Richmond on Wednesday.

Next week end is the state tournament hosted by UVa. "If we have everyone well, we'll be back into the running at states" says coach Harris. Longwood has had a few injured players. Longwood's schedule is a tough one for Friday they play UVa. at 11:00 a.m. and if they win they will play William and Mary at 3:00 p.m. Good luck this week and at tournaments.

Lancer Cagers In Division II

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood's men's basketball team, which moves to Division II this year after making its mark in Division III a year ago, opened practice Wednesday, and Saturday the Lancers will go public with a Blue-White scrimmage at 1:30 in Lancer Hall.

With the 1980-81 season opener slated for November 22 against Maryland Eastern Shore in Lancer Hall, Longwood will face the Scotland National Team Nov. 15 at 9:00 on the same night that Longwood's women's team plays host to national champ Old Dominion (7:00). The exhibition doubleheader will kick-off the baseball season in the college's new 3,000 seat gymnasium.

When Longwood coach Ron Bash talks about the upcoming basketball season he compares this year to the 1978-79 season when he began to lay the foundation for Lancer basketball. The third year coach says the program is basically starting all over again after a move from NCAA Division III to Division II.

"We're basically back to square one," says Bash. "It's like it was two years ago when we got things started. We're going to experience growing pains this year and they're going to hit us hardest in terms of wins and losses."

After compiling one of the nation's best records (28-3) and bowing to powerful, three-time national champ North Park 57-55 in the Division III semifinals last year, Longwood faces a much tougher road in Division II beginning with a schedule which includes only four teams the Lancers played a year ago.

Teams like Bridgewater, Emory & Henry and Shenandoah have been replaced with foes like Howard University (21-7 in Div. I), Maryland Eastern Shore and Liberty Baptist.

At least 75 per cent of the teams on this year's schedule had winning records a year ago. The Lancers will also appear in four tournaments on the road.

Bash points out that while the goals of last year's team included winning 20 games and getting a berth in the NCAA playoffs, this year's primary goal is simply to have a winning season.

While the Lancers face a challenging season, there is considerable evidence that the team will be much stronger than a year ago. In fact, Bash says this year's team would beat last year's by 20 points.

"We will have more overall team depth, specifically at the forward position, more team speed and we should be a better rebounding team," says the Longwood coach. "We will also have the potential to score more points and play more players for more minutes."

One of the chief causes of Bash's optimism is the addition of seven new players (six of whom are on scholarship). The move to Division II allows Longwood to give scholarships for the first time, and as a result, the Lancers have been strengthened by an infusion of new talent.

Freshmen Jerome Kersey (6-6) and Mitch Walker (6-2½), junior college transfers Albert Jay (6-7), Anthony Ellison (6-5), Wilbert Hall (6-4) and Mike McCroey (6-1) plus transfer Adrian Lee (6-6) will join with seven returning lettermen to form the 1980-81 team.

Big things are expected from returning starters Joe Remar (12.4 ppg., 138 assists) and Ron Orr (8.6 ppg., 5 rpg.). Both Remar, a 6-guard, and Orr, a 6-6 center, are sophomores from Elizabeth, New Jersey. Also back from last year are 6-6 center Mike Wills, a part-time starter last season, guards Jim Sixsmith (5-10), Darrell Jenkins (6-3) and Orlando Turner (6-3) plus key reserve forward Thomas Alston (6-5), a senior who has been with the team two years.

Graduation claimed standout guard Shack Leonard while returning starters Ken Ford, a third team All-American who averaged 16 points, and Randy Johnson, last year's top rebounder, are academically ineligible first semester. Ford hopes to rejoin the team in late December.

Bash feels Longwood could be much improved over last year, but because of the schedule, the record may not show it. In starting over again in Division II the coach feels that the addition of scholarships, the winning tradition of last season and the move into new 3,000 seat Lancer Hall will serve as building blocks for the future. How much success the Lancers have in the upcoming season depends on several factors.

"We've got basically a new product," said Bash. "I believe that, with our beefed up schedule, 10 to 15 games could be decided by three points or less. If we win our share of the close games we could have another good season."

Dedication of Lancer Hall was held in Lancer Gym on Saturday, October 25, 1980. The atmosphere was one of gay festivity as the Longwood College Concert Band played German folk songs in the tradition of Oktoberfest. Chairs were placed in the middle of the gym with space for only a small walkway.

The ceremonies started with the Color Guard's entrance and march up to the front of the platform. There they did an about face and received present arms from their commanding officer. The band struck up the National Anthem as the crowd stood at attention. Miss Tammy Bird, Student Government President, led the assembly in the Pledge to the Flag. The Color Guards received order arms and placed the flags in posts at the foot of the speaker's stand.

Invocation was led by Reverend William E. Hungate, after which the Color Guards walked off. Dr. Carolyn Wells, Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of the College, thanked the crowd for their presence and invited them to enjoy themselves and take a leisurely tour of the facilities at Longwood.

After this warm welcome, Karl E. Doerre, Project Manager of Romeo Guest Associates, Inc., was formally introduced. He thanked the project designers, sub-contractors, outside supervisors and the thousands of others who made Lancer Hall a reality. He then presented the keys and specifications of the building to Kenneth G. MacLroy, Head Architect of MacLroy & Parris Architects. MacLroy graciously received the keys and commented on the length of time and work put into such a project. MacLroy then turned the keys over to Mr. Eric L. Robinson, Rector of the Board of Visitors, symbolically giving him the building.

Robinson thanked the builders and architects of the project saying, "You have built us a top level comprehensive, educational facility." He also thanked Senator Howard Anderson and Delegate Claude Anderson for their aid from the State Legislature. He commented on the many benefits of the "noble" structure, especially in the field of therapeutic recreation. Finally he thanked Dr. Henry I. Willett, President of Longwood College, for his "perseverance and determination" to get the hall built. Dr. Willett was then asked to come forward, and Mr. Robinson presented the keys and specifications to him. Dr. Willett received them and introduced the notable guests to the audience. He asked each guest to stand and be recognized. It was truly rewarding to see the number of dignitaries there. Those introduced were: Senator

Howard Anderson; Delegate Claude Anderson; Mr. and Mrs. David Crute, Mayor of Farmville; Mr. Stephen Cole, Romeo Guest Associates, Inc.; Harold Lakey, Ms. Jeanne Bentley, Ms. Frances Mays, State Board of Education; Calvin Bass, former member of the Board of Visitors; Dr. Duvahl Ridgway Hull, former Rector of the Board of Visitors; and Mrs. Hull; James Moyer, President of Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation; and the current members of the Board of Visitors: Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, Mrs. Anfin, Mrs. Davidson, Miss Kampfmuehler, Mrs. Overstreet, Mr. Page, Mrs. Pretlow, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Rust, Mr. Smyth. Dr. Willett said, "Ladies and Gentlemen, we owe all these people a vote of thanks." Dr.

Willett then asked Geist members to stand and be recognized.

Tammy Bird, President of Student Government Association, presented Dr. Willett with a Virginia State Flag. Mrs. Mason, head of the Daughters of the American Revolution, presented him with a United States flag. Dr. Willett then began another introduction with reference to the 1977 Bond Referendum which insured that Lancer Hall would be the recipient of part of the bonds. He closed the introduction saying that the man who pushed this bond through saved Lancer Hall. The Honorable Mills E. Godwin, Jr., Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia 1966-70, 1974-78, was this man. Former Governor Godwin began by once again thanking Senator Howard Anderson and delegate Claude Anderson. He said that with proper education facilities as these, we can expect young people to continue the hurdles of modern society. Jokingly, he said that a building like this will "make me want to go back to college." He remembered when Longwood was a "normal" college (not coed) and how it had expanded into a fine Liberal Arts School with the teachers and facilities to compliment Hampden-Sydney. He referred to knowledge as the great equalizer of our time and that education creates an atmosphere of mutual respect. When thinking back on his motives for working so hard for the building, he said that he had no choice really, except to provide for good education and education facilities for "to provide for education is to provide for the state."

The Reverend William E. Hungate gave the final benediction. He thanked God for Lancer Hall saying that it will provide "strength for your bodies, and body is but a temple for the spirit."

Lady Lancers To Face ODU

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood's women's basketball team, which returns most of its top players from last year's 11-19 season, will face national champ Old Dominion and 6-8 center Ann Donovan in a pre-season exhibition November 15 at 7:00 as a kickoff for the college's new 3,000 seat gymnasium and athletic complex Lancer Hall. The Longwood men will play the Scotland National team in the second contest at 9:00 Nov. 15.

Beginning her fifth season as coach of the Lady Lancers, Carolyn Hodges will take her 1980-81 edition to George Mason for the first regular season contest Nov. 18.

Last season Longwood women's basketball was centered around one very fine player, 5-10 forward Maryjane Smith. Smith, who averaged 17 points and eight rebounds per contest while earning All-State and honorable mention All-American honors, has graduated and her absence this season leaves a big void, particularly on offense.

"We will certainly miss Maryjane. She did so many things for us last season," said Hodges. "We feel, however, that we should have more double figure scoring from more individuals this year."

Hodges has five players returning with at least some starting experience and several newcomers who will add speed. Second leading scorer Brenda Fettrow, a 5-9 guard who averaged 11.2 points and 5.7 rebounds while handing off 100 assists, is back for her senior season.

Other returnees with starting experience include: 5-10 senior forward Linda Pullen, co-captain along with Fettrow a year ago, 5-10 sophomore forward Cindy Eckel, 5-1 point guard Connie Murray, a junior, and 5-10 post player Robin Hungate, a junior.

Pullen, who has missed most of preseason drills because of student teaching, was a steady performer last season scoring five points per contest. Hodges feels that Eckel is ready to score in double digits this season after averaging six points in 1979-80.

Murray missed part of last season with a knee injury but sparked the team with her quickness and hustle when she was healthy. She's ready to go now. A starter toward the end of last season, Hungate gave Longwood its most consistent play at center.

Other returnees with a shot at breaking into the starting lineup are sophomores Robyn Goff and Patty Lia. Injured for most of last season (she played in 10 games), Goff is a cool performer at guard. Lia had some big games off the bench last season and the 5-9 forward can score a lot of points in a hurry when she gets in the groove.

Two newcomers who could play key roles in the coming season are Longwood's only recruit, Paige Moody, a native of Virginia Beach and Joanne McAllister, a transfer. At 5-8, Moody possesses size and scoring ability, but may need time to adjust to the college game. The 5-1 McAllister, who came to Longwood from Salem (WV) College, is a junior with great quickness.

Adding depth are veteran forward Theresa Ferrante (5-10), centers Sue Naughton (5-10) and Karen Savarese (6-0) and first year players Beth Roakes (5-9) and Desiree McNeice (5-9), both forwards.

Longwood finished fourth in last year's VAAW Division II Tournament after going 3-4 during the regular season. This year the Lady Lancers will play each of seven league foes twice. Virginia Commonwealth, William and Mary, Richmond, Radford, Hampton Institute, Liberty Baptist and George Mason are other conference members.

Hodges predicts another close race for the conference crown with perhaps Radford and VCU having an edge. Longwood's main goal is to have a winning season, something the Lady Lancers have been unable to accomplish the past two seasons.

"This team has a very positive attitude," said Hodges. "They are a hardworking group. I can already see improvement since we began practice."

One of Longwood's main problems may be a lack of height. With the 5-10 Hungate as probable starting center, the Lady Lancers will be out-sized by most opponents. Hodges hopes to make up for the size differential with more emphasis on an up-tempo type game.

"We're still short on height, so we'll have to work extra hard on rebounding," said the coach. "On offense we'll have to depend on our outside shooting and hope to get some easy buckets off the break."

Hodges hopes her team will be able to play more of a transition game this season to take advantage of its speed and quickness. If the good shot doesn't materialize off the break, the Lady Lancers will likely slow things down and work for the high percentage attempt.

Sundays." Attendance to church services was not compulsory; although a careful record of attendance was kept by the Home Department. The college endeavored to maintain a high moral and Christian standard. Students attended chapel every morning as well as Vespers every Sunday night. During these services was a reading of the scriptures, a hymn and prayer. The ministers of the several denominations of the town took part in conducting these services.

The girls, only allowed to go home for any length of time at Christmas and Easter, joined numerous clubs to occupy time inbetween studying and classes.

The more prominent organizations on campus were the Cotillion Club, the YWCA, the Monogram Club, the Granddaughters Club, and last but not least, Chi. The Cotillion Club was the large social organization on campus—in effect, the partners. The YWCA or Young Womens Christian Association provided the school with Christian leadership and example. Mrs. Barr was a member of both organizations, as was the majority of girls at STC. The Monogram Club was designed to promote good sportsmanship and all-round athletics at the college. To earn an STC monogram (which looked suspiciously like a Superman Emblem), a student was required to walk the balance beam, make 4 out of 6 basketball shots, run a potatoe race, throw a basketball 45 feet, make 6 out of 8 good tennis serves, hit a baseball 4 consecutive times, jump 3 feet 6 inches, hike 10 miles and exhibit 100 per cent good sportsmanship.

Seven social sororities originated at STC: Kappa Delta—founded 1897, Mu Omega—founded 1898, Sigma Sigma Sigma, founded 1898, Alpha Sigma Alpha founded 1901, Gamma Theta—founded 1911, Zeta Tau—founded 1920 and Pi Kappa Sigma—founded 1928.

Tri Sig and ASA are still active at Farmville after 80 years. Kappa Delta merged with Gamma Theta in the 1920s and is known as KD nationally. Mu Omega was founded by Mrs. Ruby Leigh Orgain, an 1899 graduate of Farmville Normal School. Mrs. Orgain is 99 years old and living happily in a nursing home in Richmond. According to Mrs. Orgain, in 1898 the six girls who formed the sorority were known for years as "???" Eventually, Mu Omega transformed into ZTA and is still active at Longwood. Pi Kappa Sigma and Zeta Tau eventually dropped out of existence.

The sororities at STC 50 years ago were not as party oriented as they are today. Of course, the sororities entertained at sponsor's homes with teas, banquets, and often held get-togethers in the Tea Room or Student Building Lounge. Each of the 7 sororities had an individual room for administration in the Student Building.

Naturally, some of these rules seem a little corny to us in 1979, but look at it this way—they can't be any sillier than some rules that the sororities have now.

In addition to the 7 social sororities, numerous honor societies were set up at STC. These societies were to help the members give a concrete expression of high ideals in scholarship, leadership, forensics, and aid in the development of the well-rounded student.

Farmville and the college were mutually interdependent; each valued and rejoiced in the success of the other. Economically Farmville benefitted by the college because thousands of dollars were spent in local stores by the students, and the faculty contributed to the social, economic and religious activities of the town. Mrs. Barr's recollection of Farmville 50 years ago were somewhat astonishing:

Surprisingly enough, Farmville did have a shopping district in 1929. The girls were only allowed to go between 3 and 5 o'clock on week day afternoons, but never on Saturdays because that was when the colored people and the farmers went to trade. The issue of race had not come to the forefront yet in that day and time.

Nonetheless, Mrs. Barr's recollections told of a beautiful and peaceful little town, the perfect place for a college such as STC.

There's atmosphere, culture and a quiet there that, I don't know, you feel an adventure when you're there. I always felt perfectly content in Farmville.

As the townspeople view Farmville now, we would never see the town as being a place where ladies were in the height of fashion.

On Friday night a bobbed-haired beauty with a fair, smooth face and silvery speech named Alma, Penelope, Imogene, Maude, Sadie, Fannie or Beatrice waited for the housemother to announce that her date was waiting for her in the Rotunda and be sure to be in by 10:00. Alma, Penelope, Imogene, Maude, Sadie, Fannie or Beatrice then had to embarrassingly push noseys friends away from the second floor balcony where they had been giggling and day-dreaming over what they would do if they had dates with handsome VMI men, too.

Seemingly, half a century ago, girls were sent to school to become ladies as well as educators. The Rotundas were continuously littered with editorials and hints of advice to keep the ladies of STC—ladies.

In fact, when a young lady portrayed unladylike behavior as to be unfitting for an STC girl, she was campused. Now where have we heard that before? Yet, over Miss Virginia Bedford's picture in the 1932 yearbook, someone wrote "I HATE HER!—Maybe these demure young ladies weren't quite so demure after all!

Such is the heritage of Virginia's women. In 1979, so many aspects of the college have changed. For instance, the porch at the back entrance of the Rotunda is there no longer; the presence of males has abolished the demure girl's school attitude, and we can go downtown any time of the day or night. Yet so many aspects haven't changed. Martin the Jeweler is still on Main Street and the Wyanoke Hotel is still busy accommodating boyfriends as well as girlfriends for our male population; the purpose of this institution is still to give the highest professional skill possible in the training of Virginia's future citizens, and the campus is still small enough that you can walk from one end of the campus to another in the time it takes to smoke one cigarette (although Miss Mary or Miss Jennie may not approve). Just the same, decades may pass, but humanity remains very much the same. State Teachers College at Farmville indicates to her state that the true Virginian is earnest, pious, gentle and heroic, that a citizen must endure life with an influence mightier than force—one of love.

New Proposal For SGA

By CHRISTI LEWIS
Wednesday evening, November 5, at 7 p.m., Legislative Board will be holding an Open Forum to discuss the new proposal for Longwood's Student Government Association. For almost a year, members of the executive council of the Student Government Association, various students, and administration have been working together to reconstruct the existing system. Hoping to unify the various organizations included in the entire Student Government Association, they have come up with a new proposal.

One of the most significant changes is the establishment of a Student Senate. The Senate will be composed of the 10 executive council members, 13 residence hall representatives, 12 class representatives, two day students, and one graduate student. They will meet once a month or when special meetings are called by the president.

There will be five major committees under the Student Senate: Legislative Review, Campus Life, Residence Hall Life, and Student Union.

Another major change involves the Residence Hall Councils. Residence Hall Councils and Judicial Board will handle all judicial procedures while the new committee, Residence Hall Life, will coordinate Residence Hall Councils and help with problems in the residence halls.

All Residence Hall Presidents (one elected from each residence hall, two from Curry and Frazer) will serve on the Residence Hall Life committee.

As explained in a handout on the new proposal Judicial Board will be set up as follows:

The Judicial Board consists of a chairman, vice-chairman and secretary, and a pool of 16 members from the senate who generally take turns as coordinated by the vice-chairman. This pool of 16 is comprised of the 12 class representatives, the SGA treasurer, SGA recording secretary, chairman of Campus Life, and the chairman of Residence Hall Life Committee.

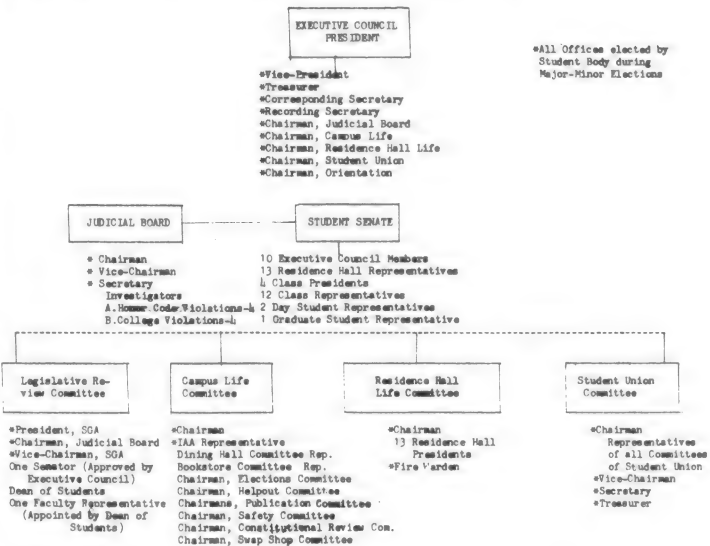

The investigators for Judicial Board shall consist of two seniors, two juniors, two sophomores, and two freshmen. The committee for Honor Code violations consists of four of the above, one selected from each class and likewise for the College Violations Committee in addition to three administrative staff members as selected by the President of the College.

Under College Violations, the Judicial Board will be responsible for vandalism, physical abuse, threats, descriptive conduct, interference with judicial procedure, repeated and/or serious violations of college regulations, and tampering with fire equipment.

Under Honor Code Violations, the Judicial Board will be responsible for lying, cheating, plagiarism, and stealing.

Judicial Board procedures would be the same as outlined in the Handbook For Students on pages 21, 22 with one addition

Sign-In/Sign-Out Proposal Vetoed

By JODI KERSEY

The Residence Board submitted a proposal to the Administrative Council asking that they abolish the sign-in-sign-out procedure. The proposal does not suggest abolishing the existing visitation hours, just the procedure of signing in at the dorm desk. Linda Wheeler, chairman of Residence Board, said that the board feels that signing the honor code is all that should be necessary. Anything beyond that, such as the sign-in-sign-out policy, is an invasion of privacy.

The proposal was turned down by the administrative council. There were no specific reasons given as yet to why the council refused the proposal. The Residence Board intends to re-submit the proposal with the inclusion of one more suggestion. The new addition says that guests must be escorted in and out by the main entrance of the dorm. The rest of the proposal is as follows:

We, as members of the Student Government Association of Longwood College, propose the following alternative plan to the present sign-in-sign-out procedure now in effect in the residence halls:

A. That the sign-in-sign-out procedure be eliminated

B. That the sign-in-sign-out procedure be replaced by the following:

1. Guests visiting students who reside in the residence halls use the present paging system.

2. That guests must be escorted by a member of the opposite gender and present student of Longwood College to and from the room of their host or hostess while on a floor of the opposite gender, or at any time while on the hallway or any public area on that floor (exclusive of first floor public areas).

3. That the stated proposal be considered the limit and is subject to ratification in each Student Parking: A Problem

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Student parking in unauthorized parking areas is fast becoming a campus-wide problem. "It is a horrendous problem in the new parking lot (Lancer Hall)," according to Campus Police Chief Smith.

The new lot has spaces clearly marked. There are 57 spaces for students, five handicapped spaces and four visitors spaces, in addition to faculty spaces.

There is also a parking problem with student cars behind the Cunningham Residence Halls and Jarman Auditorium. These spaces are reserved from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Students are allowed to park there after 5 p.m. and on the week ends.

Chief Smith referred to page 13 of the Student's Handbook. Students are authorized to park in the following lots: Lankford, Iler, designated portions of Campus School lots, designated portion of Bedford lot, Ely Street, Venable Street and Race Street.

"We have ticketed over 1,000 students cars this year," stated Chief Smith. "This is a tremendous increase over last year." Section D.b of the handbook states that registration decals will be taken away after four tickets in any given semester. Section D.c says that anyone who has three unpaid tickets will not be able to register for classes and transcripts will be withheld. Chief Smith added that the student's records would be flagged and no grades will be given.

Because of the persisting problem, all cars parked in towing zones will be towed at the owner's expense as of November 5 at 8 a.m. Students will not be notified, as was the policy before. Cars parked in fire zones and handicapped spaces will be towed immediately. Signs have been erected on all towing areas.

Notices of the towing policy have been printed in Daily Bulletin last week by Dr. Leo Salters, Dean of students and Vice President of Student Affairs.

Chief Smith stresses that "if a student comes in late at night and feels that it is unsafe to walk a long distance, please contact Campus Police to pick her up and take her to the dorm." he adds that he had rather a student do that than to park in a towing zone.

Parking remains a problem on Longwood's Campus. Towing will be enforced by Campus Police.

Questions Answered

The following are the answers to the Press Conference questions Thursday, October 30. The questions are submitted by Legislative Board to President Henry I. Willett, Jr.

1.) Could you give us a specific history on circumstances banning kegs of beer from Residence Halls. Is something wrong with having kegs of beer in Residence Halls?

Damage is one major reason for not having kegs in the Residence Halls. Other considerations are the size of groups and fire codes. It was suggested that Residence Board should work on this with Dr. Leo Salters, Dean of Students.

2.) What are the policies of campus police? Should we revise them? Do they need to be publicized?

There will be a future article in The Rotunda.

3.) Why are Physical Education classes only one credit courses when they involve so much time and effort?

It was reported that some schools do not give any credits. In the P.E. class, the outside work is not as excessive as others.

4.) Why can't the Snack Bar be used in conjunction with the Dining Hall (paid for by tuition)? This question was referred to Gordon Inge.

5.) Can other rooms on campus be designated or used as party areas?

Residence Board will be consulting with Dr. Salters on this.

6.) Will the new gym accommodate concerts?—Yes.

Press Conferences are held several times each semester. Questions may be submitted to Legislative Board to be answered.

Dance Company Concert This Week

By MELODY CRAWLEY

"Dance Company is growing up. We are developing into a very strong company and this semester's performance is an example of our maturity. The dancers are stronger technically allowing us to perform choreographic works of a much higher sophistication than has been seen in the past." A quote from one of the members of the company sums up the growth of the dance company that will be displayed at this year's Fall Concert, November 6, 7, and 8 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

The concert will consist of performances choreographed by the members.

"Dance Company is expanding. New members and our large new studio have pushed choreographers to expand their comps and develop new ideas. The comps are well developed and visually beautiful. Thanks to Dr. Bowman and the members' dedication, Dance Company is growing stronger and stronger," says Eileen Mathes. Eileen has choreographed a number entitled "Inventions."

Other numbers will be "Work in Progress" choreographed by Grace Ann Rodgers, "Wings of Dreams" by Lorie Blackard, "Profiles" by Jennifer Selby, "Boundaries" by Jan Jennings, "Anxious Imagery" by Tracey Hormuth, "Games" by Beth Cardin, "Dance" by Cyndi Fitzgerald, and "Celebration" by Adrienne Heard.

Elizabeth Cardin feels this way about the company, "Dance Company is unique because each semester new members of all types of dance backgrounds join us and every concert, especially this one, turns out with the most wonderful and fascinating blends of dance."

Semester's Schedule Revised

By MELODY CRAWLEY

The Office of the Vice President for Academic Affairs has announced a change in the academic calendar for next semester.

The previous calendar had classes beginning Wednesday, January 14, 1981 and ending Thursday, April 30, 1981. With the change, classes will begin Tuesday, January 13, 1981 at 8 a.m. and end Wednesday, April 29, 1981. Examinations will now end on Friday instead of Saturday.

According to Dean Carolyn Wells, "This seems to be a better pattern for second semester than the one published in the front of the 1980-81 Longwood College Catalog. Specifically, it is desirable to pick up one more day to prepare for graduation."

April 20, 1981 has been set aside as a Reading day. With students pre-registering now, Dean Wells states that two days are not needed for registration any more. However, the Registrar's Office needs an extra day to prepare for graduation. Graduation will be Saturday, May 16, 1981.

Thomas A. Sterling To Narrate Film

By BRENDA COLEMAN
On Saturday, Nov. 8, the hard work and year long efforts of the Junior Ring Committee of the Class of 1982 will come to a close with the Junior Ring Dance. The dance, a celebration of the Juniors receiving their rings, will take place in the Lower Dining Hall from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. The band Toppz, a group specializing in beach and top 40's music, will provide the entertainment and music for the dance.

The Juniors are working on a theme with which to decorate the lower Dining hall which will aid in making Saturday night a night to remember for all. The dance will be a semi-formal affair that may be attended by anyone in the student body. Tickets will be on sale Wednesday through Friday in the New Smoker and at the door Saturday night. The price is $5 per couple with the exception of Juniors, who will only be charged $4 per couple.

The Juniors are urged to attend this dance because it is the biggest event of the Junior year and is a dance given in their honor. Everyone is invited to attend an evening of fun and dancing as well as a night that may hold special memories many years from now.

Naturalist Thomas A. Sterling will show and narrate his widely acclaimed film, "Quebec Whales and Labrador Tales," on Monday, November 10, at 8 p.m. in the Wygal Auditorium at Longwood College.

The screening is part of the Audubon Wildlife Film Series and is sponsored locally by Longwood's Student Union. The public is cordially invited to attend free of charge.

At the point where Quebec's Saguenay River flows into the St. Lawrence is perhaps the world's greatest concentration of whale species—nine of which make these waters their summer home.

Underwater, Sterling films the white undulating forms of belugas. He joins the whale watchers in boats which, with skillful handling, pull up alongside the giant finbacks and humpbacks. By helicopter he films the giants as they breach, blow and rhythmically cut through the water of the St. Lawrence and the Saguenay Gorge, a special wilderness of North America.

Sterling also takes viewers through the quiet forest near Tadoussac, which harbors moose and whitetail deer, then through small farms carpeting the valleys to the Port of Sept Isles, where iron ore from northern Quebec and Labrador is loaded aboard freighters.

The Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway takes viewers north to the vast tundra and boreal forests surrounding Schefferville. Sterling's camera focuses on the region's fascinating wildlife habitat—the bogs which are home to the phalarope and snipe, the spruce forests which shelter the black bear and courting spruce grouse, and the great windblown expanse of tundra, home of the caribou, lemming, and willow ptarmigan.

Sterling, a field naturalist by training, believes that films "are the most effective medium to bring the idea of conservation and wilderness preservation to all."

Professors Find Mutual Interest

By DEBRA CUNNINGHAM

Contrary to popular belief Longwood and Hampden-Sydney do cooperate at times. Dr. Michael Lund, a Professor of Victorian Literature at Longwood, and Dr. Mary Saunders, a Professor of Victorian Literature at Hampden-Sydney, taught a workshop at West Virginia University on Saturday, October 18, 1980, entitled "Teaching Victorian Novels to Undergraduates: A workshop." They developed methods of teaching Victorian literature after discovering that they held a mutual interest in this topic.

Long novels during the Victorian period came out as articles in the 1830-60's as magazine installments. The Victorians read the novels in bits and pieces.

This is just one incidence in which Longwood and Hampden-Sydney have found it useful to compare, research, and discuss classes as well as other subjects.

Vincent Price In "Diversions And Delights"

By SUSAN BUTLIN

You've seen him in major television shows, a number of motion pictures, heard his voice on radio flicks and concerts. He is a master of eccentric roles and his name affiliates itself with "spooky" or "horror-filled" atmospheres. He is known throughout the United States and Longwood is honored to present Vincent Price in "Diversions and Delights," November 11.

His distinguished career of over 40 ranges from stage appearances to books written, television programs to recording. Price has held White House appointments (Fine Arts Committee and Chairman of Indian Arts and Crafts Board for the Department of the Interior), to college and University Board of Trustees and Board of Directors member.

The November 11 performance is a little different from Vincent Price's usual roles. "Diversions and Delights" written by John Gay is a "one-man show" and Vincent Price will be portraying one of the most successful playwrights and most original contributor to 18th century drama, Oscar Wilde.

In order to appreciate such a performance, one needs a little background on Oscar Wilde (1865-1900). Mr. Wilde was described by critics of his time as the type of man who "affected a languishing air, wore eccentric clothes and long hair, and carried lilies and sunflowers about him." Yet he was also acclaimed as being a brilliant writer and was compared to George Bernard Shaw. However, honor and fame followed his death, and much of his work reflected a bittersweet comedy and tragedy of his life. For instance, "The Picture of Dorian Gray" is considered the most famous of his works, which supposedly represents morality, yet satire seems prevalent behind the screen. "An Ideal Husband" and "The Importance of Being Earnest" (1895) were the last things written before tragedy fell.

In 1895, Wilde was arrested and sentenced to two years imprisonment with hard labor on the conviction of sexual immorality (a homosexual accusation). At the same time, his two sons disowned him. He was exiled and after his prison term, he changed his name to Sebastian Melmoth. He drank to forget his sorrows, his spirit broken in prison, health failing, Oscar Wilde died in 1900. Before his death he performed John Gay's one-man show, "Diversions and Delights."

Vincent Price was fascinated by the prospect of portraying Oscar Wilde and he said, "Wilde is a genius that has never died. Genius is something that fascinates people because so few people have it."

Ladyhouse Blues - Next Production

By PAM UPDIKE

The current production by the Speech and Dramatic Arts Department and the Longwood Players is "Ladyhouse Blues." The five-women cast consists of: Dr. Rita Howe, a faculty member, playing the part of the mother, Liz; Robyn Reynolds, a drama major, playing the part of Helen; Gwendolyn Sublett, playing the part of Dot; Tamara Nash, playing the part of Terry; and Gracey Rice, playing the part of Eylee.

The play, written by Kevin O'Morrison, is set in 1919, in St. Louis during World War I. The title comes from a name given to apartments in St. Louis during the war. All of the men were away at war and the women were left alone to care for themselves. The particular family that the play is concerned with is a very close-knit one that has been uprooted from the land and moved to St. Louis. The play itself centers around the family breaking up and the five women of the family anxiously awaiting the return of the only son from the war.

"Ladyhouse Blues" is directed by Dr. Douglas Young. Technical Director is Richard Gamble; Stage Manager, Jeff Sledjeski; Assistant Stage Manager, Ginger Moss; Assistant Director, Sherry Forbes; Sound, Lisa Swackhammer; House, Brenda Coleman; Props, Lisa Howell and Carla Murla; Lights, Nina Leffue; Costumes, Shelley Gluse, Make-up, Sandi Stabler; Stage Crew, Rob Marenick; and Publicity, Pam Updike.

The show will open on December 3 and run through December 6 in Jarman Auditorium.

SNA Presents

Mason-Roller Line

By SUSAN BUTLIN

November 15, Saturday Night Alive presents A. Whitney Brown with special guest, Mason-Roller Line. The Mason-Roller Line contains an extra interest for the Longwood campus. Why? Because Charles Mason and Dale Roller, two seniors here at Longwood, form the band.

Both music majors and business administration minors, Dale and Charlie are headed for a supportive music career. They are an acoustic duo. Charlie sings tenor and plays an Ovation acoustic-electric six string guitar. Dale sings baritone and plays a Guild D312 twelve string guitar and Gibson custom built five string banjo. Recently the "Mason-Roller Line" joined the N E C A A (National Entertainment Campus Activities Association). This organization gathers College entertainment buyers with sellers. Dale and Charlie can now affiliate themselves with college and university campuses all over the states. As a matter of fact, Dale and Charlie have tentatively scheduled a block tour in February. The band hopes to spread its name through the Southern Colleges such as Jacksonville University, Queens College and George College.

The band came together due to the split-up of another band, "Southern Hospitality." Dale and Charlie both played with Southern Hospitality which stayed in existence approximately six years. The five members of that band started in their high school days and toured a few college campuses, among them was Longwood. Last spring, when Southern Hospitality split up, Dale and Charlie exclusively became a duo. They had been playing as a duo on the side for three years.

The Mason-Roller Line plays pop, country, blue-grass, and southern rock, ranging from past to present tunes. Each write, Amidst all the rock, jazz, country, boogie and disco entertainment, stand-up comedians still compete, and on November 15, Saturday Night Alive will present one of the funniest stand-up comedians in the college entertainment circle, A. Whitney Brown.

Brown's comedy act is something different for Longwood College. Although other solo comedy acts have performed in Jarman Auditorium, A. Whitney Brown is known to keep his audience always interested in what's going on.

Brown writes and performs his own material and uses his juggling abilities in his act. Brown's career started at the bottom of the ladder—the streets of San Francisco, but Brown commented, "Collecting a crowd is the easy part, but people only stay when they are really being entertained. That's why I like the streets, it's honest." From the streets, Brown's career soared to appearances at Los Angeles night clubs, San Francisco comedy clubs, television shows and national tours.

Brown's style of comedy is totally dead-pan. He never cracks a smile during his performances. Critics believe this is one of Brown's best techniques besides his quiet, unassuming character. Audiences, in the past, loved to tease him and try to get him to laugh. Therefore, he accomplishes what not many comedians can do well, audience involvement.

Brown's juggling ability ranges from balls to flaming torches to machetes. This combination of talent seems to be basis enough for an interesting show you don't want to miss.

The finale, especially, is the climax of the young comedian's talent. He masterfully juggles three 24" razor sharp machetes and carries on a conversation. Brown hopes some day to become "The Whitney Brown."

Admission is $2.00 and the performance will be downstairs in the lower dining hall at 9 p.m. Don't miss it. Come watch A. Whitney Brown and see for yourself why this versatile character may very well become "The Whitney Brown."

Commentary Supported

Dear Editor,
We would like to express our gratitude to Mark Segal for his beautifully written article in last week's Rotunda. Never before have we encountered a more moving and energizing commentary on life at Longwood.

Longwood has many positive characteristics in its personality. We enjoy the small town environment and the quiet setting for academics. The closeness among students and faculty will be remembered in the years to come.

In addition to academics, Longwood has the great responsibility of preparing its students for life in the real world. The knowledge that is necessary for life does not come entirely from books. People educate each other every day through relationships and communication; we learn how to deal with the real world better.

Most of us here at Longwood are at least 18 years old. Legally, we are adults, but it seems that we are being treated as children. As adults, we must make our own decisions and be responsible for our actions. The impositions we face here prevent us from doing this. We are not permitted to have friends visit us when we want. We must enter and exit certain doors at particular times.

This is especially added inconvenience when our arms are full of books and we have to walk completely around our dorm in order to get to our room and relieve the burden.

Mark Segal's view has our greatest support. We believe that a majority of our fellow students agree with us and would fully appreciate the administration's attention to our viewpoint and action as expressed in the article. Wake up, Longwood, and join reality!

Non-destruction

An Open Letter to Residents
I was sitting at my desk the other day looking at a rather substantial damage bill for vandalism on a Frazer hallway when I received coincidental invitations from Cox and North Cunningham Halls to visit and view some more hallway alterations. Not knowing quite what to expect, I was floored to find that it wasn't the usual "trash tour" that I have made so often in my short professional career. Instead, I was treated to the sight of freshly painted room and corridor walls, natural wood doors, and a host of tired, but proud, residents. Similar stops in Frazer, Main and Stubbs convinced me that I was not dreaming—that it is possible to find and support creativity on the halls. These projects will last longer and be more influential than the senseless destruction of ceilings, doors, and windows that periodically plagues us. So, to those residents who are giving time, effort, and money in order to create a new atmosphere in our halls, you have my admiration and thanks.

Keep up the good work,
Tom Nanzig
Director of Housing
P.S. To anyone interested in starting similar projects, see your Resident Supervisor or Area Coordinator for details.

Congratulations ARA

To the student body—

This past Thursday all of Longwood College were invited to ARA Slater's 25th anniversary of service to the college. Faculty, staff members and students were served (what many are saying was) one of the best meals to come from our dining hall.

Gordon Inge did an excellent job of having to supervise the entire event. Having to feed over 2000 people was a great task to undertake and I feel he did his job well.

Doris Carey did an excellent job in supervising the workers. Not once did I see a worker not doing his or her job.

The cooks, waiters and waitresses, and hosts also all did an outstanding job in preparing and serving the meal.

Congratulations on a job well done!!!

Sincerely,
Lisa Swackhammer

Senior Spotlight

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"The last 3 1/2 years of my life have been the best. Yes, the school has changed with the guys coming in and the administration is undergoing some big problems. But I've changed too. I hated high school because I wasn't involved in anything. I love it here because I've had the opportunity to work with others. I've gotten to know a lot of people that way. That has been a BIG difference for me and the BSU has played a large part in that for me."

Would anyone have guessed that this person, senior Robyn Black, had never intended to come to Longwood originally? "My high school counselor had given me a list of colleges that fit my criteria. Longwood was at the top of the list and I promptly crossed it off. Some time later I came to visit a cousin of mine who went here. I fell in love with the college; it was the only school I ended up applying to."

Robyn, a business administration major with a minor in psychology who hails from Crozet, Virginia, stresses the fact that "college life is perhaps the last time a person can become involved in such a wide variety of areas. Just the experience of meeting people is worth the effort. You have to remember that it is not what is done but the spirit which it is done with."

And Robyn has shown her spirit in a variety of clubs and activities. She is the current president of the Baptist Student Union as well as Chaplain of Phi Mu social sorority. She serves as secretary of her class for the second year in a row. She has been involved in orientation as a student assistant and orientation leader, and in Oktoberfest as the co-chairman of sets last year. Robyn is also a member of the Student Alumni Association and is presently the business manager of The Rotunda.

"I have one big criticism concerning the business department—we are in dire need of professors. I am really concerned about this because the department has grown so rapidly while the number of professors has remained the same. I'm also glad to see the reorganization of the Student Government. The school could not have continued the way it was. Sometimes the administration smooths over things which are of more concern to the students. A reorganizing of the SGA could perhaps change that."

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Editor's Turn

The next two weeks at Longwood should be very interesting. While the whole world will be watching to see whether the United States president's name will be Carter, Reagan, Anderson or J. R., Longwood will be getting ready for our favorite visitors to campus—the Longwood College Board of Visitors.

The Board of Visitors have become a very entertaining group for the small population of the campus that attends their open meetings.

The rest of the school has never met the Mrs. Davidson, Mrs. West, Mr. Andrews, Mr. Page, Mr. Robinson, Miss Kampfmuehler, Mrs. Overstreet, Mrs. Anfin, Mrs. Pretlow, Mr. Rust, or Mrs. Smyth. Mr. Rust and Mr. Smyth are the two newest board members to be appointed by Governor Dalton Drop in on this group Thursday and Friday in the Prince Edward Room and see what really goes on with the Heads of LC.

Another event to watch in the days ahead is the SGA forum. Members of the Student Government have worked on a new proposal for a new Student Government system at Longwood.

Abolish Residence Board, according to the forum ad could be one of the outcomes. Attend the forum, November 5 and see if that wouldn't be an excellent idea.

By BRENDA COLEMAN
The student body of Longwood was treated to the last Spotlight Concert of the semester to be presented by the Student Union on Monday, October 27. The concert did not feature a singer, nor a musician, nor even a dramatic poet or reader. Instead, the concert was the one-woman show "Freud Never Said It Was Easy," performed by Muriel Bach. Following in the tradition set by Hal Holbrook in "Mark Twain Tonight!" and Julie Harris in "The Belle of Amherst," Miss Bach carries on the art form of a one-person play. However, Miss Bach adds a special dimension to her show—she portrays six, as opposed to one, women, all distinctly different and individualized. In addition to acting in the show, Miss Bach also wrote and produced this show.

In her show, Miss Bach tried to recreate the happiness and struggles of the six different women she chose to portray. Their struggles centered upon Sigmund Freud's prescription for a healthy human—"lieben und arbeiten"—love, work. The audience only saw a few moments of each woman's life, but in those special few moments, their entire lives were on display.

Miss Bach kept in close contact with the audience from the very first moment she entered as author Agatha Christie until she exited as Israel's former prime minister Golda Meir. All make-up on stage before the audience with Miss Bach provided details and transition from one character to another. She explained the success and failures of each woman seeking that delicate balance between love and work, preparing the audience for the next character. This smooth transition between the scenes added greatly to Miss Bach's overall performance.

The extraordinary women chosen by Miss Bach to portray were Agatha Christie, concert pianist Clara Schumann, French writer Colette, union organizer Emma Goldman, renowned efficiency expert Lillian Gilbreth, and Golda Meir. Miss Bach used mannerisms, dialects, and costumes to make each woman come alive. The uniqueness of each portrayal conveyed the essential spirit and qualities of these women and the vision they possessed—to be fulfilled by love and work. They each succeeded, but only after experiencing both pain and joy throughout their lives.

Miss Bach's performances were of an extremely rare and wonderful quality. She slipped into each role with apparent ease and professionalism, always leaving the audience wanting more. Her exposition into the lives of six unimportant women enabled the audience to know these women intimately—as well as themselves. Longwood was indeed privileged to be exposed to the talents of Muriel Bach.

"Like Mother-Like Daughter"

By PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Linda and Lydia are good friends. They have several things in common. Both are freshmen at Longwood College and both are day students, commuting from Buckingham County.

They are also mother and daughter.

Linda Davenport lives with her husband and two daughters near Mt. Rush. She is a second semester freshman at Longwood, having transferred academic credits she earned 16 years ago at Arlington State College in Texas to Longwood. She is majoring in business administration.

Daughter Lydia graduated from Buckingham County High School last June and is now majoring in drama at Longwood. She caught the "acting bug" working in drama productions during high school, and her cherished dream is to go to New York City after college.

"I don't expect to be a movie star or act on Broadway, Lydia says. "I would just like a chance to try acting in New York."

The head of the cheering and support section of the Davenport family is husband Howard, a maintenance supervisor for Buckingham County Schools who also operates a custom cabinet business.

Last but not least is second daughter Cynthia, an 11-year-old who wants to be a doctor.

Cynthia's ambition to study medicine is one of the reasons Mrs. Davenport decided to return to college at this time. "I have been planning to go back to school for several years," she said. "I decided to do it now so that I can help pay for Cynthia's education."

A week day in the Davenport household begins at 5:30 a.m.

Howard prepares breakfast while the three students in the family dress and collect books, papers, etc. Mrs. Davenport and Lydia leave the house around 7:00 for the 45-minute-to-one-hour drive to Longwood, depending on whether or not they can pass the school buses along the way.

One of their almost-daily challenges is "finding a place to park at three minutes to eight and flying up three flights of stairs to the first class on time."

The first one to arrive home in the afternoon starts dinner preparations. Other housekeeping chores are a family affair, too. "Actually, the house just sort of sits there until everyone can pitch in and get it done," Linda said.

Both Linda and Lydia are carrying full academic course loads (17 credit hours each), and both of them have work-study jobs on the campus. Linda works 15 hours per week in the Computer Services Department, and Lydia works eight hours per week in the Employee Relations Office.

In addition to attending classes and her job, Lydia also spends about four hours a week working on drama productions as required by her stagecraft class, and three hours a week in the computer lab for her mathematics class. And, of course, there are themes and term papers, reading and other out-of-class assignments to fill all those spare minutes!

For a change of pace, Lydia helps her father sand and stain the cabinets he builds. She and her mother are often called on to insist in installing the cabinets, a job that requires several sets of hands.

Handicapp Program Developing

By TOM STANLEY

Thousands of people have one, many have several, but one thing they all have in common is the love for life. Some people are born with one, others acquire it later in life; but either way they live with it until the day they die. You might have one too, and not even realize it. They come in a wide variety of classifications and categories; but generally speaking, it is physical limitation of the lower extremity or a permanent physical disability.

If you have a permanent physical disability, whether it is noticeable or not; or if you are under doctor's orders not to engage in intercollegiate or intramural sports because of a bad knee, an operation that limits your activities, or some other similar limiting factor, you can play sports; and you can still lead an active physical life.

Mr. Frank Brasile, Assistant Professor of Therapeutic Recreation is now in the process of developing an athletic program for students who qualify. The program is being developed to offer sports to such students under certain legal provisions that require that all schools maintain equal facilities for all students. Mr. Brasile is willing to devote his personal time to the organization of this program and he needs the support of those who would qualify to play, or be interested in helping.

The variety of activities available under the program could include skiing, weightlifting, archery, swimming, flying, kayaking, basketball, boating, scuba diving, hunting, camping, golf, tennis, track and many others. The number of activities available under the program could include skiing, weightlifting, archery, swimming, flying, kayaking, basketball, boating, scuba diving, hunting, camping, golf, tennis, track and many others. The number of activities actually available would be determined by the number of participating students and the coordination of special programs with other schools.

Several students on campus are already taking advantage of Mr. Brasile's help. Bill Frazer is a member of the Richmond Rim-Riders, a competing wheelchair basketball team coached by Mr. Brasile. Debra Spencer is active in swimming competition and has been very successful, winning several medals this past summer on the regional level. Other students are needed now to expand so that Longwood can have its own teams organized for competition with other participating colleges.

If you feel that you would qualify for a program of this nature or if you would like to find out more about it, there will be a meeting for anyone interested in room 203 Lancer Hall on Monday, November 10 at 6:30 p.m. YOU don't have to be a spectator because of that knee injury or that bad ankle, now you can be one of the players.

Player Of The Week

Freshman Leslie Robertson, who compiled a 5-4 mark in singles for Longwood's women's tennis team this fall while playing the No. 2, 3, and 4 positions, has been chosen Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 24-

31. Longwood's most consistent performer, Robertson won her final three matches of the season to go from 2-4 to 5-4. She also teamed with Pam Cauley to win her last two doubles matches as Longwood lost to Sweet Briar 5-4 and defeated Christopher Newport 6-2 last week. The Lady Lancers ended up with a 3-7 record.

"Several members of my team have shown improvement, but Leslie, in particular, has done well toward the latter part of the season," said coach Phyllis Harris. "She has shown a tremendous amount of improvement."

Hockey Team Ends Season

By CINDY DROPESKI

Playing a rescheduled game, Longwood hockey team defeated University of Richmond by the score of 2-1. Longwood scored with a penalty stroke taken when a U. of R. defensive player hit the ball with her hand in the striking circle. Mary Milne, Longwood's best flicker, scored on the stroke.

Longwood went to the state tournament last weekend at University of Virginia with a few people with injuries. These injuries effected Longwood's play at the tournament.

On Friday Longwood was defeated by U. Va. by the score of 2-0. Longwood played a competitive first half but the second half the offensive line could not penetrate U. Va.'s defense. U. Va.'s second goal was scored by a penalty flick. The penalty occurred when the ball got stuck under goalie Teri Davis' foot.

Longwood played VPI on Saturday for the position of fifth or sixth place. Longwood beat VPI 2-1 there placing fifth in the state. Longwood started the game off to a slow start. The offense was having some difficulty scoring. With 40 seconds left in the game, Chris Mayer scored from a penalty corner. The game went into double overtime with Mindy Allman, Janet Long and Mary Milne scoring with penalty flicks. Under tournament ruling, only one point is awarded to the team winning the penalty flicks therefore the score was only 2-1.

At the conclusion of the tournament, seniors Kim Garber and Julie Dayton were selected for the All Tournament Team. Congratulations Kim and Julie. At this time Longwood's field hockey team needs to be congratulated for a fine season record of 10-5. Also, congratulations to the coach Dr. "B." Harris who made it all possible with her support and knowledge of the game.

Spikers Ready For State Tourney

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's Women's Volleyball team will be entering the VAAW State Tournament this weekend with an 8-11 overall and 3-2 Division III East Conference record. The tournament which consists of twelve teams will be held at Mary Washington College, November 7-8. The Lady Lancers will be seeded third as a result of their conference record.

First year Coach Nanette Fisher predicts her team will fare well this weekend. "We have shown overall improvement and consistency in our last three games. We have had a tough schedule this season, playing four Division II schools, but have done well."

quickness and hustle of this year's team make-up for their lack of height and experience. Although nine of eleven team members are freshmen and sophomores. They have quickly adapted to college level competition. She praises Junior Julie Petefish for her all-around playing ability and mentions Carol Duquette, Coreen Samuel and Madeline Moose for their strong hitting. The bench also adds depth to the team and is capable of coming into the game and playing well.

The team's attitude of the weekend's tournament is portrayed by team member Kathy Gunning who states, "I feel optimistic about the State Tournament this year. I really think we can win."

Booters Ready For Hamsters

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood's booters split a pair of games last week, bowing to Lynchburg 5-2 Tuesday and stopping Division I Richmond 5-1 Friday night. The 1-1 week gives the Lancers an 8-7 mark heading into the final week of the season.

Coach Rich Posipanko's team will be out to avenge a 1-0 setback from last year when they play Hampden-Sydney Tuesday night at 7:00 on Iler Field. Billed as the first annual Farmville Herald Challenge Bowl, the game will likely be just as hard-fought as last year's contest.

At stake will be the Farmville Challenge Cup, a trophy which the winner will get to keep for one year. The trophy is being provided by the Farmville Herald newspaper.

In Friday's win over Richmond leading scorer Gus Leal scored two goals within 13 seconds of each other to put Longwood ahead 2-0. Mike Lewis added another before the half. Wayne Mayo and Tim Brennan scored in the second half.

Kersey Scores 33

From SPORTS INFO

Freshman sensation Jerome Kersey, who has been called by Lancer coach Ron Bash "the recruiting coup of the year in Virginia," popped in 33 points in a losing effort Saturday afternoon as the Whites beat the Blues 99-92 in Longwood's preseason intrasquad scrimmage at Lancer Hall.

While Kersey and the performance of several other individuals were positive notes for the Lancers, two off-court developments were of a negative nature. Junior Wilbert Hall, a 6-3 JUCO transfer from Somerville, New Jersey, who was slated to see a lot of action in the coming season, left school and will not play for the Lancers this season.

Friday, Longwood got some more bad news when it was learned that freshman guard Mitch Walker would be sidelined from two to three weeks with a separated shoulder. The freshman should be back for the November 22 season opener vs. Maryland Eastern Shore, but may miss the November 15 exhibition against the Scotland National team.

Several players performed well in Saturday's scrimmage, but Kersey and 6-6 soph Ron Orr stood above the rest. Kersey hit 12 of 15 shots from the floor and nine of 13 free throws for the Blue team, while Orr fired in 25 points, hitting eight of 11 from the floor and nine of 11 from the line, for the White team.

Junior Mike McCroey played a strong game from his guard position, scoring 14 points and making seven steals for the White team. McCroey is a junior college transfer from Anne Arundel Co., Maryland. Senior Thomas Alston had 19 points and 9 rebounds.

The Lancer Soccer team is prepared to avenge a 1-0 loss last year to the Hamsters.

Sports Editor's Turn

The time has come once again for me, as Sports Editor of the Rotunda, to pay tribute to another Great Athlete. This person is not recognized at Longwood as an athlete because he does not play any sports. But he is an athlete; he is a body builder and his name is Bill Brent.

I have known Bill since my freshman year here. It has been truly gratifying, as well as a lesson in dedication, to watch him move from an unknown to a recognized figure on the body building scene.

Bill is strongly dedicated to his hobby. He neither smokes nor drinks. During training he always warms up before he lifts. He insists on the strictest form.

He attributes his ability to lift to a strong sense of concentration.

In preparation for a contest Bill adheres to a strict diet consisting mainly of tuna, apples, and grapefruit.

On the night of Saturday, October 18, Bill captured the state title in the short class of the Virginia Body Building Championships in Hampton, Va. He was a pre-contest favorite, after winning the teenage title the previous year.

He finished the contest three points behind the overall winner after a grueling minute and a half pose-down. His stage presentation received a roar of praise and appreciation from the audience. His stage manner and grace on the posing platform are unparalleled.

Bill has been training for two years. During this period he has won titles of: 1979 Teenage Mr. Metropolitan, 1979 Teenage Mr. Virginia, second place teenage Mr. Capital 1980, and 1980 Mr. Virginia.

Bill gives much credit for his success to three people: Danny Richard, Margi Fanton, and Cathy Idelson. He also states that many others have helped him along the line.

When asked what his goals were in body building he casually states that "I want to be Mr. Universe." With his talents and drive that may just be a distinct possibility, we, at Longwood, wish you much luck and are proud of you, Bill.

Your Turn

Thanks

Dear Students, Faculty, Staff and Parents,
On behalf of Geist, I would like to thank all of you for making Oktoberfest 1980 a success. Even with the rain, everyone pulled together in a true Blue-n-White spirit to make Saturday run as smooth as possible. It would take a whole page in order to list all those people who worked so hard and deserve so much praise in preparing for last week end. The spirit of cooperation, dedication, and enthusiasm is what Oktoberfest is all about.

Thank you,
Pam Wagner

therefore, original material is also incorporated with the easy, relaxed atmosphere their music creates. Original songs range from anything from a fast contemporary melody to an instrumental, or songs that make you feel good to ones that tell a story, such as, "Ever Popular Curfew."

Although there has been no definite sign of a recording contract, Dale and Charlie have their sights set on 1981. The band is completely self-sufficient. They do their own bookkeeping and business arrangements needed to manage a group. The Mason-Roller Line is known through Longwood's open-mike jams. They have performed for these shows the past three years. Last spring they were the opening act for the spotlight concert of Josh White, Jr. and they showcased in the Virginia unit of the NECAA last April.

"We like to present songs as we, 'The Mason-Roller Line' see them. The best reaction from our audiences comes from songs they can participate in; songs they can get rowdy with, or just a fast pace tempo that can sit back and enjoy," said Dale Roller.

Songs such as "Dear Abby" (John Prine), "Please Don't Bury Me" (John Prine), "Rocky Racoon" (The Beatles), "Norwegian Wood" (The Beatles), are just a few of the many songs the Mason-Roller Line band plays.

Previous performers such as Barry Drake and Mike Williams showed a great deal of interest in the Mason-Roller Line, enough to give advice on bookkeeping, places to play, generalized tips on organizations. Other people such as I. B. Dent, Director of Student Activities, have given enthusiastic support to keep the band moving as well as help spread their name. Obviously, the Mason-Roller Line is going somewhere. Just think, Dale and Charlie are two of Longwood's own students! Come out and watch them in their first Saturday Night Alive performance before other college campuses grab 'em up!

"The continued use above tragedy is generally what every person wants to do with his life, to use above the tragedy of mediocrity, which is the greatest tragedy of man." Mr. Price also made this comment about acting, "Me, I love acting. It's so much more real than life — and that's Wilde, of course."

The evening will be set in the year 1899, and Vincent Price will invite you to spend the night with Sebastian Melmoth, in a concert hall on the "Pue de la Peninier," Paris, France.

Don't miss this exciting event. Come see Vincent Price in person and witness why critics acclaim him as being one of the most "gifted performers of the stage and screen today."

Going to college is apparently contagious for those associated with Linda and Lydia Davenport. Linda's mother, who is manager of the Amherst dress plant, would like to take classes at Longwood, too. If the dress plant closes, she will probably join her daughter and granddaughter in their daily trek to the Longwood campus.

Students Speak Out At Board Meeting

The board of visitors unanimously approved a proposal for student representative seated on the board at its meeting Friday.

Presented by Legislative board chairman Tammy Bird and David Wall, the proposal called for "the President of the Student Government Association to sit with the Board of Visitors at their quarterly meetings and act on the same capacity as the faculty representative."

Dr. Leo Salters, dean of students, urged the board to pass this proposal saying, "The students sometimes feel powerless."

Legislative board members were extremely pleased to see the board pass the proposal. "We see this as a very positive change."

Other members of the student body were not as happy with board actions. Following the Legislative board presentation, Wall tried to present a student written document calling for the immediate release of Dr. Henry I. Willett Jr. as president.

Wall was ruled out of order by board rector, Eric L. Robinson for bringing up a matter without permission. He was again ruled out of order by board parliamentarian, Ralph Page when he tried to present a petition with 573 signatures to the rector.

Page later added that he hoped no one would hold any grudges against Wall for what he did. "He thought what he did was right. I personally do not have any ill feelings."

A letter from the SGA executive committee was read by board member A. Gay Kampfmüller saying that it was unaware of Wall's intentions to bring up this proposal. "We do not support the second proposal at all since we had no contact with it."

The student movement began Thursday with students displaying signs in the Rotunda calling for the immediate removal of President Willett and the installation of an interim president.

Following this display, the students began collecting signatures on the petitions. The students felt they had collected a fair amount of signatures in ten hours. They had to add, however, that many students refused to sign.

The board adopted a resolution to continue its search for president and the immediate transition to the new administration. They rejected the idea of an interim president, but expressed appreciation for the concern of the college and Farmville community.

Last week, Foundation board members proposed a resolution at their board meeting asking for a resolution. They were ruled out of order.

President Willett told reporters after the board of visitors meeting that he had been told that Foundation members had called students urging Thursday and Friday's display. He commended the board for the way they reacted.

Final Reply Made

The Longwood College board of visitors made a formal reply to Governor John Dalton's Management Team Report, Friday. Board member Rust moved to send the reply after almost a year's study by the college.

The board voted to make the response after inviting management representatives to the meeting. Ronald Miller, director of the Department of Management Analysis Systems Development, said he felt the college and board of visitors had taken some positive steps.

He continued to stress to the board that "the board must have a clear understanding" of the college's functions. He told the board that the college should be under their monitoring. "Be involved in each aspect of college life," he added.

He and other management members, Jim Mills and John Dully, urged the board to continue to make this positive progress.

His main concern was that the college have a stable system of long-range planning. He termed long-range planning as "a discipline that must start at the top." He also concluded employee relations in a list of top priorities.

The board is continuing a study of the John P. Wynne Campus School. They have asked the Secretary of Education to recommend full funding for the current biennium.

In other board action, admissions figures were presented to the board. The college has had 322 applications for admission as of November 6, according to Dr. Bill Peele, vice president for Administration.

Dr. John Peale, faculty representative to the board, expressed concern that students SAT scores in verbal were so much lower than math. He also told the board that the admissions committee felt that they could not tighten admission policy, but that they had dropped the conditional class.

Dr. Peele told the board, "Things are improving as far as we're concerned."

In Thursday's board action, Dr. Carolyn Wells, vice president for academic affairs and dean of the college, presented a study of the college's major academic programs. Dr. Wells said that 50 per cent of Longwood's students are in one of four majors.

"I would like to see a study of each academic program...and you have the courage to bite the bullet and discontinue programs that we cannot afford to continue."

The board supported a study of the college's academic offerings,

Letters To The Board

Editor's Note: The following are the students' letters to the Longwood College Board of Visitors. The first is a proposal for a student representative on the board which was passed unanimously. The second is the letter which accompanied the petition to the board for an interim president.

To the Longwood College Board of Visitors:

It was discussed and strongly recommended at the Oct. 22 meeting of Legislative Board that the Longwood College Board of Visitors consider allowing the President of the Student Government Association to sit with the Board of Visitors at their quarterly meetings and act in the same capacity as the faculty representative. Legislative Board feels that the addition of the student would enhance the functioning of the Board of Visitors in the areas that might directly involve students, or concern students. The student would be able to answer questions and comment on issues that the Board of Visitors may discuss. The Board of Visitors and the student body could only benefit from the direct input the student could give.

Longwood College, as a whole, is made up of four sections: The Longwood College Board of Visitors, the administration, the faculty, and the student body. Legislative Board feels that the Board of Visitors should use the student as a resource when discussing the issues of the college.

Legislative Board stresses the Board of Visitors immediate consideration of this matter. It is an important issue to the college.

Respectfully,
Legislative Board of Longwood College

To The Board of Visitors:
The students of Longwood College have become greatly concerned about the administration, its policies, dealings with the faculty and students, and overall effect on the college.

The Board of Visitors determines the policies and the governing of Longwood College and therefore has the duty of determining whether or not the administration is meeting its responsibilities to Longwood and its students.

The Board has received over 40 faculty letters, petitions from alumni, as well as from members of the community, and requests from the Foundation Board that Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr. be removed from his position as President. We have a petition containing 573 signatures from the student body requesting the same.

This number may not seem great in comparison to the total number of Longwood students until one realizes the following:—the petition did not begin

Student Life Committee Formed

By PAMUPDIKE

A new committee has been set up by Legislative Board named the Student Life Committee. This committee is comprised of seven faculty members: Dr. James Crowl, Mrs. Frances N. Hamlett, Miss Eva J. McCreary, Nelson D. Neal, George Stonikinis, Mrs. Cam Tinnell, and Miss Gretchen Unterzuber; and five students: Mary Slade, Nancy Warren, Jerry Richman, Bob Jensen, and Stephanie Ibanez.

The purpose of this committee is to work closely with college officials whose responsibilities involve primarily the non-academic portion of student life and to make recommendations to those officials and to the Organization of Teaching Faculty.

Areas such as activities, student conduct, and management of the bookstore, dining hall, and infirmary are major concerns of the group. At least once a year the committee will present a written report to the Organization of Teaching Faculty.

The major topics the committee has been dealing with thus far are: Sign In - Sign Out procedures, the possibility of lifestyle dorms; student campus police officers, the amount of beer allowed at student parties, who is responsible for costs of damage done to public areas of dormitories, and security in campus housing.

The Student Life Committee meets once a month.

Stonehenge will be the featured sight for the second Anthropology Film.

The Mystery Of Stonehenge Film

The second film in the 1980-81 Anthropology Film Series will be shown Wednesday evening, November 12, at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium. The film is entitled The Mystery of Stonehenge and tests the idea that this huge stone structure in England was built by prehistoric humans as an astronomical observatory.

Stonehenge is the most spectacular of the European stone monuments, most of which were built approximately 5,000 years before the present in the Neolithic Period. It is situated on the Salisbury Plain in southern England and consists of a circular bank 350 meters in diameter enclosing a ring of burial mounds and stones. Many of the stones are bluestone weighing 5 tons each which were apparently transported 150 miles from a site in Wales to which they have been traced. Archeologists are uncertain if the function of Stonehenge was religious ceremonialism, eclipse prediction, calculation of planting seasons, political symbolism, or something else.

All films in the Anthropology Film Series are free. A brief introduction to the film will be given before the film is shown by Dr. James William Jordan, Associate Professor of Anthropology. Students and faculty of Longwood College and the general public are invited to attend the screening of this classic film in anthropology.

Circle K . . .

A Club That Cares

By BRENDA FUNK

If you don't know exactly what Circle K is, read on! Circle K is the college level club of the similar high school organizations, Key Club and Keyettes. If you still don't understand, Circle K's major purpose is to serve. Whether projects are for the youth, elderly, school, or community, Circle K is definitely involved. Just organized last year, Longwood's club is well under way and already very active this semester.

For instance to celebrate Halloween in a special way, Circle K kicked off on October 30 with their Caring Companion program. Club members enjoyed giving a party for about twenty underprivileged children from the area. The members have been matched up to these children and serve as a big brother or sister, a friend, a companion, just simply someone who cares.

Also for Halloween, some club members paid a visit to Thackston's an area old folks' home, where they enjoyed playing bingo with the residents there. As another one of their projects, the club visits this home monthly.

A future event for Circle K is a Christmas party for underprivileged children given in conjunction with Hampden Sydney's club. Such working with other colleges is not unusual in Circle K as they hold interclubs, projects, and parties with other schools such as Mary Washington, University of Richmond, and William and Mary. The main event of the entire year climaxes when the whole district, including the states of Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware, unites for convention—a week end of great times, whether at workshops or parties! This year's convention is to be held in Blacksburg. As shown, Circle K is not only a worthwhile, but also a fun organization to be involved in. With various projects ahead and new members always welcome, come on out to the Student Union's Reading Rooms on first and third Thursdays of each month at 6:30. You will NOT regret it! Just think about the club's international theme "Caring...Life's Magic!"

Alpha Phi Omega

A Service Foundation

In 1975, Alpha Phi Omega marked a half century of service. A Phi O was founded on the principle of service and still stands erect and proud on this foundation.

Early in our history, four fields of service evolved and continue today:

Service to Campus. In this phase of APO activities, the chapters carry out projects which are beneficial to the entire campus.

Service to Youth and Community. Members of APO are ready and willing to pass along to others some of the benefits gained in earlier years. Many projects are directed in service to Scout councils and to other youth groups and to the community at large.

Service to Nation. Going beyond campus and community efforts, APO chapters participate in activities of nationwide importance and alone endeavor to promote international goodwill.

Service to Members. Individual benefits to each member come from the leadership opportunities, responsibilities in chapter operation, fellowship, and lifelong friendships.

Of all Greek letter organizations, we alone stand firmly and proudly on this foundation of service. We have long led the pack — first to admit students of all races, creeds, and colors, and first to have concern for others instead of ourselves. Service is unselfish. Other organizations see us like a beacon in the night and are starting to emulate us, for service is our thing.

We bring to our campuses something which is positive, constructive, and which seems to stamp out divisiveness. We not only profess our lofty principles but we put them into action.

Unique facts concerning Alpha Phi Omega: 1) We are the largest national fraternity, 2) We are a co-ed fraternity — open to both men and women, 3) By being a service fraternity, one may also join a social fraternity or sorority, 4) We have a strict no hazing policy, and 5) We are inexpensive — only $20 initiation fee plus reasonable monthly dues.

If this sounds like your kind of organization, then attend the informational meeting on Tuesday, November 11, at 7 p.m. in the Reading Rooms at Lankford or drop a note to Alpha Phi Omega, Stephen Meyers, Box 931.

Scholarship Bank

A new service designed to assist students in need of financial aid to continue school or plan for graduate school was announced today by the Scholarship Bank.

According to Steve Danz, Program Director, the new service will give each student a print out of the scholarships, loans, grants and work-study sources available to him or her in that student's specific field.

Students apply by writing for and filling out a questionnaire which is then used as the key to the data bank. The questionnaire is like a mini-profile of each student, seeking information on year in school, major, occupational objectives, sex, religion, parent's union, employer and military service and student's outstanding abilities, such as leadership experience or sports. The service is so thorough, according to the director, that in the field of girls' sports scholarships alone there are over 2,000 entries.

The director also indicated that the Scholarship Bank is the only program that offers a full listing of all graduate and post-graduate scholarships, which would be of interest to all grad students and even faculty.

The data bank guarantees that each student will receive at least $100 in aid, or the service fee of $35 will be refunded. Danz indicated that students unable to pay the $35 fee may receive a "basic" print out of at least 15 scholarship sources for $25. The $25 fee will give students up to 50 sources of possible aid.

The data bank is updated daily with new scholarships and information changes in current scholarships. Due to the backlog of applications for this unique service, students should submit questionnaires as soon as possible.

The service will also send each applicant a publication on How to Play Grantsmanship, which will be of help to the students in applying for the aid. The Scholarship Bank cooperates

Dancers Present Fall Concert

By BRENDA COLEMAN

On the nights of November 6, 7 and 8, the people of Longwood were treated to the sounds and sights of the Longwood College Company of Dancers' annual Fall Concert in Jarman Auditorium. The program thoroughly enhanced by beautiful music and excellent lighting, was completely choreographed and performed by the Company of Dancers themselves. Under the direction of Dr. Betty Bowman, the show took the audience on a multi-dimensional tour through the world of modern dance. Each individual dance and performance told much about each respective choreographer and the dancers involved. Many of the works were improvisational in nature, allowing each girl and guy to express her or his emotions and talents.

The first dance, choreographed by Grace Rodgers, was entitled "Work in Progress," a lively dance built around simple locomotor movements. This was followed by Eileen Mathes' work "Inventions," an Elizabethan-like dance performed to two selections by Bach and "Wings of Dreams," a beautiful, almost mystical dance accompanied by the music of Neil Diamond and choreographed by Lorie Blackard. The next selections were the comical "Profiles," a dance described by its choreographer Jennifer Selby as a "satire concerning snobishness" and "Boundaries," a dance about the conflict, invasion and re-establishment of boundaries, put together by Jan Jennings. A five minute intermission followed these first five dances.

The second part of the concert began with "Graphic Mobile," a totally improvisational dance accompanied by musicians Lonie Davidson, Rusty Hurley, and Kristen Holberg. Tracey Hormuth's work "Anxious Imagery," an exploration into the internal or external forces that compel human nature was next followed by "Games," a look at the innocents who travel through life untouched by society's games that was choreographed by Bethe Cardin. The last two dances were "Dance," a one-woman dance designed and danced by Cindi Fitzgerald, and "Celebration," an open celebration of and an invitation to the world of dance. This dance, performed by most of the Dance Company members, was choreographed by Adrienne Heard.

The three nights of dance were the climax of many weeks of practice and work and the dancers and technicians should be praised for their talents and ability. The Company of Dancers is headed by President Tracey Hormuth, Secretary—Treasurer Bethe Cardin, Special Projects Chairman Grace Ann Rodgers, and Publicity Head Adrienne Heard. The show's lighting was designed and supervised by Richard Gamble and technically provided for by Nina Leffue and Jeff Sledjeski.

Kelly Helms In Concert

By JODI KERSEY

Thursday, November 13, from 8-10 p.m., Kelly Helms will perform in the Lower Dining Hall. This concert is being sponsored by Zeta Tau Alpha. Kelly has been performing in Richmond for the past eight months. She spent three months at the Bee-Hive, two and a half months at Caesar's Cellar and more recently, she has performed at The North Pole and Going Bananas in Richmond. Kelly plays both 6- and 12-string guitars during her performances which contain a repertoire of music of composers such as Joni Mitchell, Carly Simon, Rita Coolidge, Dan Fogelberg and John Denver.

After recording at Alpha Audio Recording Studio about two months ago, Kelly has a new record out which was released this past week. It is a single record containing the two songs titled "On my way to no where" and "Things that I love." The record was produced with many of the best musicians in Richmond including members from the Richmond Symphony.

Kelly believes that Longwood has had a significant influence on her music. She grew up on the Longwood campus because her father is a professor here and she feels that this had an important impact on the particular direction of her music. She began her career in music about five years ago playing drums for a local band and through their help, learned to play the guitar. Kelly says she began writing after working with the band. She played at the June Jubilee in Richmond and was also the feature artist at the Heart of Virginia Festival.

Zeta and Kelly have a historic relationship, since Zeta has supported her endeavors in music and has sponsored her concert here at Longwood. Kelly continued that she appreciates the support of Zeta and also the support of I.B. Dent. Kelly feels that I.B. Dent has helped many performers and really tries to bring good entertainment to the college campuses.

Kelly hopes to get back into a regular performance schedule, since completing her first recording. She wants to begin by performing on the college circuit on a regular basis. Plans for an album are probably the next step for Kelly who says she wants "to go as far as I can with my music" as she awaits audience listening response to her new single.

—some students expressed fear of possible repercussions from the college community.

—the petition was circulated totally without prior publicity.

No college administration can function to the benefit of its students, without the students' respect. It should be quite apparent, to all members of the Board, that the present administration has lost the respect and trust of not only the students, but the faculty as well.

It can only be detrimental to the college for Dr. Willett to continue as acting president until August, 1981. He is making policy decisions that will be in effect even after his resignation. A new president will have to deal with these policies as well as the enormous challenge that person already faces: returning Longwood to the high standing position it once held.

Protecting that high standing position is another responsibility the Board of Visitors has to the students. When we leave here, we should be able to carry Longwood's name and reputation proudly with us. At the present time, our school's reputation cannot possibly benefit the students and could possibly hurt the students' reputation.

Therefore, in order to meet your responsibilities to the students, the faculty, the administration, and Longwood College as an educational institution, we urge that you consider the request that we are making.

Sincerely,

Board Resolution

Editor's Note: The following is the board's adopted statement concerning the search for a president.

The Board of Visitors of Longwood College acknowledges with appreciation the concerns, pro and con, expressed to it by various members of the College community and of the Farmville residential community concerning the appointment by this Board of an interim president to serve until the successor to Dr. Willett is in office.

We take the position that Dr. Willett's successor will be brought to this campus at the earliest possible date, and that this Board will endeavor to effect an orderly transfer of administration.

Senior Spotlight

By BRENDA COLEMAN

When this week's Senior Spotlight Beth Parrott was asked why she chose French as a major, she responded enthusiastically "Because I love it! Being familiar with another language widens your appreciation of other cultures. I think all Americans should know a language other than English. Perhaps that would reduce some of the problems we are having when we deal with another country or culture."

"I have a lot of doors open to me now because of my major. Next semester I'll be student teaching under my old high school French teacher. I'm very excited about that. After graduation, I'm planning to apply to many different companies and organizations, depending on who needs me. I want to work for an organization with international branches, such as tobacco companies, banks, and, of course, government agencies. I definitely want to do something with French."

Beth has already begun working with her French to a greater degree. Last summer, Beth studied at McGill University in Montreal in a total French immersion program. "It was a wonderful experience. I did not speak any English the entire summer. Everything—the class, the social activities—was conducted in French. I gained a great deal from this experience in that it strengthened my love for and appreciation of French."

A native of Danville, Beth is involved in the Foreign Language Club and Student Alumni Association. She is a former member of the Baptist Student Union and is a staff member of The Rotunda.

She also works 15-20 hours a week in the Social Security office. "If it were not for my work-study, I probably would not be here. I am so glad Longwood participates actively in the work-study program. I need to do something other than just college work to prepare me for life."

Beth was quite open and honest when asked if she was glad she came to Longwood. "Yes — and no, in that I feel stunted in my growth as far as having the opportunity to live off-campus. I would have liked the chance to have made more decisions on my own, rather than having them governed by the school. Even though I like the smallness of LC, I often wonder what it would have been like to have gone to a bigger school."

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Editor's Turn

There is certainly one complaint that can not be made by anyone concerning the Board of Visitors' meetings last week. There was definitely student participation.

Legislative Board presented a proposal for a non-voting student member to the board. This major step in improving the board — student relationship was approved unanimously by the board.

Following the presentation of that proposal, students tried to present a petition to the board calling for President Henry I. Willett Jr.'s immediate release and the establishment of an interim president. The student presenting the petition was ruled out of order by the board rector, Eric Robinson of Farmville, and parliamentarian, Ralph Page of Richmond.

It is often said that different people have different views, and that is definitely true at Longwood College. All of these views should be allowed to surface, for freedom of speech is the most important liberty given to the American people.

However, there are also certain channels and procedures that must be followed. The Legislative Board followed these channels when they requested time (the night before) on the agenda to present their proposal. The student group did not. Instead they chose to use Legislative Board by riding in on the coattails of their proposal. This is the reason that they were called out of order.

In some way it's funny that they chose to present the petition in this manner. The next day the students were "outraged" that the president stated that they had been "used" by the members of the Foundation Board to present the proposal. But, that is exactly what they did. — They "used" the time that Legislative Board had acquired for something that was a tremendous positive step for both the student board and the governing board.

A statement was read later during the meeting from the executive committee of Legislative Board stating that they had no prior knowledge of the students plan to present the proposal. Dean Leo Salters, Dean of Students, also expressed that he knew nothing of the plans.

Faculty members and students have expressed their support and non-support of the group of students in a silent manner. The bad part about it is that there seems to be no clear-cut way of getting an overall view of just how the college community feels.

The small group of students must be praised for having the courage to openly express their views, whether we agree with them or not. Their major mistake was the way in which they handled their presentation.

The board passed a resolution that dismissed the idea of hiring an interim president.

Counseling Services Found Useful

By JOE JOHNSON

Interested in finding out about your interest? Come to the Counseling Service, October 30, 1-5 p.m. for a 45 minute interest test. You will return later for results. Sound familiar? Well, this is just one of the many programs provided by the Counseling Services at Longwood College. Dr. Jennings Cox is the creator, organizer and director of each program. In short, Dr. Jennings Cox is Longwood's Counseling Service.

Dr. Cox came to Longwood during April of 1979. He was educated at Randolph-Macon and received his doctorate in psychology at the University of Missouri. Before coming to Farmville, he worked in Texas. However, he was not satisfied there and wanted to work in Virginia, which is his home state. When Longwood offered him charge of their counseling services, he took the position without hesitation.

Arriving at Longwood, Dr. Cox found the Counseling Services in great need of development. He established four major programs for the fall semester of 1980 and also allowed time for one-to-one counseling sessions for any student who might need them. One of the services is a study skills program which is a "one-session seminar to deal with suggestions on how to read and comprehend textbooks, take better notes, review and take tests."

Three of these sessions have already taken place on September 30, October 15 and November 4. One more will be held on November 18. Dr. Cox says that the turnout for each session has been about 12-15 people with about half of these being freshmen. They go into such things as managing studying time, memorizing a lesson, reading and getting the most from what you read, taking notes in class, and finally taking a test and reviewing for exams.

Was the program effective? Are students being helped by these seminars? Dr. Cox seems to think so. He replied that although there has not been enough time for grade feedback, the students feel aided by the seminars, and some have even established studying charts to help them in dividing their time efficiently.

Another program begun by Dr. Cox is the Vocational Exploration Groups which are "three-session groups designed to help you examine carefully the important aspects of your life that affect a vocational choice." Group I held their sessions October 14, 21 and 28.

Dr. Cox explained that, ideally, these groups consisted of 10-15 persons. Any more, and the effectiveness of group interaction is lost. He was careful to explain that the procedure during these sessions was an interchange of ideas among the students and not his doing a solo lecture. He also said that it is quite stimulating and he has even learned a few things himself.

The groups discuss such things as their feelings and attitudes toward their career, their interests and abilities, and choice of environments for their life. To quote Dr. Cox, "It's to try to get people to increase their knowledge of careers and not to limit themselves; to look at what's important in their careers besides majors."

Dr. Cox uses two tests to help the groups. One is the Strong-Campbell test which matches the interest of the people who are working successfully in a certain occupation with the interests of a student who may want to go into that particular field. Another test given to help the students make a career decision is a personal needs test. It measures your needs in such areas as environment, associates, money intake and job related stress. Dr. Cox also has access to information from the Placement and Career Planning Office.

Assertiveness training is another program developed by Dr. Cox who says that it is one of the most useful programs started for the Counseling Services at Longwood. It is "three session groups to assist you in expressing your feelings, preferences, needs and opinions in a way that does not threaten or punish others." This group also consists of only 10-15 people so that group interaction can take place unhindered. The program is developed to get people who do not stand up for their rights to gain enough confidence to do so.

Dr. Cox said that it is especially helpful for people who have a hard time talking to roommates, professors or even a partner in an intimate relationship. He said that it is essentially a confidence-building course. It is designed to make a person realize that he is as good as anyone else and should never be intimidated by another person. The feedback from the group is tremendous and Dr. Cox feels that this program is helping a lot of people. The three sessions for the group took place on October 22, 29 and November 5. However, Dr. Cox is sure there will be follow-up groups during the spring semester.

Another program, which is merely a refined version of the Vocational Exploration Group, is the Vocational Interest Testing. It requires the taking of the Strong Campbell test (about 45 minutes) and returning at a later date to interpret the scores. Testing will be held November 20, 1-5 p.m., and December 11, 1-5 p.m.

Dr. Cox also conducts one-to-one personal counseling for anyone who needs this. When asked what some of the major problems for college students are, he replied that the major problems are stress and interpersonal relationships with a few more serious problems.

He said, "College is the most stress-filled time in anybody's life. It's the first time in your life that you are fully responsible for your own actions." He also added, "Besides the mental pressure of the Academic environment, there is the added peer pressure...in terms of an 'Okay' lifestyle...the fact that your lifestyle is different is all right, but you have to realize it's going to affect the way people think of you." Dr. Cox said that sometimes the stress can get so bad, that it can affect a person's decision-making ability. "You suddenly find yourself not handling things the way you're supposed to." Dr. Cox added that he is usually successful in helping a student deal with stress or other personal problems they

The New Social Work Building- Be Proud Of It!

By BRENDA BONUCELLI and NANCY WILLARD

Now that we have settled into this school year, we have grown accustomed to the many changes that have taken place on campus over the summer. But are we aware of those changes in the familiar white building located between the infirmary and the campus police station-formerly known as Barlow Gym?

The New Social work building is still waiting for it's new sign.

Not only does this renovated building have two classrooms, but also a large library, offices for student organizations, and numerous possibilities for the future. By way of the staircase on the side of the building, the faculty's offices can be reached.

And who has taken over this entirely "new" Barlow Gym building? None other than the Social Work Department!

Expansion within the Social Work Department is and has been occurring at tremendous rates. Longwood recognizes the department's expansion and its resulting needs, and had Barlow Gym renovated over the summer.

Though still in the process of remodeling (the building wasn't occupied by the Social Work Department until two weeks before classes began this semester), there is a consensus among students that this new acquisition is proof of the positive direction the department is taking. When asked what they thought of the building, the students' responses were varied:

"I like it. We needed the extra rooms and I think the department has grown up enough to make separate buildings necessary."

"To finally have a place apart from the main Grainger building gives me a feeling of individuality that is long overdue for the members of the Social Work Department as well as myself. I feel that our major is finally being taken seriously here at Longwood."

Longwood's Social Work majors are proud of their field and proud of their new building. So the next time you are nearby, stick your head in and have a look around. You will understand and you will be proud, too!

Camping Class Checks Out The Wilds

As the week end approaches, Longwood students are planning their week end escapes. Many are planning parties to celebrate Halloween. With the parties come the costumes and everyone is looking for something to wear.

Friday comes and everyone has their costume. Even the 20 students in Peter Cunningham's camping skills class are ready for the holiday. Their holiday, however, is spelled with two L's and is called a week end at Holiday Lake. Their costumes for Friday night are long johns, sweatshirts, wool socks and hats, and anything else warm they can find.

The camping skills class is one of the recreational physical education classes at Longwood. The week end camping trip is the major requirement of the class.

Students left Longwood Friday afternoon to spend two freezing but enjoyable nights in the wilds of Appomattox County. With these somewhat reluctant bodies went tents, cookware, two canoes, and hopes that they would somehow survive.

"It was an experience that will be hard to forget," claimed one weary camper. "I will look back on it as an enjoyable time."

The campers arrived Friday

just in time to set up camp and collect firewood before dark. "We would have gotten there earlier," claimed a camper, "but Mr. Cunningham lost a canoe on the way." It seems one of the canoes fell off the truck enroute.

Collecting firewood, building a fire, and cooking were three of the main time consumers of the week end. Students were divided into groups of five for cooking and required to plan menus for the week end. Meals ranged from bologna sandwiches for lunch to steak, baked potato, and salad for Saturday dinner for one group.

Most of Saturday was left free for the students. They took advantage of the beautiful day. Cameras and sketch pads came out of the tent for the art lovers. Some took advantage of the time by studying. Others read other types of literature besides school books.

Canoeing was one of the requirements of the day. Everyone was required to take the canoe out, even those who were afraid of water.

"Through our complaining, we can all say we enjoyed the week end in one way or another," exclaimed one camper and then added, "I'd sure rather take this class than tennis or bowling."

Gymnastics Outlook Good

By LISA SPENCER

TALENTED. That's the first word that comes to mind when considering Longwood's 1980-81 gymnastics team. CHALLENGING. That's how Coach Ruth Budd refers to the upcoming season.

Coming off a record-breaking season which found Longwood gymnasts in the national limelight, the Lancers have the brightest of last year's stars returning plus a number of young, but talented newcomers. In spite of the abundance of talent, Budd predicts Longwood will have a difficult time matching last year's mark of 8-1.

"With the talent we have on hand we should be much stronger," said Budd. "From early practices I'd say we have more skill right now than we had at the end of last season. We may have a difficult time matching last year's record, however, because most of our opponents have also gotten stronger."

The Lancers certainly have enough talent to come through with another successful season. Returnees Kathy Idelson (1979) and Sharon Pillow (1980) have won the Longwood Female Athlete of the Year award the past two years. Idelson, an All-American in '79, was a national qualifier last season. Richmond native Pillow, who was chosen as Longwood College Player of the Week a record five times in 1979-80, was a national finalist in vaulting and broke several school records.

Budd expects to get immediate help from freshmen Monica Chandler and Jaudon Conkwright. Chandler, from Sterling, reigns as the Virginia State AA champ in bars, vaulting, floor exercise and all-around and has been impressive in early practice. A native of Virginia Beach, Conkwright also won a state title in bars in 1979 before an ankle injury slowed her last season.

The Longwood team is young—8 of 12 are first time members—but talented, and Coach Budd is assured that the gymnasts will work well together.

"We have a lot of unity and enthusiasm," said the coach. "Everyone works well together and is looking forward to competition."

"Margie Fanton, along with her teammates, is preparing for a great gymnastics season."

Longwood's Golf Program

"Golf is golf and it's for everyone," so said women's golf coach Dr. Barbara Smith to the board of visitors Friday. Dr. Smith made a special presentation before the board on the Longwood College golf program.

According to Dr. Smith the golf program is supported mostly by student fees. The golf course brings in additional funds from green fees, cart fees, and club membership.

The program's educational side offers approximately 12 classes in golfing a year. Dr. Smith emphasized that this included 216 students.

The golf course near the Longwood House offers free recreation to students. For those who do not own their own clubs, the LAA provides some clubs for use. Others who take advantage of the course include faculty and staff, members, and paying customers.

Longwood has both a men's and women's intercollegiate golf team. Holding the title of "Mother of Women's Golf in the State," Longwood women have maintained an excellent record from the beginning.

Two years ago, the team started playing Invitational tournaments nationally. These tournaments give them the opportunity to play against such Division I teams as Ohio State, Penn State, and University of North Carolina. The women host both fall and spring tournaments.

The men's golf team is under the direction of new coach Steve Nelson. Although they do not have as long a record, they do claim All-American winner, Tim White.

According to Dr. Smith, golf is a time demanding sport. Tournaments last three to four days which cause the team member to miss classes. Dr. Smith's rule for the student golfer is, "Individual first, Academics second, and Golfer third."

The Lady Lancer Gymnastics team will unveil this year's squad in an exhibition of their talents on November 12 at 8:15 p.m. in Lancer Hall. On display will be group tumbling, vaulting, and gymnastic routines to be performed by what is probably the strongest gymnastics team in Longwood's history. National qualifiers Sharon Pillow and Kathy Idelson highlight the action. The public is invited to witness this exhibition in Lancer Hall at no charge. The first home meet for the Lancers is on December 8.

Player Of The Week

Sophomore tri-captain Gus Leal scored four goals in two games last week helping Longwood record two wins, and for his accomplishments Leal has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 31-November 7.

The all-time leading scorer in Longwood history with 16 goals, Leal scored twice in a 5-1 triumph over the University of Richmond and came back to score both goals in a 2-1 victory over arch-rival Hampden-Sydney Wednesday as the Lancers won the first Farmville Herald Challenge Bowl. The victory over the Tigers assured Longwood, 9-7, of its first winning season ever in soccer.

Leal put Longwood ahead 1-0 in the first half when he took a direct kick from teammate Wayne Mayo and deftly side-scissored the ball into the net.

After Hampden-Sydney came back to tie the game 1-1, he scored the winning goal late in the second half. On the play Leal dribbled inside, faked right, and then let go a left-footed boot that curved away from the Tiger goalie into the right corner of the goal.

Named to the All-Metro Area team in his senior year at Walter Johnson High School, Leal scored two goals in his first season at Longwood and was chosen for the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association All-Star game.

Also a fine tennis player, Gus is majoring in physical education. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Israel Leal of Rickville.

Basketball Starts With Exhibitions

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood's men's and women's basketball teams will kick off the season in the college's new 3,000 seat gymnasium Lancer Hall Saturday night when the Lady Lancers will face defending Division I national champion Old Dominion at 7:00 and the Longwood men will play the Scotland National Team at 9:00 in an exhibition basketball doubleheader.

In what should be an exciting night of basketball, 6-8 preseason All-American Anne Donovan, perhaps the finest center in women's college basketball, will lead powerful Old Dominion against Longwood's women and the Scotland National Team, featuring 6-9 center Derek Frame, will face Longwood's men, now in NCAA Division II after finishing fourth in the nation in Division III a year ago.

The last Virginia team to beat Old Dominion (64-60 in 1976-77), the AIAW Division II Lady Lancers will face an awesome challenge when they play the Lady Monarchs Saturday night. ODU, picked third in the nation in Street & Smith's Basketball Magazine's preseason poll, is loaded once again despite the loss of Nancy Lieberman and Inge Nissen.

The Lady Monarchs, who will tune up for Saturday's clash with an exhibition against the Republic of China Tuesday and a regular season contest at Virginia State Thursday, will be led by Donovan and Rhonda Rompolo, a 5-9 junior guard, both of whom were starters a year ago. Veteran forward Jan Trombly, a 6-0 senior, returns to the team after sitting out last season with a knee injury. She averaged 12 points and 8 rebounds on the 1978-79 national championship team.

Old Dominion will be without the services of highly touted freshman Janet Davis (6-4½). Davis suffered a broken left wrist last week and is expected to be out of action for six weeks.

The presence of Donovan alone is enough to make Coach Marianne Stanley's team a threat for national honors. The sophomore center averaged 17 points and 13 rebounds per game a year ago while blocking an amazing 227 shots. With a strong supporting cast, Donovan could be set to lead ODU to its third straight national title.

A heady 37-1 last season, Old Dominion has compiled an unbelievable 102-6 record in Stanley's three-year tenure as coach. The Lady Monarchs have a 51-game win streak against Virginia teams.

While Longwood is the last Virginia team to beat ODU, the Lady Lancers fell by an 89-54 score in the last meeting between the two schools in 1978-79.

Coach Carolyn Hodges' Longwood team is coming off an 11-19 season. The Lady Lancers have 10 letter-winners back from a year ago, but will miss leading scorer and rebounder Maryjane Smith, a 5-10 forward who graduated. After depending heavily on Smith last season, Hodges is looking for more balance in this year's offensive attack.

Longwood's top three players could turn out to be senior guard Brenda Fettrow (5-9) junior center Robin Hungate (5-10) and sophomore forward Cindy Eckel (5-10), all of whom were starters a year ago. Fettrow averaged 11.2 points and 5.7 rebounds while dishing off 100 assists. Hungate has displayed marked improvement over last season, but will have to battle taller foes inside. Eckel has a fine shooting touch and is expected to increase her scoring output from last year's six points per game average.

The Lady Lancers will be hampered by the absence of point guard Connie Murray who will be out for an undetermined length of time because of illness.

Not much is known about the Scotland National Team which will square-off against Longwood's men's team Saturday night. The game will be played under international rules, however, and this will be a new experience for the Lancers.

Scotland will field a team of its top individuals who play for various club teams in their native land. The Scottish players range in age from 30 to 18, with 18 being the age of their tallest player 6-9 Derek Frame.

With games against Mount Saint Mary's Thursday and Randolph Macon Friday, Scotland's team may be a bit tired by the time they face Longwood Saturday night.

Coach Ron Bash has several of the top players back who led Longwood to a 28-3 record and fourth place finish in Division III last season. Guard Joe Remar and center Ron Orr, standouts last year as freshmen, are natives of Elizabeth, New Jersey. Remar averaged 12.4 ppg. and dished off 138 assists while Orr averaged 8.6 points and 5 rebounds.

Other top players should be senior forward Thomas Alston (6-5), junior guard Mike McCroey (6-1), freshman Jerome Kersey (6-6), soph. Mike Wills (6-6), soph. Darrell Jenkins and Junior Albert Jay (6-7).

Kersey, from Clarksville, Virginia, scored 33 points in Longwood's Blue-White scrimmage October 25. Orr scored 25, Alston 19 and McCroey had 14 points and seven steals in the preseason scrimmage.

Longwood will host Maryland Eastern Shore in its regular season opener Nov. 22.

Hockey Season Ends With Regionals

By CINDY DROPESKI

Longwood's field hockey team received an at large bid which invited them to play at the regional tournament at High Point, North Carolina. Thursday night when the team left they were a step closer to the national tournament. On Friday, Longwood played the number one team in the state, William and Mary. Longwood needed to win this game to place in region, unfortunately, they lost 2-0. By losing to William and Mary, Longwood lost their chance to go to nationals.

Saturday morning Longwood played the Clemson Tigers. Longwood made a come back to beat Clemson 2-1. This game qualified Longwood to play for fifth place against James Madison. Longwood did not play as well as they did earlier that day, therefore losing to Madison 1-0.

Longwood had a good season overall with a record of 11-7.

Longwood is only losing three seniors — Kim Garber, Julie Dayton, and Teri Davis, so Coach Harris should have an experienced team next year.

A Time For A Change

By T.C. JONES, IV

On behalf of the Soccer team, the Rugby Club would like to thank Hampden-Sydney College for a successful week of sports. This is not meant to rub it in to Hampden-Sydney, but to say that for Longwood, this past week meant a time for a change. The victories in Soccer and Rugby were the first for each team over Hampden-Sydney. During my four years at Longwood, I have played on both clubs and I know how sweet the victories were.

Rugby is said to be a game for gentlemen played by hooligans, but for all those who saw Friday's game saw two teams of gentlemen playing fine Rugby. The final score was Longwood 16 and Hampden-Sydney 0. Tries (4 points) were scored by Robert Zirpoli, Bill Galway, Kurt Mueller, and Ron Gallihugh. The match was clean with lots of hard hitting. Many players had good games.

For Rugby the season is over. As far as the club feels beating Hampden-Sydney gave us a winning season. The actual record was 4 wins, 5 losses when totaling "A" and "B" games. The club would like to thank everyone who supported the club this season. Come back and see us in the spring!

Women's Focus '81, sponsored by the Women's Resource Center, the Consultation and Education Services of Central Virginia Mental Health Services, and the Central Virginia Community College, is in the planning stages. Workshop Committee members were asked to contact interested and qualified professional people, who might be able to conduct a workshop, seminar, or panel discussion on varied subjects concerning women's issues. Women's Focus '81 has a broad range of interests. Some of the topics discussed were "Women in the Business World," "Coping as a Single Woman," "Interpersonal and Small Group Communication for the Professional Woman," "Women and Money Management," "Child Rearing," and "Women and the Law." The committee will be accepting proposals until November 7, 1980 on any of these topics. The respondents may feel free to narrow and define or expand and extend upon any of the above subjects. In addition, they may create an entirely new topic within the confines of women's issues. Anyone interested in participating in Women's Focus '81 is asked to send a proposal to:

Women's Focus '81
Lynchburg, Va. 24501

The proposals should include the Title, Purpose, Topic, Format, and Structure of the presentation. Women's issues are concerns which affect all segments of our society. Participation in Women's Focus '81 will enhance the knowledge and consciousness of many women from all walks of life. This year's Women's Focus will be held at Central Virginia Community College, in Lynchburg, Virginia from March 24-27, 1981. We urge anyone interested to submit a proposal. Women's Focus '81 is a non-profit organization and must work within the limitations of a small budget. Respondents are asked to keep this in mind when submitting their proposals.

SGA Restructure Passes

By MITZI MASON

The reconstruction of the Student Government has taken place. It is made up of the following: 1) Judicial Board which will handle Honor Code College Violations; 2) Student Senate consisting of 42 members, (10 Executive Council Members, 13 Residence Hall Representatives, 4 Class Presidents, 12 Class Representatives, 2 Day Student Representatives, 1 Graduate Representative); 3) an Executive Council which is included in the senate; 4) a Legislative Review Committee; 5) a Campus Life Committee; 6) a Residence Hall Life Committee; and 7) a Student Union Committee.

The meetings of the different sectors of the governing body will be carried on as given. The Executive Council, Campus Life, Residence Hall Life, and Student Union will all hold weekly meetings. Judicial Board and Legislative Review will meet when needed or demanded by the President or Chairman. The Senate will have monthly meetings or when the President calls special meetings.

The Elections Committee will hold major-minor elections in late November of each year to elect the following: Members of Executive Council, Judicial Board Officers, and Chairmen of Campus Life & IAA, Resident Hall Life and Student Union Committees. The terms of these officers shall commence at the beginning of the second semester of each year.

In April of each year the classes will elect presidents to serve for one academic year as members of the senate. They will also elect 12 senators, 4 Honor Code Investigators — 1 from each class, 4 College Investigators — 1 from each class.

Residence Halls will elect one senator from each residence hall having 2 from Curry and 2 from Frazer. They will be elected during the first month of school.

The Residence Hall Councils will be elected by each residence hall in the fall of the year. They shall be made up of 5 members and 1 investigator with the exception of Curry and Frazer which shall have 10 members and 1 investigator. The members of each council shall elect individual chairman from their own membership.

The Dining Hall committee, Bookstore Committee, and Elections Committee will each elect members from each of the four classes. They will choose chairmen for these committees from their respective members and approved by a two-thirds majority vote of the Senate.

There are many responsibilities for each person involved in the Student Government Association. In order for a student to remain involved in one of the areas of the SGA, he/she must be extremely interested and devoted to the betterment of his/her fellow students and classmates. Failure to attend regular meetings could result in deletion from the position that one holds. The SGA is here for you as the Student to help with many problems that may arise in your college days. Do your best to uphold and support it.

Price Delights Audience

By CONNIE FALLON

On Tuesday, Nov. 11, 1980 at 8:00 p.m., Longwood College was graced with a performance by actor Vincent Price. A full house welcomed him with a standing ovation and Price warmly received the anxious crowd as Victorian England's Oscar Wilde.

The play "Divisions and Delights" written by John Gay, presented the character of Sebastian Melnoth portrayed by Oscar Wilde. Mr. Price portrayed a very convincing Wilde, consuming an entire bottle of absinthe while amusing the crowd with humor that must have been shocking during the Victorian era. But the brilliance and wit of Wilde were not lost on the audience in Jarman Auditorium.

Wilde's setting of Paris, France became a unique characteristic as he included the audience in much of his conversation. Wilde revealed himself to the audience as a truly 'human' being. The setting was simple, a chair, a table with books, flower vase, and bottle of absinthe. Off to the left of the stage was a podium upon which he rested his arms.

Price as Wilde held the audience's attention throughout two acts. His "one-man show" was truly a treat, a "diversion" and a "delight" to all.

Alpha Sigma Phi Has Chartering Ceremony

The Delta Iota Chapter of Alpha Sigma Phi Fraternity was duly and regularly instituted in Chartering Ceremonies in the Virginia Room on Saturday, November 15, 1980. Eighty guests witnessed the ceremonies.

Alpha Sigma Phi President Chuck Cole welcomed the guests to Longwood College and thanked everyone for their attendance. Fraternity advisor Dave Suchanic offered the invocation. A prime rib dinner (catered by ARA Food Service) followed the invocation.

Following the dinner, emcee Chuck Cole made the introduction of the head table. Representing the college were Dr. Leo Salters, Vice President of Student Affairs, and Dr. Mary Heintz, Intrafraternity Council Advisor and former dean of the College. Representatives of Alpha Sigma Phi Fraternity at the head table were as follows: Stan Miller (Purdue), Grand Treasurer of the Grand Council and Keynote Speaker, Peter Tourtellot (American University), Grand Marshal of the Grand Council, Kevin Garvey (Westminster), Executive Director of Alpha Sigma Phi, and Chapter Consultant Jeff Schwind (Toledo). Also seated at the head table were Jeff Hoffman (N.C. State) and a former Expansion Consultant of Alpha Sigma Phi, Chuck Cole and Dave Suchanic.

The Keynote Address was delivered by Stan Miller. Miller, serving his second term on the Grand Council, had some challenging words for the Gentlemen of Delta Iota.

"Your work is just beginning," stated Mr. Miller. "The challenge lies before you in seeing that Delta Iota continues their strong dedication to the fraternity," he continued.

"You should remember that your job is not over. You have made a lifetime commitment to Alpha Sigma Phi. You should strive to make sure that Delta Iota does not become a dormant, stagnant society but that you exemplify her ideals within your life," he added.

Miller's address was followed by the conferring of the charter to the members of Delta Iota Chapter. President Chuck Cole received the charter from the Grand Council of the Fraternity. The charter was presented by Peter Tourtellot.

Kevin Garvey, Executive Director, offered congratulations from the national staff but added that indeed the work was just beginning for the Gentlemen of Delta Iota.

Jeff Schwind offered congratulations from the other chapters of Alpha Sigma Phi. He also introduced Jeff Whorley, President of Delta Theta Chapter (Radford) who presented the Alpha Badge (Yale) and Baby Blanket symbolizing that Delta Iota is the newest (or baby) Chapter of Alpha Sigma Phi. (Radford chartered on November 8, 1980 and is the only

"Ladyhouse Blues" Cast Chosen

By PAMUPDIKE

The five woman cast of "Ladyhouse Blues," the current production by the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts, is relatively new to Jarman Stage. Only two members of the cast, Rita Howe and Wendy Sublett, have ever performed at Longwood.

Tracey Rice, a sophomore English major, playing the part of Eydie has worked on a crew for "Barefoot in the Park." Tracey plays the baby of the family. She relates to her character very well, because she, like Eydie, is, "very playful and imitates others." Tracey has also been involved in drama in high school.

Tamara Nash, also a sophomore English major, has had a great deal of acting experience in high school and in various community theater groups. She performed in 15 plays in high school and 9 plays in community theater. Tamara portrays the part of Terri, an 18 year old who is extremely determined. She has no interest in men and wants to strike out on her own.

Wendy Sublett portrays the part of a 21 year old named Dot. Dot is a pregnant woman with a drinking problem. Wendy as noted before, has acted at Longwood in "The Good Woman of Setzuan." Wendy is especially enjoying this particular play because of the small cast. She is a sophomore Elementary Education major.

The only freshman member of the cast is Robyn Reynolds. Robyn portrays the difficult part of Dot, a 24 year old woman who is dying of tuberculosis. She finds that portraying a dying woman is not too difficult, however this may be due to the fact that Robyn has been acting since her 7th grade year of school. She was also a member of the Good Show Acting Company.

Dr. Rita Howe, the 5th, 6th and 7th grade science teacher at the Campus School, is the only faculty member in the play. She portrays the part of the mother, Liz. Dr. Howe relates very closely to her character and says that sometimes she has a hard time separating herself from Liz. There are a lot of similarities in the lives of these two women. They are approximately the same age, they have similar values, their children are close to the same age and, their lives, though from different time periods, are somewhat alike. Dr. Howe describes Liz as a, "very strong woman who wants to keep the family together but knows that she can't. She is very frustrated."

Silliman To Give Lecture

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Recent neuro-psychological studies on how the human brain processes information, and the implications of these studies for the media specialist, will be discussed in this year's second Faculty Colloquium Lecture at Longwood College.

The lecture, entitled "The Differential Effects of Hemisphericity, Presentation Mode and Pictorial Attributes on Performance in a Memory Recognition Task," will be given by James G. Silliman, Jr., on Wednesday, November 19, at 7:30 p.m. in the Wygal Auditorium. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Silliman states that recent studies suggest that the human brain has two hemispheres with different functions, controlling the way in which the individual reacts to stimuli within his environment.

"The left hemisphere is thought to be characterized as verbal, logical, sequential and analytic, whereas the right hemisphere is characterized as nonverbal, spacial, holistic, artistic and synthetic," he explains.

"This theory of hemisphericity," he adds, "appears to have possible implications for the media specialist interested in effective verbal and nonverbal imagery."

Silliman joined the Longwood College faculty in 1975, assuming the duties of Acting Director of the Bureau of Teaching Materials. The following year he began working in the college's student teaching program as a supervisor in Danville. He has also served as a student teaching supervisor in the Northern Virginia area.

Now assistant professor of education, Silliman teaches courses dealing with the use of audio-visual media for instructional purposes. He has also taught photography classes for the art department and conducted workshops on the pinhole camera and other aspects of photography.

Silliman holds the B.A. degree from Emory and Henry College and the M.A. from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. He is presently working on his doctorate from VPI & SU.

Hadden To Give Visiting Scholar Lecture

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS

"The Electronic Church and the Future of the American Political Process" will be the topic of this year's first Visiting Scholar Lecture sponsored by the department of sociology and anthropology at Longwood College.

The lecture will be given by Dr. Jeffrey K. Hadden, professor of sociology at the University of Virginia, on Thursday evening, November 20, at 7:30 in Wygal Building Auditorium. The public is cordially invited to attend the lecture at no charge.

Dr. Hadden is the author of numerous books, including Metropolis in Crisis, The Gathering Storm in the Churches, Religion in Radical Transition, and The Family in American Society. His latest book, entitled Prime Time Preachers, is scheduled for publication in 1981 by Addison-Wesley Publishing Company. He has also published the results of his scholarly research in professional journals, such as Psychology Today, The Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, Social Forces, and others.

A contributing editor to The Christian Ministry, Dr. Hadden has been a research consultant to such organizations as The Danforth Foundation, Educational Testing Service, the National Council of Churches, and the National Urban Coalition. He has held office in local, regional, and national scholarly and professional societies.

In addition to his lecture on November 20, Dr. Hadden will also show a videotape on his research on the Electronic Church at 9 a.m. on November 21 in Studio B of the Hiner Building. The videotape showing is also open to the public.

Longwood's department of sociology and anthropology began its annual Visiting Scholar Series in 1978-79 to provide an opportunity for faculty, students, and the general public to become better informed on topics of vital interest and to hear the results of research conducted by some of America's best known scholars in the field. Students in the department have an opportunity to meet and talk with renowned scholars in their chosen field of study.

Saturday Night Alive Was Laughter And Songs

By TOM STANLEY

This past week end's "Saturday Night Alive" was somewhat different from the traditional evening entertainment. Instead of one performer, the college hosted two: "Mason-Roller Line" and "A. Whitney Brown." The audience was sparse, partly due to the basketball games, but the evening was filled with laughter and songs for those attending.

"Mason-Roller Line" started the show with a set of songs. The duo, consisting of Charlie Mason and Dale Roller has long been a part of Longwood's scheduled entertainment. Both artists will be members of the 1981 graduating class, majoring in music. After graduating they will begin to perform in the college circuit and nightclubs up and down the east coast.

Their music is a moving combination of harmonious vocals and stringed instruments. Both played the guitar during the evening, with Charlie on the folk guitar and Dale strumming the twelve string. In addition to their regular program of songs the duo introduced some of their own material last night. It was received quite well by the attending students. The duo should be a singing success in the college circuit.

"A. Whitney Brown" offered insight into the lifestyles of college students with his sometimes raucous humor. He is a traveling comic with a barrage of jokes about subjects of interest to college students: sex, drugs, the home scene, and life on the road. Brown was especially adept at handling the hecklers in the audience; spouting out one-liners that sometimes reflected on the hecklers lineage or the marital status of his parents.

Brown also performed several juggling acts including his constant juggling of the microphone. He juggled five balls at once, "eight balls", machete-like knives, and fire sticks. Generally, while juggling the various articles, he maintained a running conversation with the audience.

The night was completed by a second set of songs by "Mason-Roller Line." The ending set included solo performances by both men and original material by both performers. Popular songs by Kenny Rogers and John Denver wound up the evening's performance by the duo.

Schrader-Hooker Completes New Film

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS
Independent filmmaker Charlotte Schrader-Hooker has recently completed a new film entitled Elizabeth, John & Mr. Henry.

Set at Red Hill in Charlotte County, Patrick Henry's last home and burial place, the film has big name stars. It records a birthday tribute to Patrick Henry by Elizabeth Taylor and John Warner in May, 1977.

As a preface to the actual ceremonies, the filmmaker has used Patrick Henry's "impassioned plea for liberty" given at St. John's Church in Richmond. The patriot's immortal words are spoken by Tye Heckman. Additional narration is read by David Alexick.

Elizabeth Taylor reads Patrick Henry's obituary, and John Warner remarks upon the governorship, past and present.

The film, a 16 mm. color-sound production, is the fourth documentary made by Dr. Schrader, professor of film studies at Longwood College. Her first film, entitled Paris Suite, was made when she visited the City of Light in 1975. This was followed by Conway Thompson: Sculptor From Dry Bridge which received the 1977 CINE Golden Eagle, top award given by the Council on International Nontheatrical Events (a division of the U.S. Information Agency).

In 1978, she released an expressionist documentary, titled Vanishing Point, on Ashland artist Nancy Camden Witt and her work. This filmmaking project was partially financed by a grant from the Virginia Commission for the Arts.

Dr. Schrader defines independent filmmakers as "people who work on their own and provide their own financing, or receive a grant if they are lucky, for a noncommercial audience." This audience includes educational organizations — schools, libraries, museums — and cultural groups. Another outlet is provided by Independent Cinema Artists and Producers (ICAP) of New York City, which distributes these films to national Cable television.

The independent filmmaker must be proficient at all of the technical requirements, from operating the camera to the final editing. Even more important are the creative aspects of the process — the selection of subject, mood to be engendered, and the visual images and narration which will achieve that mood.

Dr. Schrader uses a 16 mm. Bolex camera and zoom lens. She has what she calls "primitive editing equipment" at home, but goes to the South Carolina Arts Commission for the final editing of her films.

(The South Carolina Arts Commission, according to Dr. Schrader, has been a leader in the Southeast region in the filmmaking area. In addition to allowing filmmakers to use their equipment, this organization also helps with audience development).

A graduate of Texas Woman's University (B.A. and M.A.) and holder of the Ph.D. degree in English from Tulane University, Dr. Schrader returned to college in 1973-75, earning an additional graduate degree in film from New York University.

In her faculty position at Longwood, she teaches classes in film history, genre (documentary, fiction, and avant-garde), and a filmmaking class in which students produce their own short films, using super-8 equipment provided by the college's art department.

In 1979, Dr. Schrader received a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities to attend a summer seminar on "Film and the Affective Response" at New York University.

The next Charlotte Schrader film is already well under way. To be titled The Land Is A Woman, this film will record the life of a vineyard (Rose Bower at Hampden-Sydney, owned by Tom and Bronwyn O'Grady) through a complete growing, harvesting, and bottling cycle.

Art Activities

Tuesday through Friday of this week appears to be a very busy time for Longwood's Art Department. A variety of activities are scheduled throughout this week.

Tuesday, entries for "Artist of the Month" are due between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. The "Artist of the Month" award which was started in October to give student artists all over campus a chance to compete for a $50.00 cash prize and to have their work displayed in the Art Department is now in its second month. All students are invited to enter.

Wednesday, a representative from Marson LTD in Baltimore will be on campus for their yearly sale of original Oriental Art. Between the hours of 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. the Oriental prints will be on display and for sale in the Art Department.

Friday evening is the annual Sully Dinner. The Sully Dinner is an event sponsored by the Art Department for the benefit of the Longwood Fine Arts Center. The speaker this year will be Pamela Mayo. Pam will be giving a short version of her speech that she delivered for the Southeastern College Art Conference. Her talk will be on Lue Osborne and Cordray Simmons, two artists whose works are now on display in the Bedford Gallery.

Holiday Dance Features The Kings Of Swing

Is it that time of year again? Are the holidays really just around the corner? All one needs to do is walk downtown Farmville and through the stores to see that the Holiday season is in. On November 22, "The Kings of Swing" will be the "big band sound" for Longwood's Holiday Dance.

The Kings of Swing have been together for four years and their music arrangement travels from the forties on down through the seventies. They are especially well known throughout the country club circuit but they have also performed at the National Republican Governor's Convention in Williamsburg, Cavalier Hotel in Virginia Beach, and the Tobacco Festival Ball in Richmond.

There are sixteen instrumentalists, all males, with the exception of Pam Weller, who is a music major at VCU, and plays the trombone. Mr. Bruce Swartz directs the band, correlating old pop with new pop tunes.

Aside from the musical rhythm, "The Kings of Swing" also have a little bit of a stage show. For instance when the band performs Les Brown's, "Leap Frog," the five member saxophone section acts out the gimmick of "Leap Frog" motion exercises which quite often turns out to be a crowd pleaser.

Usually a nostalgic band, "The Kings of Swing" have also incorporated disco tunes as well as a little bit of rock. Come on out, and have a good time but hurry, limited admission ($25). Tickets are $5.50 a couple and the night of entertainment begins at 9:30 in the downstairs dining hall. This will be a semi-formal-formal dance. Have a good time and Happy Holidays!

The party is on the 21st of November at the Farmville Armory. Fifteen schools in the state and North Carolina and Pennsylvania have been the targets for advertisement. The party will feature 4½ hours of non-stop music with Reunion of Richmond; playing beach, dance and party music (top 40), and Southbound playing Southern rock, bluegrass, Lynard Skynard, Molly Hatchet, Allman Bros., etc. The Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control has issued a license for beer sales. So, much beer will be in supply.

Special thanks go to I. B. Dent for his cooperation in the event, and helping to make this the largest non-student union event in Longwood's history.

MS Meeting

Hello,

The time has come to plan for the 1981 Muscular Dystrophy Superdance to be held in March. Last year the students alone raised over 6,000 dollars. This year my goal is to get the ENTIRE Longwood College Community involved. I hope you will be interested in helping, the only way to win the battle against Muscular Dystrophy is for everyone to work together. There will be an organizational meeting November 19, at 6:30 p.m., Honors Council Room, in Lankford Building. Please try to come! A variety of resources are needed, there will be something to fit each person's interests, time and talents. If you are unable to attend but are interested in finding out more, contact me at Box 859 or 392-6826. Hope to see you there!

Sincerely,
Debra Spencer
Chairman, 1981 MD

Editor's Turn

Participation, Communication, Involvement... these words are among the many that we hear every day. They are very important words to remember when we start complaining about the way things are run.

The Student Government Association has made a lot of improvements over the past year. The Legislative Board has been responsible for investigating many complaints and problems. Their two major steps have been the student representative to the Board of Visitors and the restructuring of the Student Government.

The executive committee has put in many long and hard hours of work in order to bring about these changes. We should be very grateful to them for their effort.

With the restructuring of the Student Government, there are a lot of positions that need to be filled next semester, and Major-Minor elections are nearing.

If we turn back the pages of time one year, we will remember what a hard time the elections committee had getting people to run. Yet, this year, there have been complaints like always.

This is not meant to say that you should not complain when something is wrong, but it is meant to say that you should not complain if you are not willing to help do something about it.

The lack of individual participation leads to the lack of the group's involvement and this leads to an overall lack of communication.

We need to have a lot of people involved in elections this year so that we can get the best possible leaders. Last year, we were lucky to get some good leaders. Our Student Government president, as well as some of the other leaders, has done an excellent job.

Petitions go out today... Pick one up and Get involved!

Saturday night brought Longwood's favorite performing duo back to the stage at Saturday Night Alive. Known to most of us as Charlie and Dale, they are now on their way to fame and success as the Mason-Roller Line.

We wish them luck as they graduate in December and move on to the performing career world. We know that they will be successful wherever they go, but we want them to remember that we at Longwood will be their biggest fans.

Your Turn

This year our aim is to help six families, and to do this we need many people to contribute. Collection times will be Wednesday and Thursday nights of this week with the baskets being distributed Tuesday, November 25. So when a brother comes calling, show a little Longwood tradition and give so that someone else less fortunate can have a happy Thanksgiving because of you.

Thank you,
Brian Whetzel

Thanks From SGA

Dear Students and Administration,
The Student Government

Association would like to thank everyone for their support in passing the new structure. The Association feels that this new structure will unify all the major organizations on campus and allow for more student input into the Student Government.

A special thanks must go to Mr. Field's advertising class for their extensive publicity. We appreciate their hard work. Also we would like to thank President Willett, Dr. Dalton, Dr. Heintz, Dean Gussett, Dean Salters, Dean Swann, Mr. Nanzig, and Neil Sullivan.

He has been involved in Oktoberfest, last year as Junior Class Chairman and this year as the male lead in the skit. Ken has also served as an orientation leader for two years and was recently elected as a co-chairman for this year's Senior Assembly.

"I've seen some changes in Oktoberfest in the past two years. The casts of the skits have been very friendly. This takes some of the sting out of the competition and turns everyone toward a true blue and white spirit. Oktoberfest should be nothing but fun for everyone. Take, for example, paint battle. I'd like to see everyone involved in that, not just the freshmen and the sophomores. I came in as a second semester sophomore, so I missed it. I know of a lot of upperclassmen who would like to do it more than just two years, too."

Longwood College, led by Joe Remar's 16 points, soundly defeated the Scottish National team by a score of 95-33. This was Longwood's first and only exhibition of the season and it appears that the team is going to treat Lancer fans to another outstanding season.

The game was Longwood's from the very beginning when the Lancers jumped to a 14-0 lead. The Lancers continued to apply pressure and at halftime the score was 40-8 in favor of the home-standing Lancers. The final margin of 95-33 was really closer than it should have been.

Longwood will open its regular season, Saturday, November 22, with a game against Maryland Eastern Shore. Come out and support the Lancers!

Gymnast Commended By Hall Of Fame

From Sports Info

As a freshman in 1979, Kathy Idelson received the greatest honor of her gymnastics career when she was chosen as an All-American. The Virginia Sports Hall of Fame extended that honor on October 23 when it recognized Kathy by presenting her with a certificate of merit for her achievement. This award, which has never before been presented to any Longwood Athlete, is given to athletes who have promoted themselves and their team by achieving high athletic standards.

Upon learning of her commendation by the Hall of Fame, Kathy's first comment was, "It's so exciting! It really is a great honor for me."

it's an honor to have someone on the team to be commended, especially since Kathy is the first Longwood athlete to have this happen."

The Annapolis, MD native thinks this award will give her confidence for the upcoming season. "I look forward to this season with hopes of it being my best so far. Overall, the last two seasons were very satisfying, and I hope this year that I can keep the consistency I developed last season."

Kathy, now a junior, looks forward to the season not only for her own goals, but also because she enjoys working with her teammates. "This year's team is really close—we have a lot of team spirit and everyone really encourages each other a lot. I can't wait until competition begins!"

Gymnasts

Prepare For Opener

By LISA SPENSER

The Longwood gymnasts team will open its season Saturday when it travels to Annapolis, MD for a meet with the Naval Academy and East Carolina. This meet will be a new experience for the Lady Lancers because of several rule changes that have occurred this year.

"This meet will be a whole new ballgame," commented Longwood coach Ruth Budd. "There are new rules and the scoring will be much different than we have ever experienced. We have a lot of adjustments to make."

Longwood will be looking to its top two all-around competitors from last season, Sharon Pillow and Kathy Idelson to provide the experience needed to overcome the first meet nervousness.

Coach Budd has not yet determined the line-up for the meet, but she feels confident that she has more than enough talent to choose from. "We have the capability to win this meet. We have more depth than ever before and we are looking better now than we did last year," Budd stated.

This will be the first time the Longwood gymnasts have met with the Naval Academy, but last season they defeated East Carolina in another early-season competition. With the experience of the four returning players and the talent of the eight newcomers, Coach Budd feels that Longwood is ready for the meet. "It should be a good meet, and I know we can win it. The team is excited and eager to get the season underway."

Riding - Places

The Longwood College Riding Team attended a horse show in Harrisonburg on October 23. The show was hosted by James Madison University and Mary Baldwin College. Ribbons were awarded to Pam Svoboda, a fifth place in open on the flat and a fifth place in novice over fences; Jennifer Ferguson, a second place in open on the flat; Brian Farrar, a fourth place in novice on the flat; Robyn Walker, a second place in novice on the flat and a fifth place novice over fences; Carol Gardner, a sixth place in open over fences; and Shannon Chambers, fifth place in novice over fences.

On November 2, Longwood hosted a show with Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg. Longwood did extremely well with 26 total points, one point away from the championship. Unfortunately Longwood was tied for reserve with Sweet Briar College and lost the hack-off. Ribbons were awarded to Pam Svoboda, a fifth place in open on the flat; Carol Gardner, a fourth place in open on the flat; Kathy Redmon, first place in open on the flat and a fifth place in novice over fences; Jennifer Ferguson, a second place in open over fences; Robyn Walker, a first place in novice on the flat and a fifth in novice over fences; Brian Farrar, a third place in novice on the flat and a sixth place in novice over fences; Laurie Dowling, a first place in Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter; and Beth Parker, sixth place in Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter.

The next show will be at Randolph-Macon Women's College in Lynchburg on December 4.

The Riding Team will be working the concession stand in Lancer Hall for all the sports activities. Profits will be going to the Longwood Scholarship fund and to the Riding Team, so come support the future of Longwood sports.

Soccer - A Winning Season

When Longwood topped Hampden-Sydney 2-1 Wednesday Nov. 4 to win the first Farmville Herald Challenge Bowl, the Lancers were assured of their first winning season ever in soccer. With a 7-30-2 record in three previous soccer campaigns, a winning season was one of the goals Longwood hoped to reach in 1980. The Lancers stand 9-7.

"We had the best season of any Longwood team ever," said Coach Rich Pospinko, "but I feel we would have finished 12-4 if we had played up to our potential all the way. We played six teams that were either ranked in the nation or in the region and we held our own with all of them."

"We have proven ourselves as strong competitors in our area," the coach continued, "and now we're already looking forward to next year."

Pospinko will have his entire starting lineup returning next season, if not the whole team.

With two goals against Hampden-Sydney, soph Gus Leal closed out the season with 16 goals and two assists for 34 points. Not far behind were freshman Tim Brennan with nine goals and four assists and junior Dana Gregg with nine goals and one assist. Longwood outscored its foes 45-28.

Setting school records in virtually every category, Longwood outshot its opponents 481-293 while averaging 2.8 goals per game to the opponents' 1.75. Goalie Jeff Carino had 112 saves in 13 games while giving up just 20 goals. The Lancer defense limited opposing teams to one or no goals in nine games.

Sports Profile

By MARK K. SEGAL

If you had a name like Madeline Moose you might just get a few wise cracks in honor of one of those big brown fur-covered beasts. No. She doesn't wear permanent press, drip-dry "moose suits" either. She is 5'11" Madeline Patricia Moose. The attractive girl nobody wants to call "the moose" unless she is a good friend of yours.

One just doesn't know what to think about such an imposing figure, but if you have ever seen her play volleyball you would know her size was used proportionately to spike that round white ball down the throat of some intimidated opponent.

Longwoods nineteen year old sophomore comes from Silver Spring, Maryland where she attended Montgomery Blair High School. There she played volleyball for three years while lettering for two. She swam for two years lettering in both. She also played softball for 3 years and lettered for two years. She was a member of the National Honor Society and was the president of the Girls Service Club.

At Longwood the volleyball team got off to a slow start, but picked up a head full of steam as the season progressed. Madeline explained "we get very moody (the team) and when the team is up we do very well. But when a few of the girls feel bad the outcome of the team can be poor." She also explained that the team "had the talent to do a lot better."

Madeline has big blue-green eyes that could pierce a charging bull. She speaks fluently with her eyes and hands and has a cuddly friendliness that can't be beat. She explains "that I am always very busy." She likes photography and used to develop her own pictures until "I didn't have time anymore." She works in the dining hall during school and in the summer she plays softball on two different teams in addition to summer league soccer. She is slowly working on a nursing degree because "I like to help people." A masters degree in community health would top the agenda for her future. She loves to cook big meals and also enjoys sewing. Madeline is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Moose, of Silver Spring, Maryland.

Lady Lancers Fall To Old Dominion

By KAY SCHMIDT

If you were one of the 1800 spectators at Saturday night's women's basketball exhibition game, you can vouch that the final score was not indicative of the Lady Lancer's performance. At 7:00 in Lancer Hall, underdog Division II Longwood faced overpowering, two time Division I national champion, Old Dominion. Despite the fact that the odds were against them the Longwood Squad came into the game with the attitude that they would play their best. Although losing 113-37, the Lady Lancers played an aggressive game and never gave up. Yes Longwood, you can be proud of your women's basketball team.

Old Dominion finished 37-1 last year and have claimed the Division I national championship title for the past two years. This year ranked second by the Philadelphia Inquirer pre-season poll, they were an uneven match for the Longwood team. The tall, aggressive Lady Monarchs proved superior both offensively and defensively. Because of an extreme height disadvantage, the Lady Lancers were unable to stop Old Dominion's 6'8" Anne Donovan who scored an incredible 27 points and grabbed 18 rebounds.

Longwood who finished 11-19 and fourth at the VAAW Division II State Tournament a year ago, were unable to penetrate Old Dominion's tight defense. Shooting mostly from the outside they made only 20.3 per cent of their field goals as compared to 62.3 per cent from ODU. The Lady Monarchs also dominated in rebounding, pulling down 60 to Longwood's 28.

Coping well with the constant pressure from the ODU defense was Robin Hungate, leading scorer with 10 points. Theresa "T.J." Ferrante, who headed up the defense with 7 rebounds said, "I think the full court pressure from Old Dominion really hurt us. I feel we played well considering who we were up against. We learned a lot from the game, which should help us in the future."

Saturday, November 22 Longwood takes on William and Mary in their first regular season home game. Come out and support the Lady Lancers at 2:00 in Lancer Hall.

Volleyball is very much underway. The top teams in the winner's bracket in the Men's Division are Boinkers I and Frazer Fire. The top four teams in the loser's bracket are Pi Kappa Phi, Keggers (Sigma Phi Epsilon), Boinkers II and the Hampster Haters. In the Women's Division, the top team in the winner's bracket is the Curry Crusty's. The top three teams in the loser's bracket are Sigma Kappa, Alpha Sigma Tau, and the Southern Comforters.

Billiards is moving slowly because of the large participation.

Swimming relays will take place on Wednesday, November 19 from 6 to 8 p.m. in Lancer Pool. There are 7 women's teams and ten men's teams participating. Spectators are welcome at this event.

Don't forget about the Basketball Entry Blanks. They are due by December, and play will begin in January.

Catalinas Place In Regionals

By CHRIS TULLINGTON

The Catalinas have just returned from a successful showing at the National Institute of Creative Aquatics Regional competition held at the University of Richmond on November 8. Two routines from Longwood were entered in Regionals, one entitled "Rocky", and the other, a duet, entitled "Jazz". The Catalinas are very proud of "Rocky" for qualifying to represent Longwood at Nationals, which will be held at William and Mary College in April.

Congratulations to Susan Hall, Beth Licari, Berni Toner and Frances Vavlioukis for passing the swimming skills test.

NO. 11

New Alma Mater Written By Egbert, Vest

The newly proposed Alma Mater of Longwood College was submitted to the Board of Visitors at their last meeting. It now awaits final approval in February before becoming an official document of the college.

The new Alma Mater was written by Dr. Quentin Vest, associate professor of English and composed by Dr. Louard E. Egbert, chairman of the department of Music.

An ad-hoc committee was set up by the dean of the college, Dr.

Carolyn Wells, for the purpose of writing a new Alma Mater. Contests were held with students and others submitting entries for the school song. Many ideas finally led to Dr. Egbert and Dr. Vest's version.

Members of the committee changed over the years. It now consists of Dr. Egbert, Dr. Vest, Mrs. Nancy Shelton, Alumni director; Miss Patricia Lust, music department faculty, and Larry Smith, a music major.

The former Alma Mater was written by a Longwood alumnae and took approximately three minutes to perform. This version was the official Alma Mater before the college went co-educational five years ago. It is not to be confused with the "Joan of Arc" song. The new version takes approximately one minute to perform, according to Dr. Egbert.

The Camerata Singers

performed the song for the Board of Visitors at their November meeting. The board decided not to approve the Alma Mater until students and alumni were allowed the opportunity to hear the work.

Dr. Vest and Dr. Egbert were given a chance to make any last minute changes after the first performance of the piece. No changes were made in the music or words.

Since that time, the Alma Mater has been played on the local radio stations. The Concert Choir and several members of the Vocal Arts Ensemble performed the piece for the Fall Pops Concert. Plans are being made for the distribution of the music to both students and alumni.

Responses to the proposed Alma Mater may be submitted to The Rotunda or any member of the committee.

Major-Minors Set

By BRENDA COLEMAN

On Tuesday, December 3, the candidates for the Student Government Association Major-Minor Elections will present their speeches before the student body at 7 p.m. in the Red-White-Green Rooms. These speeches are very important in that the students have an opportunity to see and hear each individual candidate and ask questions in the open forum that follows the speeches.

Elections Committee Chairman Beki Lee urges the student body to attend the speeches. "The students need to come to the speeches so that they can understand the positions since the restructuring of the Student Government Association." Beki hopes that the apathy that has plagued the past Major-Minor elections will disappear in this election. Many people in the past have felt disgusted at themselves for not becoming involved and voting in these really important campus elections.

Voting will take place on Wednesday, December 3 in the Rotunda and in front of the Snack Bar. Two extra referendums will be placed on the ballots in addition to the candidates and their offices. These questions concern a proposed tutoring service for Longwood students. The student body will decide whether or not they want a tutoring service and if they will use this service if it is made available.

Busy Elves

By PAM UPDIKE

The 1980 elves are busy preparing for their week of festivities which will take place on December 1-6. Ruth Anne Bailey has been chosen to lead this group, as head elf. Because of a heavy load this semester, Carl Ellis will be unable to participate so alternate Nita Richardson, a Social Work major from Staunton, Va. will fill in to make the thirteenth elf.

On December 1, the elves will begin by appearing in their elf suits at 7 a.m. for breakfast. Tuesday, the elves will visit the Campus School at 1 p.m. Then at 5 p.m., the elves will decorate the huge tree in the Rotunda. They will also sing Christmas carols.

On Wednesday, November 3, the annual "Twining of the Greens," will take place in the Rotunda. Thursday, the elves will be holding out their caps for the Shower of Pennies, from 5 to 6 p.m. The money collected for this will go to the Freshman Scholarship fund. From 8-9 the elves will present their original skit in the Gold Room.

On Friday the elves will visit the Campus Day Care Center at 10:15 a.m. From 5-6 they will sing in the Rotunda. Saturday they will visit the elderly at Holly Manor Nursing Home, and on Sunday they will accompany Santa Claus in the Farmville Christmas Parade which will start at 2 p.m.

Procedures To Stop Discrimination

By JOE JOHNSON

When was the last time you've been discriminated against because of age, nationality, race, sex or handicap at Longwood? (Probably never, but if you have been, don't sit around and complain to your friends about it.) Now there is a regular procedure to follow for any form of discrimination at Longwood.

The procedure is called the Students' Grievance Procedures for Allegations of Discrimination. Its originator is Dr. T.C. Dalton, Administrative Assistant to the President. In the past, he had announcements posted in the Daily Bulletin at the beginning of each semester as follows: "Longwood College is an Equal Opportunity-Affirmative Action Institution. The College does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, political affiliation, marital status or because a person is handicapped, a disabled veteran, or a veteran of the Vietnam era. Individuals with questions or concerns regarding discrimination should contact Dr. T.C. Dalton."

In August of 1980, Mr. Thomas Baynham became Longwood's new Affirmative Action Coordinator. His job and the procedure to go through if you have a grievance are all explained in the Students' Grievance Procedures for Allegations of Discrimination.

The procedure begins by explaining its purpose which is to "provide informal and formal procedures for the prompt, orderly, and equitable resolution of a grievance which may arise as a result of the implementation of the College's policies and practices. This grievance procedure may be used by students when a difference, complaint, or dispute alleging such discrimination arises between a student and another student, or a faculty member, or an administrator of the College with respect to the equal, fair, and impartial application, meaning, or interpretation of the rules, policies, procedures, and regulations of the College as they affect the educational activity of the grievant. This grievance procedure will operate only with respect to differences, complaints, and disputes alleging such discrimination and will not replace or supersede currently operative policies and procedures regarding student rights and the College judicial and residence hall systems. If there is a dispute concerning the jurisdiction of a grievance the Affirmative Action Coordinator and the Vice President for Student Affairs will determine which procedure will be used."

The procedure consists of four levels. On the first level the student with the grievance discusses the matter directly with the party or parties involved. If this does not achieve a satisfactory conclusion to the problem, a student can go to level two which is contacting the supervisor of the party(s) involved. He may at this point, contact the Affirmative Action Coordinator to determine who is said party's superior. If this does not get adequate results, the student may meet with Dr. Salters, Vice President for Student Affairs. The fourth level, should the third level prove unsatisfactory, is a formal complaint made to the College President. It requires the filling out of a Grievance Procedure Form which is provided with the "Students' Grievance Procedures for Allegations of Discrimination". It is merely a questionnaire asking for name, address, telephone number and description of grievance. The President will give his decision within ten days. If the student is still dissatisfied, there is one last step, which is to appeal the decision to the Executive Committee of the Board of Visitors.

The decision of the Executive Committee of the Board of Visitors is final and any reprisals made by the student could result in disciplinary action.

Dear Mom and Dad,

Please don't be angry about last night's game. I'm sorry for not being the superstar you want me to be. Sometimes I don't know who to listen to; you or the coach. Last night you kept yelling at me to shoot the ball but I couldn't because the coach had told me not to shoot since Billy could shoot better. I want to make you proud of me (especially in front of your friends) but I guess I'm just not great in sports. Someday I'll be the best at something but right now I just want to keep having "fun" when I play sports. I have a good time, even when we lose!

Todd

Caper.' It is a food microbiology project testing whether or not slow cookers can heat food to a high enough temperature to kill any microorganisms that are present. I've been working on the project for nearly a year. We put the proposal in last December. Second semester last year we worked on getting funds to buy the equipment with and I've been researching all of this semester. I'll eventually begin writing the paper next semester."

In addition to her honors project, Cheryl, a native of Pittsville, Maryland, is also involved in many other activities and organizations. She is presently president of the Honors Council as well as vice-president of Kappa Omicron Phi, the home economics honorary. She is a member of Geist and serves as senior advisor to Alpha Lambda Delta, the freshman honorary. Cheryl has an additional responsibility as the president of the Longwood Chapter of the Virginia Home Economics Association-Student Member Section and is a member of the Wesley Foundation. To top all of that off, she is minoring in business administration and works 8-10 hours a week as a lab assistant in the child development lab.

When does she have time to study? "Being involved means a lot to me and I find the time to do everything I need to do when I'm busy. I've thoroughly enjoyed being in Geist because I've had the opportunity to meet more people outside of my home ec activities. I enjoy being in campus-wide activities."

"I'm glad I came to Longwood because of the good home economics department and because of the people. Some of the traditions have been modified to fit the changing times because the school is changing.

We've had our problems, but they will work out in the long run.

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"The biggest complaint I have is the fact that people incorrectly view home economics as simply being able to cook and sew. Very few see home ec. as the science that it is. Home Ec is a serious subject related toward helping people. We are, to borrow a statement, a people centered profession."

And senior Cheryl Adkins obviously takes her home economics major very seriously. She is now in the process of working on an honors project. "The official title of the paper is 'The Survival of Salmonella typhimurium in chickens cooked in a slow cooker' or in other words, The Crock Pot Project

Price Enjoys Visit

To the Editors of The Rotunda: I hope you will print this letter for I know of no other way to express my gratitude for the warm welcome given me at Longwood for my play Divisions and Delights.

Thanks to Bonnie Conner, Sherry Forbes, Nina Leffue and all those who worked with them at the theatre to make the presentation a success for the audience and a joy for me to play.

Thanks to I. B. Dent for his many kindnesses and personal concern for my comfort.

The welcome given me by my Brothers at Alpha Sigma Phi was overwhelming and the honor bestowed on me by CHI is one I shall always cherish.

I hope we all meet again so I can say thanks "in person."

Sincerely,
Vincent Price

CHI Is Commended

I would like to thank you, on behalf of the total College community, for the banner you presented to the College on November 15. It was a thoughtful gesture on the part of your membership and one that will long be appreciated by all of us. The role that Chi plays in fostering the Blue and White spirit is extremely important and we commend you for it.

Sincerely,
Henry I. Willett, Jr.

Crow Party Success

The brothers of Alpha Chi Rho would like to thank the student body of LC on their attendance at their first annual Founders Day party. Hampden-Sydney, Virginia Tech, U.Va. and Southside Community College followed Longwood in attendance at that respective order.

The surprise of the evening was the under-rated band Southbound. These four boys from Richmond played Southern rock at its best against their opponent's Reunion.

Mark Segal, committee head, reports that the fraternity made enough money to make some hearty charity donations. And AXP president Kenny Marcus wants to formally thank the brothers for their hard work on Friday night, and I. B. Dent for his cooperation, the Town of Farmville, and the crowd for behaving without incident.

Do Your Share

Dear Editor,

After talking with my fellow waiter and waitresses, we feel that a letter to the student body is appropriate. We are upset with the conduct in the Dining Hall. Perhaps many students are unaware that students are supposed to stack their plates at the end of a family style meal. Also, at the end of a buffet meal they are supposed to take up their trays. There is no excuse for not doing these small favors for your fellow students. We get paid, but not enough to be maids. The majority of students that work in the Dining Hall are doing so to pay for their tuition and those students who are lucky enough not to have to work should not make it rough on those that do.

It seems funny that when students come through the lines they are so nice to us because they want more than one serving of food but yet when we do give them a favor, they return our kindness with garbage on the table. It makes us think and question the age group that is using the Dining Hall. Recently I talked with one of the maids that work in the Dining Hall and she said that they only have one hour to clean up after each meal and with the mess that students leave they often have to cut in on their break periods to finish the work. This is not fair.

The only solution to this problem is to have more student help. The next time you consider not taking up your tray think about your fellow students.

Williams Makes His Tenth Appearance

By SHEILA GOLLHARDT

Tonight in the Red-White-Green rooms at 8:30 p.m., Sound Gallery will have the pleasure of presenting MIKE WILLIAMS. Mike has been performing at Longwood for ten years now. He describes himself as an "irreverent country folk 12-string guitar picker and song writer." His stories flow naturally and he always stays one step ahead of his audience. His songs and tales are about his life (about 100 years of adventures crammed into 35 years). Much of his material is humorous because he doesn't take life too seriously. He has total respect for his audience and sometimes involves his listeners. Mike says "Every audience deserves my very best."

Some of Mike's songs have been recorded by John Denver, Mike Cross, The Irish-Rovers, plus many more. He has opened for such entertainers as Jimmy Buffett, Olivia Newton-John, Elvin Bishop, Michael Murphey, as well as many other top artists.

If you have seen Mike previously, you will want to see him again; If you haven't ever seen him, you're in for a real surprise!

Fashion Show

By CAROLE KEY

There was a full house in the Gold Room last Wednesday when the Home Economics Fashion Merchandising class put on their fashion show. It was entitled "La Mode en Hiver." Several categories of fashions were modeled. They included Career, Classics, Ski Valley, Great Masters (designers), and Social Hour. There were 34 models in all — five male and the remaining female. Two of the main attractions of the Fashion Show were the free admission and the giving away of door prizes. There were sixteen door prizes given in all, which had a lot of people leaving the show happy!

The clothes used in the Fashion Show came from Baldwins, Page Foster Inc. (Charlottesville), Ski Reliance (Richmond), and the Slack Shack. The "showstopper" was a light brown tweed wool skirt and blazer from Page Foster Inc. that retailed over $300.00!!

The "Fashion Directors" of the show were Cary Bell and Julie Compton and their hard work in coordinating everything together was well rewarded by the success of "La Mode en Hiver!"

Heaney Discusses Energy

By PUBLIC AFFAIRS

"We have some serious energy problems," stated John E. Heaney, public relations manager for Conoco Inc. (Continental Oil Company). He added, though, that the United States does not have an energy crisis.

Heaney spoke on the topic of energy in Jeffers Auditorium, Thursday afternoon. In his talk, he emphasized that the energy problem was an international political problem. "The problem," stated Heaney, "began in 1973 with the oil embargo." The United States had a crisis then which was caused by the Arab-Israeli War.

The problem of 1980's is caused by the Iran-Iraq war. Heaney predicted that if the United States does not raise production by mid to late 1981, there will be an increase in the price of oil, as well as a shortage.

He explained several domestic long-range solutions to the rising problem.

"If we don't increase coal production, we may not make it for the next ten years." He added that the government must reduce environmental regulations.

Another solution, according to Heaney, is to make synthetic fuels an economically sound industry. He explained to the audience that the syn-fuels industry is a private corporation being funded by the Windfalls Profits Tax. "When the gas lines came, they (the government) raised their heads and saw a need for syn-fuels. They felt they needed to step in to get the industry started."

He stated that Conoco is going to concentrate on oil, gas, coal, and synthetic fuels.

Heaney joined Conoco in 1974 as public relation manager in Houston and was transferred to Washington, D.C. in 1979.

Before joining Conoco, Heaney was with General Dynamics Corporation, St. Louis, serving as corporate director of news and public relations. He has also been associated with Rockwell International and Shell Oil Company.

A native of Memphis, Tenn., he is a graduate of the University of Oklahoma school of journalism and was a reporter for the Memphis Press-Scimitar, Tulsa World, and United Press International in Oklahoma City.

Last Wednesday, entries for "Artist of the Month" were judged by the faculty members of the Art Department. The result of the judging was a tie between two students for first place. Sally Lowe and Carol Cordes will be sharing the title of "Artist of the Month" for the month of November.

Sally Lowe is a Longwood Senior from Staunton, Virginia with a double major in Art and Government. Sally's main areas of concentration as an Art Major have been printing, drawing, and ceramics. Her winning pieces were drawings of animal skulls on handmade paper. In regard to her drawings Sally states, "I have always been interested in the anatomical forms of various animals. In order to draw and paint living things, it is necessary to understand their muscle and bone structure."

Co-winner Carol "Cricket" Cordes is a Junior at Longwood majoring in Art Education. A native of the Richmond area, she attended Highland Springs High School. In the summer of 1977 she was selected to attend the Governor's School for the Gifted and Talented. Last year she was the recipient of the Art Department Scholarship Award. "Cricket's" main areas of concentration are ceramics, painting, and printmaking. The winning ceramic container form was constructed from stoneware slabs and completed in a Raku firing. Another of Cricket's Raku containers is currently on exhibit in the "Virginia Craftsmen 1980" show at the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts in Richmond.

Second place in this month's contest went to Neil Sawyer with third place ending in a three-way tie between Betty Chapman, Guy de Ladurantaye, and Jennifer Hughlett.

Sally Lowe's and Carol Cordes's winning works will be on display in the Art Department for the rest of the month.

Annual Christmas Concert Performed

Opening the Christmas Yule season, the Longwood College Concert Choir and Camerata Singers performed the annual Christmas Concert at the Farmville Baptist Church, November 23, 4 p.m. The concert was dedicated to the Hostages in Iran.

Featured in the concert were two guest musicians. Elizabeth Graham, the principal harpist for the Richmond Symphony, was guest harpist. Ms. Graham is pursuing a MM at Virginia Commonwealth University and has a teaching studio at the University of Virginia.

Accompanied by Ms. Graham, the Concert Choir performed Benjamin Britten's A Ceremony of Carols. Solos included "That Yonge Child" by Nancy Agee, "Balulalow" by Bonnie Conner, and "Spring Carol" by Joanne Mosca and Connie Reeves.

Sherry Griffith was the guest organist for the Cameratas. Ms. Griffith returned to Longwood as the recipient of the 1979 Distinguished Music Alumna. She received her BME from Longwood in 1971 and has since received her MM from the University of Richmond.

The Camerata Singers performed Magnificat in D by Johann Sebastian Bach. Solos were given by Rebecca Nunez, Andrea, Mott, Douglas Blevins, Elaine McDonald, Michael Gould, Sue Wilkinson, and Joanne Mosca.

The groups will possibly perform several of their numbers in Lankford in December for the college community. Included in this performance would be familiar Christmas Carols.

Ladyhouse Blues News

By PAM UPDIKE

Ladyhouse Blues is one of the most difficult plays to produce technically. Part of the reason is the time period in which the play is written. Some of the other reasons include, voices off-stage that must be heard throughout the audience, and many involved light cues. There are no black-outs during the scene changes, and since the play involves two days, the lights must project the changes in the time of day.

The Longwood Players have had a lot of obstacles in trying to produce this show. "We have had to rent a light board for a fairly large amount of money because the light board in Jarman is so antiquated, that it won't handle the cues needed for the show," stated Jeff Sledjeski, stage manager. Sledjeski is responsible for correlating all of the technical aspects of the show and must work very closely with the actors, directors, and crews. Sledjeski describes his role as, "receiving and giving lots of bull —."

The light board in Jarman is dangerous and despite numerous attempts to get a new one, the drama department is still stuck with the old one. Students are afraid to use it and there have been some instances where students have received electric shocks from the board. On a humorous note, Sledjeski added, "The light board is older than some of the jello served in the dining hall."

The costumes for the show are very intricate. They are designed for the year 1919 and the costume crew is even designing a corset for one of the characters.

The majority of the props that will be used in the show are antiques. One major problem the prop crew has run into is finding watermelons. At one point in the play, the characters are making watermelon rind pickle and it is difficult to find watermelons this time of year.

Ladyhouse Blues, though serious, has a great deal of humor and warmth, stated Dr. Douglas Young, Director. The play will open on Dec. 3.

Sophomore forward Cindy Eckel helped Longwood's women's basketball team get off to a strong start last week when she scored 42 points and grabbed 20 rebounds in two games, and for her performance she has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period November 14-21.

Eckel, who scored over 1,000 points in her prep career at South Plainfield High School, experienced a disappointing freshman season, but seems to be coming into her own this year. She poured in her prep career at South Plainfield High School, experienced a disappointing freshman season, but seems to be coming into her own this year. "We're really excited about Cindy's play thus far," said Longwood head coach Carolyn Hodges. "Her offensive performance has been outstanding. She is playing much more aggressively than she did last season."

A second team All-State performer in high school, Eckel was also proficient in track and cross country. Also a standout in the classroom, she was chosen as South Plainfield High's Scholar-Athlete in her senior year.

Gymnastics

By LISA SPENCER

The Longwood gymnastics team travelled to Annapolis, Md., Saturday where it defeated both the Naval Academy and East Carolina with the highest team score ever in a season opener.

Longwood compiled a team total of 120.35 points, while East Carolina had 112.25 and Navy finished with 100.65. The Lady Lancers dominated the meet, winning all four events and claiming all but three places.

Performing in front of a hometown crowd, junior Kathy Idelson was the standout for the Lancer gymnasts. Kathy captured first place in three events, including her highest score in vaulting (8.7). Also winning the beam and floor exercise, Kathy took the all-around title with 31.7 points.

Teammate Sharon Pillow placed second in all-around (30.8) and first in bars. She also took second places in both vaulting and floor exercise, and fourth place in the beam.

Freshman Monica Chandler finished third in the all-around competition with 29.8 points. Unhindered by the fact that it was her first collegiate competition, Monica placed second in bars, third in floor, and fourth in vaulting. Sophomore Margie Fanton finished third in vaulting, and freshman Kim Pickel placed fourth in beam.

Coach Ruth Budd was pleased with the team's performance in their first meet, and hopes the season will continue as well. "For a first meet, we did really well," she said.

Longwood's next competition will be December 5, at James Madison with Slippery Rock.

Men's Basketball

By JOHN TODD

The Longwood College basketball team opened its season on a positive note by defeating Maryland-Eastern Shore 62-54. This was Longwood's first victory as a Division II school and their first regular season victory in Lancer Hall.

Longwood started the game off slowly with Maryland grabbing an early lead. The Lancers looked tense during the opening minutes but loosened up as the game went on. Toward the end of the half the Lancers took the lead and were never to lose it. The half ended with Longwood ahead 30-28.

The second half opened with Longwood increasing their lead by fast breaking. Guards Joe Remar and Jim Sixsmith led the team with seven and three assists respectively and were the key to the fast break.

Transfer Mike Mcroey was the key to the Lancers' defense as he came up with four steals to lead the team in that category. The team played excellent defense throughout the game, making Maryland take poor percentage shots.

The game ended with Longwood winning easily 62-54.

Sophomore Ron Orr led the Lancers in scoring with 21 points. Freshman Jerome Kersey played a strong game all around. Kersey was the leading rebounder with 12 and second leading scorer with nine points. Other people who played well were Albert Jay, Achian Tee, Mike Wills, Darwell Jenkins, and Thomas Austin.

Longwood plays Lincoln College on Monday at home and Salem College on Wednesday away. The Lancers will also play in the Augusta Tip-Off Tourney during Thanksgiving.

Women's Basketball

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's women's basketball team opened its regular season last week slipping close to George Mason 62-66, then rebounding to defeat St. Mary's, Md. 97-44 and William and Mary 59-65. The 97 point victory over St. Mary's set a new school record for most points scored in a single game. The old record of 94 points was scored against Roanoke in 1974.

The Lady Lancers now hold a 2-1 overall and 1-1 Division II record. Last week they were led by 5'10" sophomore Cindy Eckel, who scored a remarkable 57 points in three games, averaging 19 points per game. Senior tri-captain Brenda Fettrow, who is averaging 12.7 points per game, leads the team with 10 assists and 17 steals. Top rebounders for the week include Cindy Eckel 27, Robyn Goff 19, and Brenda Fettrow 17.

Tuesday the Lady Lancers traveled to George Mason where they were edged 62-66. Head Coach Carolyn Hodges cites the defeat was due to poor field goal percentages, where Longood fell to the Lady Patriots 32 per cent to 41.2 per cent.

Wednesday Longwood visited St. Mary's, overpowering them 97-44. With four players scoring in the double digits — Cindy Eckel 18, Brenda Fettrow 16, Joanne McAllister 15, and Robin Hungate 10 — Longwood set a new school record for most points scored in a game.

In their first regular season home game Saturday, the Lady Lancers defeated Division II foe William and Mary 59-65. An exciting game, Longwood at one time in the first half held a 10 point lead, later to trail by one point in the second half. Helping to regain the lead was sophomore Patty Lia who scored eight points in two minutes during the second half. Scoring in the double digits were Cindy Eckel and Robin Hungate with 15 points, Brenda Fettrow 14, and Patty Lia 12.

The next home women's basketball game will be December 4 at 7:00 p.m. against Liberty Baptist. Come out and support the Lady Lancers.

By PAM UPDIKE
Nine seniors have been chosen to represent Longwood College in Who's Who Among American Colleges and Universities. These students are chosen on a basis of scholarship, leadership in academic and extracurricular activities, citizenship, service to their school, and promise of future usefulness.

Nominations were made earlier in the year by the Department Chairmen, Advisors of the SGA Boards, IAA, Student Union and Geist, Senior Class. Sponsors, and the 1980 senior members of CHI.

Major-Minor Returns

By BRENDA COLEMAN

Last Wednesday, the student body elected the new major-minor officers for the Student Government Association. The SGA has undergone drastic revision and restructuring in the past year. This new restructure will go into effect in January, 1981 with our newest SGA officers manning these leadership positions.

The new president of the student government is Sharon Harrup. Sharon, a junior TR major from Courtland, has been involved in Legislative Board as a representative and as last year's treasurer. She is a member of AET Social Sorority and is involved in many class activities. Nancy Warren is the vice-president of the student senate. She is the former recording secretary of Legislative Board and is treasurer of the Junior Class.

Brenda Coleman will serve in the position of Chairman of Judicial Board. Brenda, an English major from South Hill, is the past editor of The Virginian and presently works on The Rotunda staff. She has served on the Judicial Board since her freshman year and was an usher in this past year's Oktoberfest. The new vice-chairman will be Judy Clement. Judy, an elementary education major, is very involved in her class activities. The secretary of the board is Suzanne Fraillie. Suzanne is the vice-president of the sophomore class and is a member of AET social sorority. Karen Savarese, a member of AGD social sorority and a basketball player for two years, will serve as the Sophomore Investigator for Judicial Board.

The newly named position of Chairman of Residence Hall Life Committee will be filled by Christi Lewis of Gloucester. She has served on Legislative Board for two years including last year's office as corresponding secretary. She is a social work major and a member of AET social sorority. HPER major Vicki Matthewson was elected chairman of the Campus Life Committee. Vicki, a resident of Phoenix, Arizona, has been on Legislative Board one year and is involved in her class' activities.

Dallas Bradbury will be serving the student body as the new Chairman of Orientation. Dallas, a business administration major from Chesterfield, serves as the chaplain of AXP social fraternity. He is the sports editor of The Rotunda, has participated in class activities, and was recognized by Geist as an usher in Oktoberfest 1980.

yearbook staff and is a member of the Student Auxiliary Police Force. Winona Bayne is the new vice-chairman of IAA. She is a member of AET Social Sorority and has been involved in orientation.

The new chairman of the Student Union is Jerry Richman. Jerry, a native of Thoms Brook, Va., has served as Vice-Chairman of SUN and as a participant in class activities. Melissa Sager, an active member of SUN, will be the new Vice-Chairman.

Art In Hand

By NEIL SAWYER

An exhibit of twenty-nine international shopping bags will be on display in the Lancaster Library Gallery until December 17. The exhibition was originally assembled and loaned to the Virginia Museum's traveling art shows by Graphis. Graphis is the leading graphic design publication worldwide.

The exhibit holds special interest for its commercial design quality and the great variety of styles displayed. The shopping bags represented come from a wide range of stores and packaging industries such as Macy's in New York, Galleries Lafayette in Paris and Kaufmann Boutique, Zurich.

Lancaster Library gallery hours are: Monday through Thursday, 7:45 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Friday, 7:45 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Saturday, 12:30 to 5 p.m.; and Sunday, 2 to 10 p.m.

Longwood's enchanting elves close the largely attended Farmville Christmas parade sponsored by the area Jaycees.

Student Wages Increase

By MELODY CRAWLEY

Marvin Ragland announced Thursday an increase in student work study wages. The announcement was made at a meeting with work study supervisors. As of October 1, 1980, all work study students will be paid minimum wage ($3.10 hourly). The change was made due to the Educational Amendment which now govern colleges to pay minimum wage to students. Before this time, the dining hall workers and Student Auxiliary Police were the only work study students to receive minimum wage.

The change in the amendment means that a student will receive the same amount of money, but work less hours, according to Ragland.

Benjamin H. Johnson, Director of Accounts Payable, gave the supervisors a formula to figure out student hours.

When a student picks up their November check, they will receive two checks. One check will pay the 20 cents per hour increase for October. The other check will be for November with the increase included.

Craft Lectures On Sin

By JODIKERSEY

On December 1, Dr. Carolyn Craft, Professor of English, gave a Departmental Seminar at the Alumni House entitled "The Usefulness of Sin: The Case of Lancelot and Guinevere". The lecture, based on the version by Thomas Mallory, was attended by a small appreciative group.

The lecture was intriguing not only because of the information revealed about Lancelot and Guinevere, but the thought-provoking themes that were encompassed in the story by Dr. Craft. The lecture concerned the paradox of heightened spiritual perception through sin, thereby creating a usefulness and need for sin.

Dr. Craft explained how Lancelot had to turn to evil and learn to be a sinner in order to achieve sainthood. "Only through the knowledge of passionate sin", continued Dr. Craft, "could he obtain self-confidence in life through passionate love of God". This paradox can be compared to the crucifixion of Christ which brought redemption. The lecture's interesting theme considered the paradox that out of evil comes love.

"Lancelot lacked spiritual perception", said Dr. Craft, "because his understanding of love centered around worship, reward, and punishment — not relationship and sharing". Lancelot's description of sin was a lack of freedom, explained Dr. Craft. He lacked steadfastness, faithfulness and constancy to Guinevere and to God.

Mallory's concept of sin was not necessarily discreet action. Mallory is constantly engaged in contemplation of the degree of a sin, Mallory believed, when God thinks of them all the same. Dr. Craft continued, "Lancelot realizes that he could commit mortal sin as he has an adulterous affair with Guinevere, but believes that every man should bear his own burden and put all trust in God".

Lancelot and Guinevere both transfer their constancy to God, said Dr. Craft, as they undertook penance. While he was punished, Lancelot was in a coma and saw marvels and paradoxically this was considered the punishment.

Dr. Craft concluded the lecture by explaining that Lancelot combined the love of woman and God because he loved God with consuming passion. After he had a heightened awareness of sinfulness, concluded Dr. Craft, Lancelot had a greater thankfulness for God.

Opportunity knocks . . . Do I have to answer? This is a question I pondered over two years ago when I was asked to take the position of co-editor of this newspaper and last year when I stepped up to editor-in-chief. For me it was a very important question. It gave me not only a chance to know people associated with every phase of Longwood College, but it gave me some very valuable experience in a field which I hope to make my career.

I am grateful to everyone for all the help I have received. The job of editor is not an easy one, but with the help of the Public Affairs Office, Sports Information, President Willett, my roommate, The Farmville Herald, Student Union, and my professors who understood when I needed to leave class to go to a board meeting, I made it through. Most important were those special people on my staff that guided me through it all.

I have made some mistakes! I have no excuse for them, but to say that this was a learning experience, and I have learned.

Yes, Opportunity Knocks . . . Do you have to answer? College life is full of opportunity. It may not always jump up in your face, but it's not hard to find either. It may be in the form of a Student Government job, helping with Student Union, joining a fraternity or sorority, or getting a work study job. Your goals and your aspirations will help you find opportunity . . . do not turn it away!

Jodi Kersey is the new editor of The Rotunda. There will be a need for reporters and photographers next semester. Opportunity knocks for you to get involved with the student newspaper . . . Will you answer?

By BRENDA COLEMAN

When senior Val Campbell was ever asked why she decided to come to Longwood, her immediate response is a chuckle. She explains "To tell you the truth, my parents really didn't want me to go to college. In addition to financial difficulties, they just didn't think I would make it through four years of school. They expected me to flunk out the first semester and then return home. My parents told me that I was welcome back home any time I wanted to come."

However, Val has exceeded her parents' expectations by a longshot. She is a member of Lynchos, the math and science honorary, and Beta Beta Beta, the biology honorary. She actively participates in the Baptist Student Union and is on Geist. She has also taken part in Oktoberfest and orientation and was recently nominated for selection on Who's Who.

"I knew I wanted to come to a small school and Longwood was all they said it was—small, friendly, a place where the teachers care. The administrators and especially the faculty really support and believe in the students here. I admire many of the professors here, namely Dr. Barber and Dr. Tinnell, because they have helped me attain the best education I could get."

Val, a native of Lynchburg, has a double major in chemistry and biology. "I've applied to MCV's Dental School and I should be hearing from them soon. If not, come February, I'll take the Naval OCS Test and go into the Navy as a lieutenant. They have already spoken to me about my major because they want me to work in nuclear warfare. My third future option is to go to graduate school at MCV for research. I really have my heart set on MCV."

Val had an additional honor bestowed upon her this past week. Here class elected her as this year's Madonna. "I was SHOCKED! I'm proud and happy, but I feel that both of the other candidates, especially my roommate Robyn Black, portrayed the characteristics of the Madonna as well, if not better, than myself."

When asked what her predictions were for Longwood in the year 1990, Val named quite a few ideas. "The male-female population will probably be 50-50. Academics will become harder and pinch down on the students a little more than they do now. Admission requirements will be tougher. Because of the gym, sports will play a larger role in Longwood life. And many changes, including traditions, will come about to meet the growing needs of the students of Longwood."

"However, the biggest situation I'd like to see changed is the fact that the achieving student is many times separated from the average student, not only grade-wise, but in all aspects of the college community. The average student makes up the greater bulk majority of this campus, but rarely is the average student given that pat on the back. The average student goes unrecognized, which adds to that wave of apathy that is so evident sometimes on this campus. This situation must be changed in order for all to take advantage of everything a college can offer.

Final Anthro Film

The third and final film in the 1980-81 Anthropology Film Series will be shown Wednesday evening, December 10, at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium. The film is entitled Dead Birds and is a film study of inter-tribal warfare in contemporary New Guinea.

Dead Birds is a study of the Gugum Dani people, a tribal society of several thousand people who live on the island of

New Guinea in the Pacific Ocean. The Gugum Dani think of themselves as birds; the greatest honor, and the focus of everyday life, among these people is the killing of a child or woman or man from an enemy village. Dead Birds shows this daily warfare among the Gugum Dani and the important ceremonies which follow the killing of an enemy villager.

All films in the Anthropology Film Series are free.

Ladyhouse Blues Review

By NEIL SAWYER

This last week, the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts presented "Ladyhouse Blues", a play by Kevin O'Morrison. "Ladyhouse Blues" was set in 1919 and dealt with the lives of five women during World War I but, beyond that the play centered on the slow deterioration of a family waiting for their men to return from war.

The cast consisted of Rita Howe as the mother, Liz and her four daughters played by Robyn Reynolds, Gwendolyn Sublett, Tamara Nash and Tracey Rice. An excellent job was done by the entire cast and a particularly shining performance was given by Ms. Howe whose confident stage presence dominated the play from the moment she walked on stage.

Under the direction of Dr. Douglas Young the cast worked as a tight unit which well reflected the closeness of the family. Credit must also be given to Richard Gamble for his excellent stage design and the whole of the backstage crews headed by Jeff Sledjeski.

Despite the excellent performance the play had a slight flaw which cannot be attributed to either director or actors. The play though very intense tends to lose its direction in a few scenes. Emotional interaction levels between the players often seemed to change too quickly and appeared unwarranted. The end result of this was that the viewer was left confused as to what the playwright was aiming to portray. Yet even with its slight problems "Ladyhouse Blues" came off a success.

Tree Remains Important Tradition

"It's the first sign of Christmas at Longwood!"

"It brings the Christmas spirit to us all!"

"It brings CHI bells and elves, too!"

All of these are statements made about the huge Christmas tree that always goes up in the Rotunda the week after Christmas. It is a Longwood tradition that has been around for over 25 years and will probably outlast many of the other traditions.

This year the 25 foot high tree was placed in the Rotunda by the maintenance crew last Tuesday and, contrary to popular belief, the tree was brought in through the front door and not lowered through the dome of the Rotunda.

The search for this year's tree began before the Thanksgiving break. In past years the tree had been cut on the property of Mrs. June Ellington; however, Mrs. Ellington sold her property last year. This year, the huge tree was found on 700 acres of land South of Farmville, belonging to Mrs. Jackie Wall. Mrs. Wall is director of Art at Campus School.

Past Freshman Class Presidents, Linda Paschall, Duke Rollins, and John Todd, accompanied Dean Leo Salters and the 1980 Freshman class

President, Trisha Boyle on the search for the tree. It was cut down by the maintenance crew last Monday. Approximately five feet had to be cut off of the original tree so that it could be transported back to school. It was then treated with flame-retardant before being put up for the elves to decorate on Tuesday.

The tree with all its Christmas gaily will remain in the Rotunda until the end of exams.

Yesteryear Christmas Brought Alive

Fourteenth century English Christmas traditions came alive in Blackwell Dining Hall when the Camerata Singers presented the annual Renaissance Dinner, December 5, 6 and 7. The dinner each year brings guests from all over to celebrate Christmas in a unique way.

The ceremonies began in the Rotunda balconies with the singers welcoming the feast guests. Trumpeters announced the commencing of the dinner.

The candles were lit: as the Cameratas sang "Torches, Torches" and the guests cheered as they toasted the Christmas season with wassail. Trotman Simpson brought in the boar's head which heralded the serving of courses, and the singing of the traditional English carol, "Boar's Head Carol".

Following the dinner, the traditional Renaissance concert was performed with songs, dances and musical instruments. Two favorites included the jester, Kristin Holberg, and the performance of "The Cushion Dance".

The evening could not end without the feast of the figgy pudding. All three evenings were sold out. Everyone attended left with a true feeling of the Christmas of yesteryear.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Women's Basketball

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's Women's Basketball Team, boasting a 6-1 overall and 4-1 division II record, is off to their best start since 1976. As of last week the Lady Lancers' led the VAAW Division II conference in team defense, giving up only 56.3 points per game. Heading up the conference in individual scoring is top Lancer Cindy Eckel, who scored 57 points in the first three games, averaging 19 points per game.

Tuesday, December 2, Longwood traveled to Richmond, defeating the Lady Spiders 63-61. Cindy Eckel led the Lady Lancers in offense with 33 points and in defense with 6 rebounds. Scoring 30 points from the floor, she tied the school record for most field goals made in a single game (15), which has been held by Sue Rama since 1978.

Hosting Liberty Baptist Thursday, Longwood claimed another victory, winning 50-73. Scoring in the double figures were Robin Hungeate 15, Cindy Eckel 14, Brenda Fettrow 13, and Robyn Goff 12.

Saturday the Lady Lancers challenged Division III foe Roanoke College. Although hampered by the absence of starter Cindy Eckel because of illness, Longwood won 73-68. Senior Linda Pullen led with 15 points and 13 rebounds.

The next home women's basketball game is Tuesday, December 9 against Virginia Commonwealth.

Richmond last week and tied a school record, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period Nov. 28-December 5.

Eckel made 15 of 27 attempts from the floor to tie the Longwood record for field goals in a game. Lady Lancer great Sue Rama made 15 shots in a game during the 1977-78 season.

The South Plainfield, N.J. native also scored 14 points in Longwood's win over Liberty Baptist Thursday.

Eckel's play has been a key factor in Longwood getting off to a 6-1 start, its best since 1976. The 5-10 forward is the leading scorer in VAAW Division II.

This is the second time this year that Cindy has made Player of the Week.

Top Cager

Freshman forward Jerome Kersey, a 6-6 cager from Clarksville, has been chosen as McDonald's Player of the Week by the Longwood Lancer coaching staff.

A rugged rebounder and inside scorer, Kersey is averaging 14 points and over 8 rebounds per game. His play has been a vital ingredient in Longwood, compiling a 6-2 record thus far.

Kersey had 18 points and 10 rebounds in the Lancers' 67-63 win over North Carolina Central Monday night. He has played well enough to make All-Tournament teams in both the Augusta Tip-Off Tournament and the Longwood Invitational Classic.

Gymnastics

By LISA SPENCER

After suffering two losses Friday to James Madison and Slippery Rock, the Longwood gymnasts will be looking for a win against Virginia tonight. The team has been plagued with injuries and illnesses so far this season, but Coach Ruth Budd is expecting a good meet against Virginia. The meet, which will be held in Lancer Hall at 7 p.m., should help bolster the team's confidence after Friday's defeat.

Slippery Rock took first place in the tri-meet with a team score of 119.85. James Madison was second with 117.15, and Longwood finished third with 110.80. Despite the fact that the Lady Lancers were defeated, Coach Budd feels that the team competed well. "The scores did not represent the performances as well as they should have," she said.

Longwood did have three gymnasts who placed in the meet. Sharon Pillow scored at 7.25 in the beam for a third place finish. Freshman Monica Chandler also had a third place finish in the floor exercise. Kathy Idelson was sixth in the all-around competition.

"We're looking forward to a better meet than before against Virginia," stated Budd. "We've had a lot of trouble this season, but having a meet at home will really help the team."

All-Stars

All-time leading scorer Gus Leal and standout junior Dana Gregg are members of All-Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association Central Division team for 1980, giving Longwood two representatives on the 11-man all-star squad. The All-Visa team was chosen last week by vote of the league coaches.

Leal and Gregg will play for the VISA Eastern All-Star team in the VISA All-Star game December 7 at Averett College in Danville. Leal was also chosen for the all-star tilt a year ago. Gregg is in his first year with the Lancer program after transferring from Wilmington College in Cincinnati.

A sophomore forward, Leal scored 16 goals and had two assists in leading Longwood to a 9-7 record this season, the Lancers' first winning record in history. With 18 career goals, Gus ranks as Longwood's all-time leading scorer. He was a tri-captain for 1980.

Gregg, a back, was a key factor in Longwood's successful season as he scored nine goals and had one assist. Noted for his aggressive play, Dana was a sparkplug for Longwood throughout the season.

"Both Gus and Dane deserve this honor," said Coach Rich Posipanko.

Men's Basketball

Thanksgiving break was not a happy time for Coach Bash and his Longwood Lancers basketball team. The Lancers played 3 games and lost 2 of them.

The Lancers started off by visiting Salem College in West Virginia. Many of you should remember this is the team that ruined Longwood's unbeaten regular season record last year. Salem defeated Longwood for the second year in a row by 1 point. The final score was 70-69. During the course of the game, the Lancers didn't shoot well and this was a factor in their defeat.

Longwood then traveled to Augusta, GA to play in a tournament there. The Lancers won the first game against Piedmont College 96-76. The Lancers faced Voorhees College for the championship and lost 52-51 on a last second tip in by Voorhees.

Jerome Kersey and Joe Remar were both named to the All-Tournament team.

This week end Longwood College sponsored the Second Annual Longwood College Basketball Tournament. The teams were Longwood, Liberty Baptist, Southeastern of Washington, D.C., and Friendship College of South Carolina. The Lancers were defending champions of the tournament.

Longwood faced Southeastern in the first round of the tournament. Superb play by all the Lancers enabled them to trounce Southeastern 100-63. This was a total team victory with each of the players scoring at least two points.

Some of the individual high points were Ron Orr's team leading 22 points. Jerome Kersey, Thomas Alston, and Jim Sixsmith also scored in double figures with 17, 14, and 10 points respectively. Big man Albert Jay led the team in rebounds with 12 while Kersey was second with 9.

While Longwood was trouncing Southeastern, Liberty Baptist was struggling to defeat Friendship. This set the championship game between Longwood and Liberty Baptist.

Longwood started the game off fast by playing aggressively on defense. The Lancers shot poorly but used good passing to open up a 36-23 halftime lead.

At the beginning of the second half, Longwood looked as if they might blow Liberty Baptist out of the gym. The Flames then pulled a half-court press that flustered the Lancers for a while. To go along with the aggressive defense, the Flames became hot on offense, throwing shots up from anywhere on the court and making them. Longwood's lead was cut to four points and things didn't look good for the Lancers because two key players, Kersey and Remar, had fouled out. Coach Bash instructed his team to be more patient and work the ball in to the big men. Orr responded with a basket and two foul shots, strengthening Longwood's lead to 8. Anytime the Flames came close, center Albert Jay would hit a key shot. Longwood won the game by a score of 69-59.

Several Lancers played an excellent game. Sophomore Ron Orr led the team in scoring with 18 points and rebounds with 13. Jim Sixsmith had 12 points and shot 75 per cent from the floor. Albert Jay had 11 points and Jerome Kersey with 10 rebounds and were both dominant forces.

Capital Outlay Projects Approved

By JODI KERSEY

Every other year Longwood submits a Capital Outlay Request for Planned projects for the upcoming three bienniums. Any project which will cost over $10,000 come under Capital Outlay.

The planning for the outlay is quite an involved process explained Dr. William Peale, Vice President of Longwood. The proposed projects have to be examined and approved by many college and state committees and agencies before they become a definite part of the college budget.

Funding for these projects come from General Funds which are state tax dollars which the legislature of Virginia provides for the college. Auxiliary Funds are collected from the student fees to finance the school projects.

According to the 80-82 plans, renovation to modernize French dormitory will start this week. The aim is not to enlarge the dormitory, but to modernize it and make it more energy efficient, such as having heat controls in each room to regulate the heat and lowering the ceilings.

Other projects that will be attempted during the biennium of 80-82 are to convert French pool, modernize the lighting and panel controls in Jarman, and to remove asbestos areas at the campus school and in the library. There will also be some electrical service to Hiner because it is operating at full electrical capacity. With the addition of air conditioners, there is a great electrical tax load on this building. Finally, during 80-82, there should be storm windows placed in Grainger and the infirmary to foster energy conservation.

From 82-84, the priorities for the capital outlay projects are as follows: 1. Conversion of the power plant to coal burning capacity which will be less expensive than oil. (2,000,000) 2. An elevator to connect Hiner and Coyner which will be especially beneficial to the handicapped. (125,000) 3. Renovation of Main and North Cunningham dormitories. (750,000) 4. Build an addition to the back of the library which would extend to the first sidewalk. (1,840,000) 5. Refurbish steam tunnels. (112,000) 6. New floors, seats, and lights for Jarman. (258,000) 7. Construction on 2nd and 3rd floors of McCorkle wing of the science building adding air conditioning. (1,498,000) and 8. A wing added on the Bedford which would serve as a Fine Arts Center with a gallery housing a permanent collection and studios. This final project is considered a privately-funded project which will cost approximately 1,100,000.

A few other priorities for 82-84 is to do general renovation repair on the Grainger Building which would include work on the walls, ceilings, floor tile and electrical service. Roof work will be done on Grainger, South Ruffner and the Infirmary.

During 1984 through 1986, the Hiner Gym will be remodeled to an academic facility. The other priority for this two year period will be to start some type of project with the first avenue property that the school owns.

Finally, the 1986-1988 biennium will include remodeling the Lankford Building, updating campus parking areas and refurbishing the South Ruffner residence hall area.

Main Street Fire

By CHERYL WILCOX

Returning to campus, many students were met by a surprise in downtown Farmville. An 80 year old building on Main Street beside Walker's Diner had fallen victim to a fire on January 11.

Fire fighters from Farmville, Rice, Prospect and Hampden-Sydney battled the blaze after receiving the call about 11:35 Sunday night. Fire units were still on the scene Monday evening as the wrecking crew went to work.

The cause of the fire has not been determined but officials say it probably started in the rear portion of the building.

Located at Second and Main Streets, the building housed a used furniture and book store managed by Frank Felero. The building was owned by H.B. Alford. Estimates of loss from the fire have been set at approximately $150,000.

Farmville's Building Inspector, Bob Morris, said it was necessary to knock the building down because of leaning walls which could have fallen in the street or on the nearby diner.

Volunteer firemen have been praised for their work on the fire, much of which took place in five degree temperature. The fire units were commended at a meeting of the Farmville Chamber of Commerce.

Farmville Town Manager, Gerald Spates, estimated some 700,000 gallons of water were used in the attempt to save this building.

Monday night this disastrous fire continued to smolder on the now deserted corner of Second and Main Streets.

THE FARMVILLE HERALD

The charred remains were all that was left after the sudden fire as firemen continued to pour gallons of water on the smoldering remains. Hours later efforts began to demolish the building as a safety precaution.

Student Government Elections

By BRENDA COLEMAN

On Tuesday, Feb. 3, the student body will vote upon and elect the remaining members of the newly restructured student government. Twenty-four positions are now open, including the twelve class representatives of the new student senate.

Petitions which were placed on the table outside the Information Office last Tuesday are due tomorrow, Wednesday, Jan. 28. Students running for corresponding secretary, recording secretary, and treasurer of the Student Government, IAA President, Student Union treasurer, and investigators for Judicial Board are required to fill out petitions. Seven investigators are needed — one for college violations and one for Honor Code violations from each class except the Sophomore Class which elected a college violation investigator last December.

The twelve class positions consist of three representatives from each class to serve on the student senate. Their responsibilities include serving on the rotating jury pool for Judicial Board. To be placed on the ballot for student senate, students must have their names nominated at a class meeting or contact their class presidents.

If anyone has any questions concerning these elections and the positions, please contact Ann Norman, Chairman of Elections Committee.

Winter Orientation

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"Orientation?! Again?! I thought we finished that in August!"

Unknown to many students, Longwood does have a winter orientation that occurs each January for new incoming students. On Sunday night, Jan. 11 in Jeffers, 98 freshmen and transfers went through a two hour orientation program planned and presided over by Dallas Bradbury, the first male Chairman of Orientation. With the help of administrative members and fellow students, Dallas filled the new students in on the rules, activities, and traditions of Longwood College and helped orient them to their new lives as college students.

Dallas first welcomed the students to Longwood and gave them a general but brief outline of the orientation program and of Longwood College itself. He then introduced Dr. Leo Salters, Dean of Students, who discussed the rules and regulations of the school. Sharon Harrup, President of the Student Body, explained the Student Government Association and its vital role in campus activities. Director of Housing Tom Nanzig then gave a general speech on the housing and social aspects and Linda Paschall filled the new students in on the many traditions, class activities, and spirit of the campus. The evening concluded with an explanation of the Honor Code and the Honor Code signing itself led by Judicial Board Chairman Brenda Coleman.

According to Dallas, "the orientation program was an overwhelming success. I was very delighted with the way it worked out. We had approximately 98 new dorm students this semester and I believe there was close to 100 per cent attendance. This coupled with their attentiveness, made my job easy and gratifying."

"One new aspect we placed in the winter program was the subject of Longwood's traditions. This had not been dealt with in the past winter programs but I felt it was an important aspect of life at Longwood so I used it in the program."

"I would like to express my deep, heart-felt appreciation to my fraternity, Alpha Chi Rho, Dr. Leo Salters, Miss Terrie Swann, Brenda Fettrow, Tammy Bird, and all the good people who helped me, for their support, encouragement and personal concern for the orientation program."

Contribute To The Gyre

By JOE JOHNSON

Do you have any old, tattered poems gathering dust in a closet or maybe some ancient pen and ink sketches you've stashed under your mattress? They may be more valuable than you realize. The Gyre, an art and literary publication of Longwood College, is presently offering a cash award for the best work in either field.

The Gyre was founded by Beore Eh Thorp, English Honor Society, in 1944. Over the years, the Gyre has changed its format from a strictly literary magazine to a literary and art publication. In 1971 a constitution was drawn up to establish the publication as an official campus organization. This allowed it to receive funds from the Student Activities Fees Committee and patrons who wished to contribute to it. Their contributions financed some of the awards given out and allowed the Gyre to host the Literary Festival which took place for the first time in the spring of 1971.

The Literary Festival allows students an opportunity to hear established writers give readings of their works. Some of the students are also given an opportunity to read their own material. Last year such poets as Anne Hobson Freeman and Vivian Shiply Joki gave readings at this event.

In the past the Gyre has received numerous awards commending the quality of its material. In 1968 it received the Associated Collegiate Press First Class Award for outstanding publications. In the same year it received the Columbia Scholastic Press Association Medalist certificate. More recently, it has received the CHI Commendation Award.

To continue this record of excellence, the Gyre needs a variety of material from which it can choose the most qualified works. A literary board composed of members from the Gyre staff select the works to be published. Of these works, one is selected from each category (literary and art) to receive the cash award.

The purpose of the magazine, as stated by its founding father, is to stimulate interest in creative works and research among the college students. The magazine tries simultaneously to encourage serious writing and art work on the campus and to produce a quality representative magazine. In short, the Gyre is a reflection of the talents and feelings of the student body.

The Gyre will accept any poems, short stories, one-act plays, prose selections, art work or photography that is submitted. Please mail your work to Box 862, Longwood College, as soon as possible.

Erick Hawkins Dance Company

By SUSAN BUTLIN

January 30-February 1 will be a weekend that will not stop. One of America's most outstanding dance companies will be here for a three-day workshop. The Erick Hawkins Dance Company is one of the biggest names ever to come to Longwood's campus.

Erick was a Greek major at Howard, and after he graduated, he studied at the School of American Ballet. His first breakthrough as an astound dancer came in 1972 with the Wolf Trap Center premier when Pulitzer prize winning critic, Alan Kreig (Washington Post) called him, "One of the most individual and inventive choreographers of our time. In the same period, Anna Kisselgoff of New York Times gave her support to the uprising genius. The English critic Jan Murray said,

"Hawkins is one of the pioneer revolutionaries whose work has a seminal influence on the development of contemporary dance."

His latest production titled "Agathon" deals with a modernism metaphor of a great rock that thrusts itself from the southwest edge of Arizona's Monument Valley that links itself to the paintings of Georgia O'Keeffe.

"What is special about 'Agathon' is its painterly feeling. It is common for choreography in general — because it uses the human body — to attain a sculptural quality. But the effect here is totally different. While watching the dancing, one consistently had the sensation of paint flowing on a canvas," says the New York Times.

The Washington Post describes Hawkins like this, "Like other radicals in modern arts, Hawkins moved beyond humanistic into the purely aesthetic sphere, where his re-working with the materials — bodies moving vibrantly as animals move strip us of our ideas about things and make us see the world fresh, directly, and new."

In 1979, Dance Magazine presented the Erick Hawkins Dance Co. the dance award, which is probably the most official distinction bestowed. Hawkins earned this by his distinct ability to express himself without limitations and rigidities. In other words, there is somewhat of an unlinear approach to his choreography. All of this has been developed over the past thirty years of Hawkins' life. This type of action brings about the theatrical energy so visible on stage. It also adds a mysterious expression medium.

This will be a weekend you will not want to miss. Tickets are free, and will be available starting January 26 in the SUN office. Find yourself in Lancer Hall at sometime during the three day workshop. Come out and examine the Erick Hawkins Dance Co. yourself and see why he is such a renowned worldwide performer.

Flynn Exhibition

By JOE JOHNSON

"It's like getting up every morning to a different sunrise," said Dr. Elisabeth L. Flynn, speaking of her photography which is presently on exhibit at the Bedford Building Gallery. Dr. Flynn, the Art Historian at Longwood, is showing 49 black and white photographs from January 20 to February 12. This exhibit is part of a Bedford Gallery program, which includes an annual one man show by members of the Art Department Faculty on a rotating basis.

The photographs range in subject from lowly mushrooms to lofty Chicago skyscrapers. Dr. Flynn said she has collected photographs over the years and took time out over Christmas holidays to prepare some of them. Many of the photographs were originally color slides which were transformed by the magic of her darkroom technique into the stunning black and white prints.

Sr. Flynn said that some slides take 8 to 9 hours of diligent light manipulation to achieve the proper effect. She also pointed out that rarely is the first printing adequate for a show. She has reprinted some of the photographs ten or more times.

Approximately one-third of the show is devoted to architecture which is Dr. Flynn's favorite art form. Architecture has a combination of qualities — the reality and the usefulness of the building on one hand, and the abstract aesthetic value of it on the other. Dr. Flynn further explained that the aesthetic beauty of a building is found in its variation of patterns and different perspectives from which it is viewed.

Dr. Flynn has taken photographs of such outstanding architectural works as the TWA terminal in New York, Dulles Airport, and a Christian Church in Columbus, Indiana, which towers upward like a delicate needle. All of these constructions were designed by one of her favorite modern architects, Eero Saarinen.

Some of the subjects are indistinguishable as being real, but Dr. Flynn assures me that all the prints were made from solid, tangible objects. By using such photographic techniques as dodging and burning, Dr. Flynn magnifies the abstract qualities of the subject.

There is a certain unreal animation in her work which yields itself to the casual glance or the closest scrutiny. She has created in her photographs what she loves most about architecture — the constant mutation of the work as it is interpreted from different angles. One tilts his head and finds the photograph has undergone a complete metamorphosis into something distinctive in itself.

Dr. Flynn has another show scheduled for March at the University of North Alabama which will deal exclusively with the architectural studies.

Artist Of The Month

By JOE JOHNSON

Neil Sawyer is the Artist of the Month for December. Neil is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Sawyer of Alexandria, Virginia. He is a graduate of Jeb Stuart High School of Falls Church and is presently a senior BFA candidate at Longwood College. Neil's concentration is graphic design which he plans to pursue as a career.

Neil is the photography editor for the Rotunda and also serves as head host for the Bedford Gallery. In his junior year, he won an Alumni Purchase Award and also served as president of the Longwood Players, where his graphic designs were used in the play production, "Barefoot in the Park".

The winning art work is a series of three paper collage drawings entitled "Edith". The series is currently on display in the Bedford Building, first floor hallway. Neil was awarded a $50 cash prize for the work. Second and third place winners for Artist of the Month were Susan Acker and Sally Lowe.

Film By Berlet

Tuesday, February 3, Walter H. Berlet will show and narrate his film, "American Hartland; The Great River Story."

This work of motion picture photography captures the natural beauty of plant and animal life along the Mississippi River from the Gulf of Mexico to the Minnesota in which Berlet travelled over 2,000 miles to film the wildlife the river supports. Through the use of special cameras and lenses, Berlet was able to magnify and penetrate the heart of nature.

The film points out the major coastal areas of wintering grounds for migrating birds. Berlet also shows common loons, snow geese and reddish egrets as they congregate in salt marshes, bays and coast line fields. He films the armadillo, raccoon, alligator and nutria in their natural habitats.

Berlet and his wife, Myrna, returned in the winter to capture the mystical beauty of the white-tailed deer, moose, and timber wolves. Once again in the spring, the Berlets finished the colorful rendition of wildlife with the nesting of a pair of common loons.

Berlet has produced more than 200 of these educational films and 14 television shows. His film presentations have won him considerable acclaim throughout the country. Some of his films are now being shown in countries such as Japan, England, Germany, Mexico, and Canada. He is most famous for his big game cinematography and he has toured with Audubon Wildlife films for over 18 years.

Berlet was born in Western Ohio and graduated from Ohio State University. This particular color and composition should have much to offer. Education wise this film serves a beneficial purpose. The lecture will be interesting due to the fact the Berlet is an expert in this field.

Admission is free and will be presented in Bedford at 8 p.m. This is a National Audubon Wildlife film. It."

A Little Town Called Eldritch

By TAMARA NASH

Suppose you lived in a small town — smaller than Farmville, even — and your town came equipped with a town gossip, a couple of lovers, and its own murderer. That is the background of the town of Eldritch in which Dr. Douglas Young's next Longwood-staged play is set. To be presented February 25-28 at 8:00 p.m., the Rimers of Eldritch promises to be one of the most interesting plays presented on Jarman's stage.

Featuring a cast of seven males and ten females, Rimers of Eldritch was written by Lanford

Wilson of HOT 1 BALTIMORE fame. First produced in an Off-Off Broadway theatre called La Mama, it was greeted with such success that it was subsequently produced at the Off-Broadway Cherry Lane Theatre in 1967. Wilson has been honored with numerous recognitions and Rimers of Eldritch is a clear example why.

If romance is your thing, or drama, or even murder, be sure not to miss this first production of the second semester. You may discover that small towns can be thrilling!

Red & White Message

Dear Juniors and Freshmen,
Welcome back to Longwood!
We hope that this semester will be as busy and as great as last semester was and that all of you will continue to work for your classes and your school.

Juniors, you only have a year left here at Longwood—make it your best! The friendships you have made and the ones you will make will be cherished ones. Let your red and white spirit shine!

Freshmen, good luck with your Freshman Production. These memories will be ones remembered for many years. Show your red and white love in

By BRENDA COLEMAN
"I really didn't decide what my major in college would be until my senior year in high school," began this semester's first senior spotlight Elaine McDonald. "I had many good music teachers and a lot of experience in choir and conducting, so music seemed to have been the area I was headed toward."

Elaine will soon put that training and experience to practical use when she leaves for her student teaching assignments next week. "I'm scared to death! I will be teaching at four schools in Lynchburg—two at the elementary level and two junior highs. I'll just make the best of it."

A native of Tampa, Florida, Elaine plans to make the best of her future also. "I have two options to follow. I would like to either find a good teaching job, preferably at a high school, or attend graduate school if I can receive a scholarship. I will take whichever opportunity that arises first."

Elaine has been busy during her four years here at Longwood. She is a member of Sigma Alpha Iota, the women's music honorary and of the Music Educators National Conference (MENC). She has been the president of the Camarata Singers and Vice-President of Concert Choir. As Vice-President of Geist, she was in charge of the Biergarten, cake, and food during this past Oktoberfest.

"Of everything I'll miss when I graduate, I will miss Geist and SAI the most—those people have helped keep me sane. But most importantly, I'll miss the friends I've made and gotten close to."

When asked her feelings about Longwood and the problems we have faced in the past few years, Elaine was silent for a moment before responding. "I'm happy to see more student awareness of the politics of administrative problems. Students can state their opinions to a certain extent—that's a recent change. For the most part, the faculty take a sincere interest in the students. That is one of the reasons I chose to come to Longwood."

"If I were asked to give advice to another student or freshman, I would say get a well-rounded, open-minded education. Education makes you a better person—gives you more understanding—and increases your self-awareness."

Editor's Turn

Tolerance and respect are hard to come by when we have to contend with people who insist on criticizing others while they themselves refuse to contribute to society in a beneficial way. This semester represents a new year full of opportunities to test your potential in working with other people and to recognize personal abilities you never knew existed. There wouldn't be space available to list all the self-growth and understanding which would be your benefits from pushing yourself into that position of "involvement".

As American Students, we should be especially aware of communication and the unity between people as we are grateful for the return of our 52 hostages. Hopefully, our new President will make an even greater effort to keep our country safe from such inhumaneness. This situation verifies the idea that we can never be sure what will happen to us. We should take advantage of our chances because they might not always be as easily obtained.

As this semester begins, get involved with some organization or project on campus that you have an interest in. Student Government Elections are approaching and there are many positions open for you to represent your fellow students. Any involvement with campus activities will greatly enhance your understanding of this school and the way it operates. Apathy can't help you understand or solve controversial issues on campus.

Please use your student newspaper this semester to voice opinions and contribute ideas in order that The Rotunda staff can know what you feel is important on campus. Let us be your sounding board and we will try our best to keep the paper open to all segments of college life.

Residence Hall Life Survey Responses

By DOUGLAS STROBEL

Last semester the Residence Hall Life staff conducted a survey to determine the effectiveness of the residence staff and their ability to deal with student concerns. While only approximately half of the student body completed the application, those who did respond were positive in their attitudes toward the residence hall program.

The purpose of the evaluation was three-fold. First, it gave students an opportunity to voice their support of, or concerns with, the residence hall staff. Second, students were given a chance to indicate their dissatisfaction with existing rules, regulations, or administrative policy. Third, the information and statistics compiled may be used by concerned committees or organizations in their future recommendations or policy formation.

In general, the survey had very positive results. The residence staff system was given an average or above average rating throughout the survey. The Resident Assistants were considered both helpful and available in dealing with their respective floors on campus. Area Coordinator Elaine Jones stated that the Residence Hall program has come a long way in making each hall a small community where people can develop friendships with their neighbors.

The response concerning the RA's this year differed markedly from last year's evaluation. It was apparent that last year some students did not take the evaluation seriously; many of the comments made consisted of sarcastic answers or personal attacks on individual RA's, which did not lead to a constructive evaluation of the Residence Hall program.

However, this year, responses were more favorable and constructive than those last year. For example, students were asked about their responsibilities as a student on the hall. A large number of students feel that they have a responsibility in curtailing vandalism on their halls. Also, many students said that they feel some responsibility for upholding the rules and regulations of the college.

Students responded favorably to questions concerning adequate avenues of communication to vent their concerns or problems to the Residence Hall staff. The dormitory staffs were found to be cooperative and ready to help any individual with a problem.

The survey answers in some areas were significantly different from dorm to dorm. It must be remembered that all dorms are not alike at Longwood; each dorm has its own personality and its own outlook on rules and regulations at the school.

One disappointing aspect of the survey was the high amount of student apathy. Only 47 per cent of the resident population turned

Backgammon

Tournament

By JODI KERSEY

January 21st and 22nd, sixteen students challenged each other in Backgammon. The tournament was part of a program conducted by the Student Union called Inter-School Council of Student Activities (ISCSA). The purpose of this program is to plan activities for students at the small colleges in southwest Va. instead of constantly using professional entertainment. The schools involved in this alternative-activity project are: Hollins, Hampden-Sydney, Longwood, Lynchburg, Mary Baldwin, Randolph-Macon Women's College, Sweet Briar, VMI and Washington and Lee.

Student Union members attend meetings with the other schools and coordinate activities for the year. Longwood representatives include the director of Student Union, I.B. Dent, chairman, Jerry Richman and vice-chairman, Melissa Sager. Many of the activities are organized with the help of I.A.A. under the direction of Carolyn Callaway, as was this Backgammon Tournament.

The four winners from the tournament are: Cheryl Beausoleil, Ken Gebbie, Jeff Sledjeski and Kim Staples. These four will go to Hollins College today to continue the competition. The final winners will receive a trophy and prizes.

Gymnasts Down East Stroudsburg

By LISA SPENCER

Saturday's gymnastics meet, which pitted Longwood against East Stroudsburg, was the most exciting one of the season for the team for several reasons. First, the Lady Lancer gymnasts outdid themselves again, winning every event and defeating East Stroudsburg 126.65 to 119.35. This was the highest team score for Longwood this year. Second, and the most exciting for the gymnasts, was a visit from Broadway, television, and screen star Celeste Holm. The actress and her husband, friends of Longwood coach Ruth Budd, made a special trip from New York to watch the meet.

"Her coming down really psyched everyone up," stated Budd. "We had a super meet."

It looks as if Kathy Idelson may be on her way to another All-American title this year. The junior stand-out was named an All-American her freshman year when she placed seventh in the national competition. She is off to another excellent start this season, capturing her fourth all-around title in five meets. Her total score of 32.45 was her highest this season. Kathy also scored a career-high 8.65 to win the floor exercise event. Another first in vaulting, a second in bars (tie with Sharon Pillow), and a third in the beam completed her accomplishments in the meet.

Several other Longwood gymnasts also turned in steady performances. Aside from her second place tie on bars, Sharon tallied up second places in all-around, floor, and vaulting, and a fourth place on beam. Freshman Monica Chandler took first place honors in bars, tied with Kim Pickel for third on floor, and placed fourth in vaulting. Kim also won the balance beam event.

The team's next competition will be Friday night in Lancer Hall against long-time rival Radford.

Homesick Longwood Cagers

By PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Longwood's men's basketball team won five of eight games on its recent two-week road trip to Alaska and back, but the 14-6 Lancers still have to visit Maryland Eastern Shore Wednesday and Radford Saturday before returning to the friendly confines of Lancer Hall. On February 5 Longwood entertains CIAA member Virginia State for the first game ever between the two schools in men's basketball.

One-point losses continued to haunt the Lancers in the Pocono Classic Thursday night. Longwood dropped its fourth one-point loss of the season in the title game as host East Stroudsburg took a 54-53 victory. With the exception of a 77-61 loss to Alaska-Anchorage, which the Lancers avenged the next night 67-66, Longwood has lost five games by a total of eight points this season.

Freshman sensation Jerome Kersey continued his fine play of the past two weeks with 26 points and 13 rebounds in a 66-54 win over Quinnipiac in the first round of the tournament Wednesday night. Kersey, who had 13 points and eight rebounds in Thursday's loss, was named to the All-Tournament team, the third time this season that he has been so honored.

Still seeking to start a winning streak, Longwood visits Maryland E. Shore, a team the Lancers beat 62-54 in November, Wednesday night and new NCAA Div. II member Radford Saturday night.

Maryland E. Shore was a participant in the Pocono Classic last week, losing to East Stroudsburg 53-46 and Quinnipiac 67-62. The losses dropped the Hawks to 8-9 for the year.

Radford and Longwood have played six times over the past four years with the Highlanders holding a 5-1 edge in the series. Coach Joe Davis guided his team to two wins over Longwood in the 1976-79 season, but the two teams did not meet last season when Longwood went 28-3 and Radford 15-13.

In the midst of an up and down season, Radford has beaten Div. I George Mason and lost to new Div. II member Liberty Baptist 61-60. Craig Rhew, a 6-5 forward has been Radford's scoring leader.

Perhaps the top freshman in the state, Jerome Kersey leads Longwood in scoring (16.4), rebounding (9.3), shooting percentage (63.1) and blocked shots (22). The 6-6 cager has also collected 48 steals and tops the Lancers in dunks.

Playing consistently strong defense, Longwood has ranked among the national leaders in Division II in scoring defense. Currently giving up just 61.8 points per game, the Lancers have given up more than 70 points in only five of their 20 games.

Guard Mike McCroey has been the defensive leader with 73 steals while guard Joe Remar leads in assists with 96. McCroey and center Ron Orr have been Longwood's most consistent scorers in addition to Kersey.

Kersey Top Player Third Straight Week

By GARY THORNHILL

Freshman forward Jerome Kersey, who scored a second basket to give the Lancers a 67-66 victory over Alaska-Anchorage, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week and McDonald's Player of the Week for the third consecutive week.

Kersey's selection covers the period of January 16-January 23. Kersey, who was chosen to the All-Tournament team in last week's Pocono Classic, is the first athlete ever to be named Longwood Player of the Week three times in a row.

With the Lancers down 66-65 and three seconds remaining, the 6-6 forward sank a 20-foot jumper from the key to give the Lancers a 67-66 come-from-behind victory over Alaska-Anchorage. Kersey finished the game with 20 points and 6 rebounds.

The previous night against the same team, he had 24 points and 11 rebounds in a 77-61 defeat.

In the opening round game in the Pocono Classic, Kersey scored 26 points and grabbed 13 rebounds in a 66-54 victory over Quinnipiac.

In the championship game against East Stroudsburg, he scored 13 points and grabbed 8 rebounds as the Lancers were defeated 54-53. For his performances in the Pocono Classic, Kersey was named to the All-Tournament team.

The Clarksville native is the Lancers' leading scorer and rebounder, averaging 16.4 points and 9.3 rebounds per game. He has led the Lancers in scoring and rebounding in his last 5 outings.

A Social Work major, Jerome is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman D. Kersey of Clarksville.

Golfer Named To National Committee

By PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Woodlawn native Robin Andrews recently became the first Longwood student to be named to a National Sport Committee when she was appointed to serve on the AIAW Division II National Golf Committee. This committee, which is chaired by Longwood coach Barbara Smith, is the controlling body for all Division II golf. Robin's job will be to bring the interests and suggestions of all students to the committee for review.

Robin finished the 1980 season in the number one spot on the Longwood team which got the best rating of all Division II teams participating in a national ranking of comparative scores. Based on the average of her five best rounds in the fall season, she was also listed 65th out of over 600 golfers in all three divisions. Robin's average of 75 was only four strokes off first place.

Robin's top showings in the fall season included a second place finish in the Division II, Region II Tournament and third place in the VAAW State Team Tournament. She is expected to lead Longwood in its quest for a national title in the upcoming spring season.

IAA

By PAM UDIKE

With the close of 1980, it is amazing just how much Longwood's IAA program has grown within the time span of one year. The number of participants has almost doubled. At the end of 1979, the number of team participants was approximately 428, and by the end of 1980 a record 852 persons participated in team sports.

In the individual participant statistics, 1979 showed only 34 individuals to the 132 people participating in 1980. Because of this great rise in participation, the IAA has had to revise some of their rules and regulations. Ironically, the rise of interest in the IAA does not indicate a rise in the number of IAA workers. There is a severe need for people to help run certain events. At the present time there are only two or three individuals organizing and running approximately 21 events. If the lack of support continues, certain events may have to be cancelled.

Petitions are available for the positions of IAA Secretary and IAA President. Petitions are available outside of the Information Office and are due by Wednesday, January 28.

Men's Basketball is underway with 23 teams participating and two distinct leagues. Women's Basketball will start on January 28. Team captains should check the IAA Bulletin Board for times and locations of play.

Coming events are Foul Shooting and Ping Pong Singles. Foul Shooting Entry Blanks are due January 27. The mandatory participants' meeting is January 28 at 6:30 in the IAA room. Ping Pong Singles Entry Blanks are due February 2 with the participants' meeting on February 3 at 6:30.

Recently the Student Union and the IAA coordinated their efforts and held a Backgammon tournament. The top four winners are Kim Staples, first; Cheryl Beausoleil, second; Jeff Sledjeski, third; and Ken Gebbie, fourth. They will compete January 31 at Washington and Lee University.

By MARK KARL SEGAL

If Gus Leal was elected President of the United States he would probably forget to tell you — unless of course Lisa was there. Then she would brag about her boyfriend's accomplishments and abilities with a zeal that Gus could never extend to anyone due to modesty's sake.

The easiest information to dredge from his massive portfolio of soccer accomplishments was the vital info on who he is and where he is from, which is very interesting to me. He has lived a rather — shall we say — somewhat of a cosmopolitan life. He was born 23 years ago in Medellin, Colombia. He is one of six boys and today they run from the ages of 6 to 28 years. He came to the U. S. in 1972 and attended Walter Johnson H. S. in Bethesda, Md. He lettered there for two years in soccer. His senior year he made the All-Metro team for the Washington area. After graduation Gus followed his roots back to Colombia — stayed for a few years — and then joined his brother Mario (who also attends Longwood) in Connecticut to teach tennis lessons. In 1979 Gus stumbled upon Longwood. Last year he held a 2.7 GPA while being voted Longwood's most valuable soccer player. Last season he only scored 2 goals because he was playing the halfback position. This season Coach Posipanko moved him up to the center forward position where he managed to boot the ball in the net 16 times in 15 games to be the team's highest scorer with a 1.06 average per game.

I would ask, "Gus, what other accomplishments have you earned here?"

"I don't think any —" replied Gus in well-spoken English embraced in a thick South American-Spanish accent.

"Well, I'll tell you," Lisa would say. "The Philadelphia Fever — you know the professional team — they gave Gus an offer to try out for the indoor season. Oh, and Gus, tell him that last year you made the All-Visa team to represent your region in Virginia."

"Well, is that all Lisa — uh, I mean Gus?"

"I guess so," Gus would say. "No," Lisa would remember something else. "He made the All Opponent team from Trenton State this year also, and he was also the most valuable forward on the team this year."

Gus did tell me that the team went 9-7 and, "We could have won at least 12 games."

"Next year," added Gus, "I think we will have an excellent team. We can make it to the post season tournament if we all have a good attitude."

After much talk about family matters between Gus and Lisa, I managed to ask Gus how he felt about this year's 2-1 over H-SC.

"I was very happy — especially since I scored 2 goals." That was the one weak spot in his modesty — a victory over H-SC.

Over the summer Gus lived in Farmville and played soccer in Charlottesville. He also plays a lot of tennis. He can draw and as Lisa says, "He draws very well." He also likes to dance and likes music.

"He likes ping-pong and is very good," brags Lisa, "but he finally found someone here who can beat him."

Gus' father played professional tennis. His feet would like to fall into his father's shoes in that respect.

"If I get an offer from the pros I will take that," radiates Gus when speaking of the future. "If I don't (get an offer) I would like to finish school."

Because Gus is only a sophomore he is not too sure of his future. If he was too sure most people would call him cocky. But most people don't know quiet Gus. But of the folks that do know Gus, most will agree that his smooth manner exemplifies a sturdy, calm personality.

Gus' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Israel Leal reside in Vineland, N. J.

Lancaster Jewel Heist

By Joe Johnson

On the night of January 27 between the hours of 7:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m., an entire jewelry display was stolen from the Lancaster Library Gallery. The display was part of the Annual Art Department Faculty Show, which is a collection of the works the Art Department faculty have created over the year.

Mark Baldridge, Associate Professor of Art at Longwood, is the goldsmith who formed the stolen artwork. He has made available a list of the stolen jewelry with descriptions. The items stolen were: Pendant, 14 K gold and stamped "14K MARCK"; Pendant, 14K gold and titanium with diamond, 14 K gold chain, stamped "14K MARCK"; Ring 14K gold with diamond; Ring, 14K gold with titanium stamped "14K MARCK"; Ring 14K gold stamped "14K MARCK"; Wedding Ring Set, 14K gold stamped "14 K MARCK"; Wedding Ring Set 14K gold with titanium stamped "14 K MARCK"; Earring Set 14 K gold with titanium; Earring Set 14K gold with titanium.

When first hearing the news of the robbery at approximately 10:15 p.m. that night, Mr. Baldridge said that he was shocked and found it hard to believe that anyone could do such a thing. "You feel so frustrated when two-thirds of a year's work suddenly evaporates. It leaves you feeling helpless." Mark explained that he was using titanium in his work which is a very inexpensive metal. "The real value of the jewelry is the time and effort put into it and the fact that it can never be reduplicated." He further stated, "I don't think any place will accept them (the jewels) because of the titanium." The two stolen pendants had already been accepted for a show by the League of New Hampshire Craftsman. Mark had also entered them into a touring show called Southeastern Contemporary Metalsmiths II.

Mrs. Lane, an employee of the Lancaster Library, was the last person to see the Jewelry. She said that she had gone through the Gallery at 7:30 p.m. and everything was intact. At about 8:45 Donnie Gray, a day student also employed at the Library, was going down to check the Gallery when a short (about 5-4") brown haired girl stopped Donnie and told him something was wrong. He went into the Gallery and found that the locked case enclosing the jewelry had been broken and the jewels had been removed. The Campus Police were called and arrived minutes later.

State Police Investigator, John Mills, who was assigned to the case, has thus far declined to comment on the possibility of suspects. However, he did say that a set of fingerprints were lifted from the case, which is presently being stored in Campus Police Headquarters. When asked about the brown haired girl that Donnie was unable to identify, Mr. Mills stated that so far his investigation had not located her.

Miss Bishop, Chairman of the Art Department, said that Longwood carries a fine arts insurance policy and that it would cover nearly all of the financial loss due to the robbery. She also explained that the reason the department has open exhibits (unlocked) is to increase the number of viewers for each exhibit. She feels that a lock and key is a barrier that should not be needed with fine art. Commenting on the robbery, Miss Bishop said, "It takes a piece of your heart with you."

Mr. Baldridge has sent numerous orange leaflets around the campus describing the jewelry and pleading for its return. "If you have any information concerning the jewelry, please contact: Campus Police—392-9321; Art Department—392-9359; Baldridge Gallery (Midlothian)—(804) 794-2130; or Mark Baldridge at home—(804) 794-7235; or drop a note or items into Mr. Baldridge's mail box in Ruffner, The Art Department, or the campus mail. A reward is being offered for their return or information leading to their return."

Search For President Continues

By JODI KERSEY

The screening Committee has been reviewing over a hundred applications for the position of presidency at Longwood. They have met for the past four consecutive Fridays and will meet February 7th to complete reviewing of the applicant's files. The college received approximately 170 applications. Many withdrew for various reasons, lowering the number somewhat.

Originally, the deadline to announce the seven finalists from the screening board was scheduled for January 31st. The deadline has been extended to February 9th. February 3rd is the deadline on all material needed from each applicant to complete an individual file for the screening board.

A separate file is compiled on each applicant and every member of the board examines every file. The board member gives each file applicant a numerical score according to the required criteria that is available. Generally, the criteria needed for presidency consists of leadership in academic areas, administration, and fiscal programs. Community involvement and educational background are other areas examined.

The seven finalists announced on February 7th will be reviewed by the Board Search Committee. They will have personal interviews and select up to three finalists to recommend to the full board. The Board Search Committee consists of: Mr. L.E. Andrews, Mrs. J.L. Davidson, Miss Gay Kampfmüller, Mr. Ralph Page, Mr. Eric L. Robinson, Mr. Thomas D. Rust and Mrs. E.A. West.

The tentative date for recommending the three finalists to the full board is set for the Board meeting on March 5th and 6th. If they are not prepared by then, a special board meeting will be called to make the final selection for President of Longwood.

Plans For Award Announced

By BRENDA COLEMAN

Initial preparations began last week for the tenth presentation of the Faculty Recognition Award. This award is given annually by the student body to a faculty member that exhibits exceptional qualities of respect, intelligence, and efficiency in his or her educational field. The award, the result of a program coordinated by the Student Alumni Association and Office of College Relations, is to be presented on May 16 as part of the graduation exercises.

Nominations for the award will be taken Feb. 16-20 from the student body. Students may nominate as many faculty members as they wish on separate ballot forms that will be handed out by the Faculty Recognition Award Committee members in the Rotunda area. This committee is comprised of student leaders, class representatives, and students from various clubs, organizations, and majors. This varied over-all campus distribution of committee members will bring in more representational observations and input from the student body. The total number of nominations turned in by campus-wide student participation will be screened down to 12-15 faculty names. These faculty members will then be researched, evaluated, and voted upon to decide on a final 4 or 5 names. The winner is selected by secret ballot and kept confidential until the commencement exercises.

The prestige and importance of this award is two-fold—it is awarded by the student body and is given in recognition of a faculty member's step up from the classroom to the role of a caring, concerned educator. The award, consisting of a $300 check and a bronze medallion inscribed "For Professional Excellence and Devoted Service to Students," was presented to Dr. John S. Peale last year. Other recipients include Mrs. Cada Parrish, Dr. James McCray, Dr. Rosemary Sprague, Dr. Herbert Blackwell, Dr. Mary Cristo, Dr. James Gussett, Dr. Eleanor Bobbitt, and Miss Barbara Bishop. These faculty members are ineligible to receive another award this year because of the 10-year rule established by the committee.

Inspiring Freedom Service Held

By LISA BOWERS

A BSU-sponsored hostage-freedom service was held on Thursday, January 29, 1981, on Wheeler Mall. Supported by a large crowd of participants, including Longwood's ROTC Color Guard, the service began with a reading of President Reagan's proclamation by BSU president Fred Campbell. This reading was followed by a recitation of the pledge of allegiance and a singing of "America" accompanied by Fred Campbell on guitar.

The group was then asked to retrieve the 60 yellow ribbons tied around the trees surrounding Wheeler Mall. The ribbons symbolized the 52 American hostages, and the eight American servicemen killed in a rescue attempt on April 25, 1980. The names of the 60 heroes were read by Mary Ellen Lenhart, and the ribbons were placed in a trash container to symbolize the freedom of the hostages.

Susan Adams spoke a brief prayer, and BSU director Michael Edwards concluded the service with a reading of thanksgiving.

The service was the idea of freshmen Mary Ellen Lenhart and Melanie Tollerson, in keeping with the national "day of thanksgiving."

New Rooms -- New Friends?

By BETH WHEPLEY

"Bye, have a nice break." "You know? I'm really going to miss everyone! Hey, where will you be next semester?"

"Wheeler. What about you?" "Frazer"

"Frazer? That's all the way across campus! What are we going to do? We'll never see anyone!"

There is nothing more crazy, fun, or special than a freshman hall. It is a place where many new faces, and personalities are thrown together, and somehow become friends. Everyone is in the same boat: new, confused, and looking for a friend. There is always someone there to welcome you back from a week end, someone to eat dinner with, study with, party with, laugh with, or cry with. The friendships formed the first semester at college are the ones that last a lifetime. Unfortunately, the cherished friendships made on the halls of the French dormitory are in danger due to the building's renovation. The ex-French are angry, and upset and there is nothing they can do.

"What made me angriest was that they didn't give us any time to move out!", complains Chris Greenstreet of 308. The "they" she refers to is the Housing Department. The residents were assigned their new rooms during the week of exams, and were expected to be out and in their new rooms by Monday, January 12th, the day before classes started. The students were advised to return on Sunday, but for many the return was a waste of time. Many rooms had not been cleared out. For some, the previous residents would not be returning until late Monday night.

"It really made me angry because I had finished the first semester in havoc, and I had to start the second in the same way. Boxes, suitcases, trash all over," complained Kirsten Jackson.

One general complaint from the ex-French is why did they wait so late to move everyone out? Why was it necessary to start the renovation now instead of last spring, or at the end of this spring semester?

"We'd just gotten settled in, made our friends, and established some security and they up and move us!" "Now we're in halls where the friends have been made, and people just don't care if we're new. We haven't met a soul," says Bernie Toner and Annette Noce of third floor French.

Another major complaint from the ex-French are the fees for "damages". Most fees were $30 per room for "litter", that consisted of a few bags or boxes.

Considering that the building is going to be all torn down except for the four walls, it seems unfair to charge the students for "litter", or small graffiti on walls that will soon be demolished.

This article leaves out many of the inconveniences that the French residents were put through. Yet it conveys many of the feelings that have been unduly ignored.

Broadcasting At Longwood

By CONNIE FALLON

Longwood's Radio Station returned to the air waves last week amid a roar of rock-n-roll. The new d.j.'s were trained by Chief Engineer, Dave Hepler and scheduled for program testing by Laura Carrol.

Dr. Patton Lockwood is advisor for the Longwood Radio Association (L.R.A.), who's purpose is to promote all aspects of radio communication, while providing the Longwood community with radio entertainment. The L.R.A. elected officers last week. They are Ken Gebbie-President, Connie Fallon-Vice-President, and Randy Oakes-Secretary and treasurer.

Members working as announcers for the station show a lot of promise but they need to know what the community would like to hear. Hopefully next week there will be a survey in The Rotunda, so that with adequate student response, program scheduling can begin. This will determine the records that will be bought and played.

The Radio Association will be having monthly meetings and any interested students are invited to attend.

The Longwood Radio Station is student operated and is for the benefit of the students. So tune in to WUTA 90.1 FM to enjoy the best in radio at Longwood.

Vest To Lecture

By JACQUILINE BURTON

The Department of English, Philosophy and Foreign Languages will present a lecture Wednesday, February 4, entitled "The Meaning of Metaphor," by Dr. Quentin Vest, Associate Professor of English.

In his talk, Dr. Vest will discuss the concept and use of metaphor in poetry and the inadequacies of previous definitions of metaphor, as well as offer his own definition. Other points to be examined will include the meaning of poetry and how poems should be read. As a writer of poems, Dr. Vest is interested in illustrating the sincerity of poets and the importance of accepting their poems at face-value as well as searching for the possible abstract or implied meanings which lay hidden in them.

This lecture which is the third event in the 1980-81 Seminar Lecture Series, will be held in the Gallery of Lancaster Library. The lecture will begin at 4:15 preceded by refreshments being served beginning at 3:45. Students and faculty are invited to attend.

Louisiana Le Roux Concert

By SUSAN BUTLIN

What do you say about a group whose name originated out of a cookbook? From Baton Rouge the six-man group made their debut in 1978. Ever since then, Louisiana's Le Roux has been moving up — just as their latest album Up indicates.

The Le Roux concert is part of Mardi Gras Weekend. (February 5-8). Enthusiasm seems to be flourishing around campus because Le Roux is a top name band, with number one singles such as "New Orleans Ladies", "Slow Burn" and "Keep the Fire Burnin'." They have opened for groups like: Bob Seger and the Silver Bullet Band, Kansas, The Marshall Tucker Band, The Dirt Band, Heart, Charlie Daniels and The Allman Brothers. Members include Jeff Pollard — lead vocals, lead and rhythm guitar, Leon Medica — bass, vocals, Ron Roddy — piano, organ, synthesizer, vocals, David Peters — drums, percussion, Bobby Campo — horns, flute, congas, percussion, vocals, and Tony Haseldorn — rhythm guitar and vocals.

Special" which pulled exceedingly high ratings. They also headlined Baton Rouge's 9,000-seat Centroplex New Year's Eve in '78. They headlined the rock portion of "Mardi Gras in the Superdome" in New Orleans for 45,000. Last March, incoming Louisiana Governor Dave Trear invited Le Roux to play at his inaugural ball in Baton Rouge.

Most of the members of Le Roux knew each other either from a long time before or had played in bands together. They are all from Baton Rouge. When band members backed "Gatemouth Brown," they were able to do a State Department sponsored tour of Africa and Egypt, traveling to places like Botswana, Zambia, Kenya, Madagascar, and Sudan. Their style of music, although compared to groups like The Eagles and Little Feat, has a very definite style of its own. This band concentrates mostly on a vocal melodic sound but they do change moods easy enough to where their style is diversified and unmistakably Le Roux's own sound.

The group has also worked with the Dirt Band on their album, American Dream. Tony Haseldorn played the guitar solo on the smash title track single. Pollard and Campo both contributed to the first solo album by Kansas. Their talent, a mixture and mingling of hard work and dedication, paid off when they signed with Capitol Records. Their first album, Louisiana's Le Roux, was an instant success.

Oh! By the way: a roux is the gravy base of Cajun cooking and believe it or another, another band called themselves Le Roux. To avoid complications, thus we have Louisiana's Le Roux. This live performance will start at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium, Friday, February 6th. According to the success of this concert depends on you. In order to get the groups you want to hear, we must show our appreciation and our enthusiasm and cooperation. Tickets are $5.50 for Longwood students and general admission is $7.00. Special guest will be the Bruce Olsen band. Tickets went on sale January 28th and are available in the S-UN office. Seats are limited, so hurry! Don't miss Louisiana's Le Roux at Longwood!

Coffeehouse Features Nalo And Company

By SUSAN BUTLIN

On February 8, the Longwood College Coffeehouse presents an act not only quite different but also very special — Nalo and Company. As a duo act, Charles and Nalo are a married couple traveling the coffeehouse circuits bringing their own renditions to the music field.

Their type of music is as they describe it, "the blues — old and new — gospel and spiritual, rock, jazz, and whatever expresses something we believe in and is rhythmic with loads of feeling."

The act includes a wide variety of compositions ranging from traditional Negro spirituals, "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child," to "Hey Jude" by the Beatles, to "Suzanne" by Leonard Cohen. However, their act is special because of their different approaches. One favorite technique they use quite frequently is the reading of social commentary poetry, followed by a song echoing the same beliefs. Between numbers, they talk informally to the audience. The show is a blend of talk, poetry, political discussion and song.

Nalo in her career has appeared as a singer, dancer, actress, and director in various colleges and clubs. She went to Hampton Institute for four years and majored in speech and drama, and received a minor in art.

Charles and Nalo should prove to be a whole added dimension of coffeehouse entertainment. So come on and drop by and let their rhythm of soul talk to you.

Cast-Crew-Action!

By TAMARA NASH

The cast has been chosen, the crews have met and the practices have begun for the February 25-28 production of Rimers of Eldritch. Even with a small audition turnout, the cast of Rimers of Eldritch is bursting with the talent and experience necessary for an excellent production.

Although it is agreed that there is no major role, Frank Creasy is playing Skelly Manor, the town scapegoat and a strong character throughout the play. Frank is a senior and a veteran Longwood Player. Of his role Frank says, "I think Skelly is my hardest... most difficult role. Skelly is the scapegoat for all the evil that happens in the town... but he's more perceptive than any of the other characters. When Skelly says, 'I see,' he not only sees what they're doing but he knows how they feel."

Freshmen Myra Pearson (of Barefoot in the Park) and David Wood add the "younglove" aspect to Rimers as well as the tragic element that terminates their relationship.

Lonely Cora, the cafe owner, is portrayed by Kerry McCarthy and Mark Winecoff is her lover, the stranger to the town of Eldritch.

The Johnson family consists of Patsy (Sherry Forbes), her brother, Josh (Gary Wyatt), and their mother, Mavis (Carol Muria). Lisa Swackhammer is Martha Truit and her daughter, Lina, is Ruby Barnes. Martha's gossip companion is Wilma Atkins, played by Lissa Sandidge.

Freshman Lisa Magill has been cast as Eva's mother, Evelyn Jackson. Returning to Jarman stage is Karla Wilson, a former student and veteran Longwood Player, in the role of Mary Windrod. It is Mary's daughter, Nellie (Ginger Moss) whose trial for murder is the center of Rimers of Eldritch.

Doug Blevins has been assigned the double role of judge and preacher and Robert Graham portrays the trucker.

Do yourself a favor and make plans now to attend Rimers of Eldritch. You'll be glad you did!

Jamie Defrates Returns

By SUSAN BUTLIN

It's the week end of Mardi Gras! February 5 starts out the festivities of this traditional event with the return of the Jamie Defrates Trio. They will appear at 8 p.m. in the Gold Room.

Jamie originally appeared as a solo act, but this time he will be performing with his newly formed trio. He has had numerous appearances here in the Spotlight Concerts.

His Son of Dust album gives an indication as to what he's all about. Admission is free — so come see Jamie Defrates Trio on February 5.

The Art History Award was presented to Mrs. Jane Shelton and the Artist of the Month is Neil Sawyer.

Art Award Presented

By JOE JOHNSON

The Art History Award for the 1980-81 fall semester was presented to Mrs. Jane Shelton of Buckingham County. This cash award of $50 is given each semester for the best Art History term paper.

Jane Shelton is presently a candidate for a B.S. degree in Nursing. She has already received a diploma in that field from the Virginia Baptist Hospital School of Nursing. Her husband, Terry Shelton, is a purchasing agent for the Kyanite Mining operations in Buckingham.

While attending Longwood College as a part-time day student, Mrs. Shelton became interested in Carlingian book covers, a subject briefly discussed in her art history class. She decided to do her term paper for the course on these highly ornate book covers from the Charlemagne era. This paper was judged by the Art Department Faculty as the best for its quality of research and quality of writing.

Jane is the mother, of two children, Mary Elizabeth, three years old, and Anthony Cabot Shelton, 10 months old. She is currently the director of In-Service Education at Southside Community Hospital in Farmville.

Dionysus Delight

By JOE JOHNSON

"It takes longer to learn how to be a wine maker and vine grower than it does to learn how to be a physician or lawyer," said Thomas O'Grady, proprietor of the Rose Bower Vineyard and Winery at Hampden-Sydney.

Thomas O'Grady and his wife, Bronwyn, moved to Virginia from Baltimore seven years ago after he had completed his studies at the University of Baltimore. He is currently teaching creative writing and literature at Hampden-Sydney, but he hopes to devote all his time to the vineyard and his poetry.

The O'Grady's have renovated a colonial country house built on the outskirts of Hampden-Sydney and added a retail sales room, tasting room and, most importantly, a wine cellar. This spring he plans to build a greenhouse, nursery and fermentation room. From this 18th century dwelling called Rose Bower, Mr. O'Grady's have created a small enterprise which has nearly doubled in size since the summer of 1979 when the winery was licensed.

"The reason for this venture in private enterprise," said Thomas O'Grady, "is to live off the land, to feel comfortable with nature." And living comfortably with nature he surely does with 5 or 6 chickens and a multitude of dogs ranging from a spotted mutt to a red Labrador Retriever.

Mr. O'Grady likes to think of winemaking as a science and an art. "To be a first class winemaker takes at least 15 years and even then some people just don't have the creative flair for it. One has to understand the chemistry, botany, physics and craftsmanship it takes to grow and develop a winery. Then one has to have the artistic ability, the right sense of imagination, to merge all the subtle factors which go into making a quality wine."

Although Mr. O'Grady has been producing wine since the spring of 1979, he does not feel he is a true winemaker. He explained that presently he is only experimenting with different blends and various equipment. Eventually he will begin to polish (up) his work and see which wines are of outstanding quality and develop them to their highest potential. After this is done, he will proudly proclaim, "Yes, I am a winemaker."

The O'Grady's have 6 acres of their land devoted to growing two kinds of European grape vines, French American Hybrids and vinifera. This yields about 4,000 vines or 12,000 bottles of wine per year. Mr. O'Grady hopes to expand this to 5,000 vines by 1984.

"One of the main problems in expanding our vineyard," Mr. O'Grady stated, "is the need to stabilize the temperature ecologically. One has to produce a microclimate for the vines that is suitable to their growth." To do this the O'Grady's have had to set aside 10 acres to build a 9-acre lake and a 1-acre pond on either side of the vineyard which will moderate the surrounding temperature. They have also had to use approximately 15 acres of land to grow trees which will serve as a windbreak for the vines.

Mr. O'Grady is currently producing 5 different types of wine which he sells for $4 to $10 a bottle. These wines are as follows: Foch Nouveau, a dry red wine; Hampden Forest, a dry Claret; Johannisberg Riesling, a slightly sweet white wine; Pinot Chardonnay, a dry white burgundy-type wine; and Briery Lake, a dry white wine. The Johannisberg Riesling and Pinot Chardonnay will be available for tasting by April 1 of this year. The other wines will be available sometime after April 1 and before the beginning of July.

For those people who really enjoy the blue fruits' nectar, there is the Societe Des Vignerons, a club created by Mr. O'Grady that consists of wine lovers from around Virginia. For a fee of $100 they are offered the first options on certain wines that might be in short supply and they are given a 15 per cent discount on each bottle they buy. Three times a year they also gather in Mr. O'Grady's tasting room for a presale tasting of the wine which they evaluate for him.

Mr. O'Grady is also hoping to start a wine appreciation course in the fall of 1982. The course would cover how rare wines were made and would also allow some of the students to taste these "exquisite food products", thus allowing them to have a base from which to judge other wines. As Mr. O'Grady said, "It's like the guy who has never been exposed to quality—he just doesn't know what it is."

Rose Bower Vineyard and Winery is located on Route 686, just past the Hampden Riding Stables. Mr. O'Grady welcomes anybody who would like to visit, for like Dionysus, he hopes to spread the product of the noble grape amongst all mortals.

Swap Shop-- A Success?

By BRENDA COLEMAN

With the beginning of each school semester comes the opening of the Swap Shop. The Swap Shop is a student-oriented service provided for by the Student Government Association that gives Longwood students the opportunity to buy their books at a substantially lower cost.

The Swap Shop program usually begins two days after school opens each semester. Students bring in their used books to be classified, labeled, and set up on display to be sold. After first checking with their teachers to get exact volume and edition numbers of books being used in class, students will then check with the Swap Shop to see what books are in stock. If their books are in, they can then be purchased at a much lower cost than brand new books.

This year's chairman Christi Lewis and treasurer Beth Gouley stated that they handled approximately 2800 books, of which 2800 were sold. However, Christi also said that most students do not take advantage of the Swap Shop than do. The money made from the Swap Shop (10 cents charge if a book is sold, 5 cents if the book is not) will go toward the Swap Shop Scholarships given at the end of the year. The Swap Shop Committee urges professors to use books at least two semesters and students to use this money — saving service.

Longwood Jams With 7.1.4.'s

By CONNIE FALLON

If you've ever heard the campus expression "Cox Rox," you would be sure to know that Cox dormitory rocks pretty hard every afternoon. Sometimes it even sounds like there could be a live band in there. In fact, there is a five-piece band practicing in the Cox basement each afternoon and it's called the 7.1.4.'s.

The band members are Tom Welte and Pat Dolen, who play both the guitar and bass, Fred Metz on keyboards, Charles Kirkley plays drums and Jeff Schaffer takes lead on guitar. All the members supply vocals except Pat, who declines singing, and they are all Longwood

They first began practices at Tom's apartment during the past semester but were soon silenced by neighbors complaints. So the band came to Cox dormitory where they are allowed to rent the basement for practice sessions. The $50.00 a month for rent goes to the Cox Dorm Council.

The 7.1.4.'s have a few gigs under their belt already. Their first show was on December 13, 1980 in Lankford building's A.B.C. rooms. The party sold out but later on the group had a learning experience when they blew their speakers. Their second appearance was in the Robert E.

Lee Hotel in Lexington, where they also filled the house to capacity. Both shows went well and everyone had a good time jamming to the Rock-n-Roll and New Wave tunes.

The band shows a lot of potential and have set their next date for Wednesday, February 11, at the Red Lion Inn, here in Farmville. They have also volunteered their talents for the upcoming Muscular Dystrophy Superdance, and are looking forward to playing campus parties and social events. Anyone looking for a band to play at their party should contact any one of the band members, and don't forget to check out the 7.1.4.'s on February 11, at the Deadly.

Archeology Exhibit

The 1980 Longwood Summer Field School in Archeology began excavation in June and July of last summer on a prehistoric Indian site in the Cumberland State Forest, Cumberland County, Virginia.

Dr. James William Jordan, Director of the Field School and Associate Professor of Anthropology at Longwood College, has recently opened a small exhibit showing some of the artifacts recovered at the Anna's Ridge site in the Cumberland State Forest during the summer of 1980. The exhibit case is located on the second floor of the Hiner Building on the Longwood College campus. Anyone interested in seeing an overview of this archeological work may stop by the exhibit case at any time the Hiner Building is open.

Dr. Jordan is planning ten weeks of excavation at the same site during the summer of 1981. In the next several weeks Longwood College will announce the exact dates and the enrollment procedures for the 1981 Field School in Archeology.

Longwood ROTC Offers More!

By KURT COFFIELD

What did you do with your weekends last semester? Did you go caving, canoeing, camping, or rappelling? You did if you were enrolled in Army ROTC. The Department of Military Science offered these activities and many others, and are scheduling more for this semester.

The Longwood Rangers, a small group of students who want more from ROTC than what is normally offered, have been particularly busy. They have made two trips to Fork Pickett, Virginia, to learn night land navigation, rope bridge river crossing, patrolling techniques, and cold weather camping. Mr. George Stonikinis, Director of the Social Work Department, took the Rangers caving in western Virginia in December.

Two Longwood seniors, Janice Lembke and Jettaka McGregor, have been awarded one year ROTC scholarships. Competition for these scholarships was keen and these two outstanding students are to be commended for being selected. They bring the total number of Longwood students receiving ROTC scholarships to four.

Janice Lembke has also been selected as the recipient of the George C. Marshall award which is given to the most outstanding senior ROTC cadet from Longwood, University of Richmond, and Virginia Commonwealth University. A special congratulations is in order for this achievement.

If you are a SOPHOMORE!, It's not too late for you to get in on the action and earn a commission as an Army second lieutenant during your last two years in school. If you feel a challenge is here for you, see Captain McHenry or Captain Stanford on the third floor of East Ruffner for the details.

Lancers Seek To End Slump

Stung by three consecutive defeats, including two one-point losses, Longwood's men's basketball team will face a major challenge when the Virginia State Trojans visit Thursday night for the first meeting ever between the two schools in men's basketball.

Longwood, 14-8 after a heart-breaking 58-57 loss at Radford Saturday night, will be out to put an end to a three-game losing streak, but faces a tough task in trying to knock off Virginia State. The Trojans, 10-7 at one point last week, are led by the high-scoring duo of Darrell Stith and Julius Norman. Coach Floyd Laisure had led the team to a dramatic turnaround from last season's 5-22 mark.

Having lost five games by one-point margins, Longwood lost a three-point lead in the last 50 seconds Saturday night at Radford as Highlander Jeff Wilson picked up a loose ball and fired in a 20-footer with one second remaining.

"We missed five uncontested layups in the last three minutes," pointed out Longwood coach Ron Bash. "Our guys just don't think. We made a stupid foul with about 50 seconds left and Radford made two free throws to pull within one. Then we took a bad shot with 20 seconds left to give them the ball back. It was a shame to lose, because we played good basketball for 35 minutes."

Mike McCroey poured in 19 points to lead Longwood. McCroey made seven of eight free throws, giving him 15 out of 16 in Longwood's last two games and 21 of 22 in the last three games. Both McCroey and leading scorer and rebounder

Jerome Kersey, who was held to 11 points and seven rebounds, fouled out late in the game. Center Ron Orr added 12 points for the Lancers.

Kersey, who already owns the Longwood record for rebounds in a game (19), broke another college standard Wednesday night at Maryland Eastern Shore in an 82-75 defeat. Kersey grabbed 15 rebounds giving him 200 for the season and breaking teammate Randy Johnson's mark of 193. The 6-6 freshman is averaging over 16 points and 9 rebounds for the season.

Concerning Longwood's chances against Virginia State, Bash had this to say: "We expect Virginia State to be exceptionally strong on the boards. This will be a problem for us. I don't know how the Radford loss will affect the team, but we're going to have to win all of our final games (6) if we hope to have a 20-win season."

Basketball

By JOHN TODD

The Junior Varsity has now been in existence for two years. This year's team is a mixture of players from last year's team along with an influx of new players.

The season started slow with Longwood losing three of its first four. But then the Lancers rolled to three straight victories before Christmas break.

After break the Lancers have had a great deal of ill luck. They were crushed by Smithdeal-Massey and again suffered a loss to Radford Saturday night.

Key players for the team this year are tri-captains Steve Crowder, Walter Taylor and Dalaney Brown. Brown also leads the team in scoring with a 15 ppg. average. Taylor ranks second on the team in scoring and steals.

The J.V. team needs and would appreciate your support. The next game is Feb. 13 at Fork Union Military Academy.

McDonald's Player Of The Week

From Sports Info

Freshman forward Jerome Kersey (Clarksville), who is the Lancers leading scorer and rebounder, has been named McDonald's Player of the Week for the fourth consecutive week.

Kersey's selection covers the period January 23-January 30. McDonald's Player of the Week is chosen by the basketball coaches at Longwood.

In a 82-75 defeat at the hands of Maryland Eastern Shore

Wednesday, Kersey scored 18 points and grabbed 15 rebounds. This was the sixth straight outing in which the 6-6 forward has led the Lancers in scoring and rebounding.

In addition, Kersey is shooting 63 per cent from field while averaging 16.4 points and 9.3 rebounds per game. He also leads the Lancers in blocked shots with 22.

A Social Work major, Jerome is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Kersey.

Gymnasts Defeat Radford

From SPORTS INFO

When the Longwood-Radford gymnastics meet ended Friday night, the Lady Lancers heaved a very justified sigh of relief. In a fierce-fought battle that wasn't decided until the final score was flashed, Longwood managed to hold on for a narrow 127.65-127.10 victory over the Highlanders. The most important result of the meet, hopes Longwood coach Ruth Budd, is that it will set a precedent for the rest of the season.

For the last four meets, Longwood's team and individual scores have noted gradual improvements. Hopefully this will be a good omen for the Lady Lancers as they face tough opponents in their final season competitions.

"This was the toughest meet we've had this season," stated Budd. "But we haven't reached our potential yet."

The uneven bars turned out to be Longwood's strong point against Radford. Sharon Pillow won the event with an 8.10, the best year this season. Jaudon Conkwright and Kathy Idelson tied for second with a score of 8.05. Rounding out the night for Idelson were second place finishes in all-around and floor, and a third place finish in beam.

Freshman Monica Chandler took the title in floor and second in vaulting.

The Lady Lancers will have a week's rest before resuming competition Saturday in Lancer Hall against Virginia Tech and East Carolina. One week after that meet Longwood will face the only team that it could not defeat last season — defending Division II State and Regional champions William and Mary.

Wahoos Split Limelight

By MARK KARL SEGAL

The Virginia Cavaliers are making Wahoo history, with flute in hand because the Wahoo piper is taking the rest of the state with him. On the Division III Circuit Roanoke College is ranked in the top 20 nationally with only one loss. Randolph-Macon hits home with a 14-3 record; one of those losses to top ranked Virginia. The Cavaliers handily defeated their in state Division II foe, but after all U. Va.'s blue and orange horsemen are currently tied with Oregon State for the number one spot in the AP and are second in the UPI. Guard Jeff Lamp is within five points of becoming the 12th player in ACC history to score 2,000 career points. That is scoring at least 22 points every game for 3½ seasons.

In other Division I news no one can forget ODU, lead by Billy Mann's upset of previously number one ranked DePaul by one point. VCU, lead by 6-9 Kenny Stancell and the sharp-shooting of Danny Kottak and Edmund Sherod topped number nine ranked South Alabama by 16 points in a return-the-favor grudge match.

The women at ODU are becoming somewhat of a legacy in college basketball. This year's team — minus all American Nancy Lieberman is still in the top ten. But this time they are down to number three because of a disappointing setback at number one Louisiana Tech two weeks ago.

Longwood Grapplers Decisoned

By KURT COFFIELD

On Saturday, January 31, the Longwood Lancers traveled to Lexington to challenge the Washington and Lee Generals in a dual wrestling meet.

The final score of Longwood 24, W & L 35, was not a good indication of the closeness of the match. Giving up forfeits in the lightest and heaviest weight classes, the Lancers started off with a 12 point deficit.

The Grapplers won 4 of the 9 matches wrestled with pins. Starting off the pinning streak for the Lancers was Mike Flashlight at 142 pinned his man in 3 minutes and 20 seconds. Steve Shennet, a strong returnee from last season, pinned his man in the 2nd period. Two first year wrestlers, Mike Gnoft, at 167 and John Keagan, at 177, both had pins. Bob Hulsey and Dan Richard both 3 year veterans at Longwood, fought hard but were defeated.

There is a home match Wednesday, February 11, against Hampden-Sydney and the University of Richmond. This match will be a very competitive and spirited match for the Lancers, so come on out and support the Longwood Grapplers.

By MARK SEGAL

Mary Jane Smith and Sue Rama had something in common—they were the only two female basketball players to achieve scoring 1,000 points in their college careers at Longwood. But let's bid them farewell; Brenda Fettrow quietly achieved joining their ranks last week in a losing effort to Davis and Elkins in the lonesome mountains of West Virginia.

"I was shooting a foul shot," said the 5'9" senior, "at an away game when I broke 1,000 points—I was not even aware I had broken that mark. The team just stood up from the bench, in the middle of a losing effort and applauded. They must have thought we were crazy. But I knew what it was for."

Just maybe those W.Va. hills were symbolic of the Lancer basketball season. One minute they are on top and the next minute they are stuck in a doldrum somewhere in one of those W.Va. Valleys. Regardless, the soft spoken woman speaks with a bewildered tone on the teams performance after Christmas break. "We were 7-2 before Christmas. Now we are 8-9. I don't feel we are doing anything different than before break. We are just having a little trouble playing two halves of good basketball."

And that is exactly what the lady Lancers are having trouble doing—playing two consistently solid halves of basketball. Against Radford Longwood dropped a 62-54 decision, but worse to home fans, Longwood kissed a 41-31 lead good-bye when Delaware State rallied 10 straight points for a 49-47 disappointment.

Brenda is majoring in Psychology—which might be a good idea. Possibly a little psychological analysis could do the team some good. But as for putting Brenda on the sofa for a good session, Forget it! At Red Land High School in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania—yes that is Harrisburg, the owner of Three Mile Island—she played field hockey, basketball and softball for four years. Her tri-sport activities earned her a small honor. She didn't know if it was worth mentioning; so twenty minutes later she interrupts, "Well, this might seem stupid or something, but I was the Most Valuable Female Athlete my senior year."

So stupid in fact that she received an athletic scholarship to attend Longwood. Was it stupid Brenda that you were asked to tryout for the womens olympic basketball team? For a twenty one year old to participate as chairman (or chairwoman) of orientation; be on Residence Board; take time to be dorm president and take an extra moment as corresponding secretary for Alpha Sigma Tau while maintaining a 2.6 average (3.0 last semester) are not exactly trivial or stupid. Nor can we ignore her basketball stats at Longwood.

Brenda did not go after each statistical category as a ball hog. "Brenda is not out for herself. She thinks about how well the team can do," says coach Carolyn Hodges of her prodigy. "She is a clutch player and really comes through in tight situations." Brenda knew she would reach the 1,000 plateau, but unselfishly, "worked hard on her passes this year" Coach Hodges will tell.

"Brenda really won't tell you anything about herself," confides Hodges. "Did she tell you she was chosen as a member of Who's Who in American College Students?"

Well, no she didn't. Nor did she tell she is first on the team in assists. Our supposed selfish ball hog has generated her abilities as a first class all-round ball player. She is currently third in all time career scoring. Currently she has just nipped the 1,000 mark, but Mary Jane Smith (who is second) left Longwood with 1167 points in her wake. It is possible for Brenda to shatter that mark. Less likely of course is Sue Rama's mark of destruction. She tallied 1471 points.

She places second, third or fourth in other such categories as Most Points for a Single Season, Best Career Average, Most Rebounds in a Season, etc. The list is infinite and so is her future. But Brenda is really not sure of her future. Surely her talent can't go to waste. Even in a nation with a dying economy and a depleting job market is not there some place for the Brenda Fettrows in America? Maybe the freedom of our ex-hostages can be symbolic for us all to cease being captives of not only some irrational captors distraught emotions, but our own complex emotions that can curse our own freedom here in the U.S. Perhaps their release will signify a new beginning for Brenda and the rest of us to stretch our cramped minds without resentment of the U.S. situation at hand. In this world of fewer meat and potatoes Brenda still provides the gravy.

"Well what is it that you do want to do after graduation?"

"I am not sure."

"Not sure?"

"No."

"What about a psychology oriented field?"

"I can't say for sure. But I just take my life one day at a time."

Well, if one day at a time helped Brenda Fettrow, I wonder what tomorrow will bring for the rest of the world.

Lady Lancers End Shooting Slump

FROM SPORTS INFO

Longwood's women's basketball team, which opens play this week in the Winthrop College Invitational Tournament Thursday, had its losing streak extended to seven straight Saturday night in a 78-74 loss to Division I James Madison, but there may be a silver lining in the defeat as the Lady Lancers broke out of a prolonged shooting slump.

Longwood, led by Robin Hungate with 22 points and Cindy Eckel with 20, canned 31 of 63 shots from the floor and 12 of 16 from the free throw line in the loss to JMU. While the Lady Lancers' record dipped to 8-9 with the loss, Coach Carolyn Hodges felt her team's performance bodes well for the future.

"I am really pleased with our shooting percentages," said the coach Saturday night. "If we can just keep shooting as we did tonight it should really make a difference as we head into the last part of our conference play."

Sparked by Hungate and Eckel, Longwood rallied from a five-point halftime deficit to go ahead of the Duchesses 66-59 with less than six minutes remaining. James Madison, which made good use of a significant height advantage, rallied in the final moments to take the win. Longwood turned in its best performance of the new year despite losing.

"I'm thrilled about the quality of play," said Hodges. "We have had some problems that we've gotten things straightened out now. In practice last week we concentrated on passing the ball quickly and working for the good shot. I. It paid off tonight."

Senior tri-captain Brenda Fettrow who had an outstanding game Saturday night with 14 points, three assists and four steals, scored 11 points in a 61-50 loss to Davis E. Elkins Tuesday to pass the 1,000 point mark.

Fettrow's showing against Davis & Elkins gave her 1,002 career points and ranking her behind Sue Rama ('77) with 1,471 and Maryjane Smith ('80) with 1,167.

Longwood, which has a 5-4 record in VAAW Div. II play with five conference games left, can still finish near the top of the regular season standing with strong play over the next few weeks. League games remaining include: George Mason and Richmond at home and Liberty Baptist, William & Mary and Radford on the road.

Longwood will serve as host for the VAAW State semifinals and finals March 6-7.

Junior center Robin Hungate ended her recent shooting slump in a big way against James Madison. Hungate, who's scoring average has dropped four points since before Christmas, gunned in 9 of 14 shots Saturday night and made four of five free throws.

"I'm really pleased for Robin," said Coach Carolyn Hodges. "She did an about face in the Madison game."

Forward Cindy Eckel continues to rank as the number two scorer in the latest VAAW Div. II statistics. Eckel, averaging 18.2 points, also ranks among the leaders in rebounding with an 8.7 average for seventh (Continued on Page 8)

IAA

Both the Men's and Women's Basketball Teams are well into their seasons. The top four men's teams in the A league are: Social Security, Salt and Pepper, Too Much, and TMI. The top four men's teams in the B league are: Boinkers II, Buckers, New Edition, and Boinkers III. It is too early in the women's season to determine the top teams.

The Junior Class won Songfest which was held January 29 in the Gold Room. The Sophomore Class came in second with the Freshmen Class holding third place. This is the fifth year in a row that the Songfest cup has been awarded to a Red and White Class.

Top players in the Foul Shooting Tournament include three double eliminations in the Men's Division. In the first elimination, Doug Harris came out on top. In the second, there was a tie between Derek Crow and Ira Degrood. There was also a tie in the third elimination between Larry Cromer and Paige Tilghman. As soon as the ties are decided, the three top players will compete for the winning position.

In the Women's Division the top players in the Foul Shooting Tournament are: Ellen Ferguson, Deb Taylor, Winona Bayne, Gayle Shular, Sharon Payne and Susan Melvin.

The Mandatory Participants meetings for Ping Pong Singles is tonight in the IAA room. Entry blanks for Co-ed Volleyball are due February 9. The participants meeting is on February 10. No All Sports Trophy points will be given in this event, but the amount of participation will determine whether or not this event will become a regular IAA event.

The student body is to be commended. Since the first of the year more people have been attending the meetings. Upcoming meetings will determine what type of tournaments will be held for softball, rule changes for flag football, and changes in the IAA Constitution. With your help, the IAA will keep up the great success and 1981 will be a great year!

Player Of The Week

From Sports Info

Senior guard Brenda Fettrow became only the third player in the history of Longwood women's basketball to score over 1,000 career points last week, and for her accomplishment, the 5-9 cager has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period January 23-30.

Fettrow scored 11 points in a loss to Davis & Elkins Tuesday night to push her point total to 1,002. She joined Sue Rama ('77) who scored 1,471 and Maryjane Smith ('80) who scored 1,167 in Longwood's 1,000 point club.

An all-around player who can score, rebound, play defense and lead the fastbreak, Fettrow has been a starter since her freshman season and one of the team captains the past three seasons.

"Brenda has been an enthusiastic and determined participant in our program the past three years," said Coach Carolyn Hodges. "She has been the player we have looked to in tight situations. She has been a real leader."

Burdened by the pressure of nearing the 1,000 point mark the past few weeks, Fettrow admitted she was happy and relieved to finally have the milestone behind her.

"A lot of people have been talking to me about doing it (passing the 1,000 point mark)," she said. "Now that I have the 1,000 point thing behind me, I can concentrate on playing well and helping the team."

Fettrow, who holds Longwood records for assists in a season (100) and in a game (7), is a graduate of Red Land High School in Etters, PA. The Psychology major is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Fettrow, Sr. of Indian Harbour.

L. C. Rubber Smacks Merchants

By MARK KARL SEGAL

Longwood students have been complaining that local banks and merchants will not cash their checks. But a recent poll of area merchant's views indicated just why Longwood students are having problems. There is a general consensus among several store managers (exception: Par-Bils) that Longwood males are overdrawing their accounts more so than girls. According to one source that asks to remain anonymous, that figure is 10 males to every female at Longwood. Considering that there are 650 men and 1,750 women at Longwood, there is no excuse.

According to Mike Fore, manager of Safeway, "I look forward to serving them (Longwood students), but I occasionally have problems with checks." He added that the problem is not getting any better. "This year is definitely worse than last."

Mr. Fore, when asked if he thought the problem could be related to the present state of the economy: "I can not say it is because of the economy, but if you don't have it (money) you shouldn't spend it."

Safeway has a fairly lenient policy on check cashing. They prefer an account with them. This simply consists of filling out a card with some vital information.

William Ross of Peoples Drug Store at the Farmville Shopping

Center was not quite as lenient as the others. "Longwood students are more of a problem than Hampden-Sydney students."

Mr. Ross did not want to state any figures, and declined further comment. He did say that he was to meet with his district manager and the company's senior vice president to decide on the stores check cashing policy with students. Obviously the credit of Longwood students is in jeopardy. Mike Fore believes that this jeopardy could be alleviated if Longwood were to raise "standards." These "standards" can be defined as the school enacting some board policy, or honor code amendment to enforce the writing of checks by students.

The most lenient check cashing policy can be found at Par-Bils. Bill Grogan of Par-Bils is willing to serve the college community but not without recourse. "We try to make the student cashing a three party check stand up to it," Grogan stated. This means that if a student cashes a check written to them at Par Bils and it bounces, then the student cashing the check will pay a service charge.

Most merchants agreed that a problem was when a student will cash a check and then leave school. This makes collecting a burden and destroys the credit of students in its wake.

Area banks skip the corner merchants policy of leniency, and are more reluctant to accept checks from area students. The First National Bank of Farmville cashes personal checks for Longwood students not to exceed $25.00. Virginia National Bank does not cash check for non-customers: VNB has a Longwood branch and an office downtown. Neither office cashes checks for non-customers.

Par-Bils and Safeway cash checks for out of town students. Par-Bils is open 24 hours a day. But the "standards" that Mike Fore spoke of must be enacted soon or the doors to credit will be slammed in Longwood students faces, all because of a minority that insist on destroying the reputation of everyone.

It's Black Culture Week

By LISA BOWERS

Black Culture Week is being observed this week, February 8-12, 1981 with a series of discussions, lectures, and special events. The week, which is organized by Longwood's Afro-American Student Alliance (AASA), began with a concert by Longwood's Gospel Choir Sunday afternoon in Jarman. On Monday night the acting troupe of Ms. Beverly Ford, Longwood graduate, presented their production of "Slab-town Convention" in Wygal Auditorium. On Tuesday night the Gospel Choir will present a short concert in the Red and White rooms of Lankford, after which there will be a lecture in the Green room by Ms. Edna Allen Bledsoe of Longwood's Social Work department.

On Wednesday night Mr. Fred Jordan from the Lynchburg Correctional Unit will speak, after which a panel discussion will be held by Mr. Robert Cooley of Petersburg; both of these events will be held in the Red and White rooms. A talent show featuring local high school and Longwood talent as well as blocking by AKA sorority and Omega Psi Phi fraternity will be held on Thursday night in the Red, White, and Green rooms.

The AASA is sponsoring a semi-formal dance on February 21, 1981 from 9 a.m. - 1 a.m. in the lower dining hall, featuring the Virginia State College Jazz Band. This dance is open to the public with no admission charge. During this dance the AASA will initiate its new officers for 1981-1982.

AASA President Louise Nowlin states that this week's events "are open to the campus and community" and asks everyone to "please come out to support us!"

Phonathon Goal Set At $6000

By KATHY VANNICE

The Parents Phonathon is being held March 2, 3, and 4, 1981 from 6:30-9:45 p.m. in the Honors Council Room, Lankford Building. This is the 4th Parents Phonathon that has been sponsored by the Student Alumni Association under the coordination of the Director of Annual Funds, Mrs. Barbara Nanzig.

This year it was decided to open up the phonathon to campus-wide volunteers as a means of raising money for their school sponsored organization. Any organization is invited to volunteer for the Phonathon. Each night, 10 phones will be used to call approximately 1500 parents. A goal of $6000 has been set for the three night event. Each night we would hope a different organization would do the calling, but we would accept the offer of two groups to share a night. Prizes will be awarded on the highest amount of pledges received with 1st prize being $175, 2nd prize $100 and the third prize $75. If two groups are sharing the night then the prize money would be split.

If your organization is interested in raising money by working for the Phonathon, then contact Mrs. Barbara Nanzig in the Alumni Office on the second floor of the Ruffner Building by Friday, February 13, at noon.

The Student Alumni Association hopes that in coming years they will be able to offer more opportunities to more student groups to raise funds for their projects and scholarships.

Super Dance Plans Underway

By DIANE COSBY

"I Never Knew Love Like This Before" is the name of a popular song by Stephanie Mills. It is also the theme for this year's Super Dance which will take place on March 6th and 7th.

The purpose of the dance is to raise money for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Presently, there are 180 participants who will be dancing for twenty hours in order to raise money. These people will be dancing from 7:00 p.m. on Friday, March 6th until 3:00 p.m. on Saturday, March 7th.

Debra Spencer, committee chairman of Super Dance 1981, says she is overwhelmed by the enthusiastic participation of Longwood students in planning the dance. "We have a total of 180 dancers, up from last year's 60." The dancers will be striving to better the 1980 total of $6,100. All the entertainment during the dance will be provided by

The 7.1.4.'s will be playing on Friday from 9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. There will be a mixer during this time and everyone is invited to come. After the 7.1.4.'s finish performing, the following organizations will be providing music for the dancers: Delta Sigma Phi, Sigma Phi Epsilon, Pi Kappa Phi, and Alpha Chi Rho. There will also be exhibitions by the Longwood Dance Company, Dr. Bobbit, and the Jazz Band.

Everyone is urged to support the dancers with pledges. Also, contributions from organizations on and off campus will be deeply appreciated. If you cannot afford to make a pledge to support one of the dancers, please make an effort to attend the mixer. There will be an admission charge of $1.00 per person. This will be a great way to have a lot of fun and at the same time you will be helping to make Super Dance 1981 a success.

Vest Sides With The Desperados

By JACQUILINE BURTON

"To ask the meaning of metaphor is to ask what poems mean, or indeed if they mean anything at all" was a point made by Dr. Quentin Vest, Associate Professor of English, in a lecture he gave Wednesday, February 4, in the Gallery of Lancaster Library. Dr. Vest was the speaker for the third event of the 1980-81 Seminar Lecture Series sponsored by the Department of English, Philosophy and Foreign Languages.

In a lecture entitled "The Meaning of Metaphor," Dr. Vest discussed three positions regarding the meaning of the metaphor: the logical and the visionary theories, both of which are the more traditional views; and his own, which he calls the "desperado" theory. Dr. Vest maintains that all three positions share a common dislike for "any theory or critical approach that reduces poetics to psychology." They also oppose all the theories which undertake the study of a poet's personality for clues to the meaning of the metaphors in his poetry. All three agree that the meaning of metaphor must be understood, and that poetic communication must be differentiated from prose communication in that poetry is written by the poet to express an emotion he really feels.

Dr. Vest says that the logical view regards the metaphor as merely an analogous figure of speech. It rejects the idea that the poet possesses an exclusively innate ability to sense or assess any visionary truths. This concept of the use of metaphor is reflected in the plain simple verses of Ben Johnson.

Elements of the visionary concept are found in the works of such 17th-century Metaphysical poets as John Donne, George Herbert, and later, in the works of William Blake. The visionary view supports the belief that the metaphor is the instrument with which poets are able to communicate otherwise inexpressible mythological truths. Poets do not invent, but discover that which already exists. This has been the basic belief of the so-called New Criticism of the twentieth-century. Supporters of this concept feel that good poets must mean their metaphors; the metaphor cannot be used as an ornament or symbol for logical meaning.

Dr. Vest concluded his lecture with a description of the view he, himself, supports, which he terms the "desperado" position. This view is neither rational like the logical view, nor mythological like the visionary. It distrusts the theories of both these traditional positions. Its main concerns are not knowing rather than knowing and unlearning rather than learning. Dr. Vest's position denies the existence of poetic technique. The metaphors of the desperado poets—poets like Stephan Crane, Wallace Stevens, and Robert Frost—have neither logical nor visionary meetings; they mean simply what they say.

Geist Bloodmobile

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"Blood is vital to life, and a gift of blood is perhaps the most precious gift one person can bestow upon another."

On February 25 and 26, Geist, Longwood College's leadership honorary, will sponsor its annual Bloodmobile Drive. The campaign is to be held in the Red-White-Green Rooms of Lankford Building between 12 p.m. and 6 p.m. The blood will go toward helping the residents of Farmville and the surrounding areas.

Le Roux Performs For Sell-Out Crowd

Last Friday evening, Louisiana's Le Roux performed in Jarman Auditorium to a near sell-out crowd.

"Le Roux" is a six-man band with three albums out, one of which was released publicly within the last two months. Le Roux also has a fast growing list of top selling singles.

The opening act for Friday's concert was "Bruce Olson and the Offenders" a tough new wave foursome with a sharp edged sound. Although they have no albums to their credit as of yet, leader Bruce Olson suggested that a debut album might not be far off in the future.

After the Offenders set of a slightly less than an hour of straight, hard, new wave, Le Roux took the stage. The early portion of the show was highlighted with such hits as,

"New Orleans Ladies" and "Take a Ride on a Riverboat" both of which are from their first album. Le Roux then gave the audience a sampling of the material from their new album entitled "Up." The show climaxed with a marathon version of "Slow Burn" which gave each band member a chance for solo breaks.

After the body of the performance Le Roux came back twice for encores before saying the final good night.

Apparently that wasn't the end of the show though: During a fraternity party at Hampden-Sydney members of Le Roux made an appearance and gave a short performance.

Performing Arts Presents Parker

By SUSAN BUTLIN Kennedy Center-Rockefeller
The first Prize winner in the Foundation International Competition for Excellence in the Performance of American Music will appear in Jarman auditorium Friday, February 13, at 8 p.m.

The Series of the Performing Arts presents Baritone, William Parker. This man competed against more than 300 other contestants for the honor bestowed on him in September of 1979. Among his high attributes are other such awards as: he won the Premier Grand Prix at the Toulouse International Competition, top honors at the Munich International Singing Competition, and at the Montreal International Competition first prize and the special Poulence Prize at the Paris International Singing Competition.

He was born in Pennsylvania and is a graduate of Princeton. He is in his early thirties, yet he not only has accomplished his accredited fame but he has performed with many leading orchestras and opera companies. He also has recorded three albums.

Included in the program is noted pianist and composer, Ernest Bacon. Once, Parker was so impressed with one of Bacon's familiar ballads that he wanted Bacon to set it to music and used it as a contribution to the Bicentennial celebration.

Also in the program format is Ned Rorem, who has appeared here at Longwood before. His compositions touch the heart of American History in which he incorporates his feelings about war and peace written in 1969.

Pianist, William Huckaby will accompany Parker in his presentation. He sounds a little impressive huh? Well in the words of one of the judges in the competition Parker won in 1979—he said, "The superior quality of his voice, his assured manner on the concert platform and his imaginative program that amply displayed the rich repertoire of American Vocal music."

The New Post said, "He asks for comparisons with the grants of Lieder who have some before, last night at Alice Tully Hall, William Parker met the challenge."

Probably the best and most significant advantage to all this—is—you enjoy Parker's program. Obviously, Parker seems to have much to offer, come and see, especially when it is free—then you can be the judge!

You've Come A Long Way, Baby!

By TAMARA NASH
From an all girls' school less than ten years ago, Longwood College has progressed into a truly coed institution. Men have entered athletics, cheering, drama, music, and most recently, dance. For the second semester there are males in Longwood's Dance Company and we're glad they are!

Last semester, Doug Blevins and Jack Tolbert joined the company and, this semester, Frank Creasy, Ross Conner and Dean Lakey, as well as Doug, are the four male members that have added a unique dimension to the Company.

As Longwood loses its "all girl" status more completely each year, Frank Creasy reveals why, as a senior, he decided to go out for Company.

"This is the first semester I haven't been in a varsity sport—either soccer or wrestling. Dance is helping to keep me in shape. I wouldn't say dance is more rigorous than wrestling but it uses some muscles in a lot of different ways that you don't use in either soccer or wrestling."

Training for dance can be quite strenuous. On Monday and Wednesday from 4:00 to 5:30, the group has a technique class but as the choreographers work up their dances for the Spring Concert, practices are more frequent.

It seems most of the guys entering Company are already associated with the arts or physical education and dance is definitely beneficial in those areas.

"Dance is a good compliment to my theatre training," says Frank. "It's a study in movement...The two art forms really compliment each other."

With a ratio of 22 to four, you have to wonder if the guys wouldn't feel a bit inhibited but after that first initial meeting, they seemed to be quite at ease. Of course, you have to give the girls credit, too. Obviously a big change, the girls work easily with the guys and are willing to give advice and help any time they can.

So, the males have adjusted without any problems. What about the girls who had always worked exclusively with a company of females which now has gone coed?

"At first there was a slight adjustment for a few who may have felt a twinge of shyness but it's a nice change," says Grace

Ann Rogers, a three year company veteran and president of the dancers.

She points out that with the new dance studio, the entire atmosphere of the company has changed. Instead of working routines with a feminine touch or the girls themselves taking masculine parts, now, there are men who are much more adept at handling these moves of strength and masculinity.

Under the leadership of Dr. Betty Bowman, the dance company has made a smooth transition from female to coed and she has done it with nothing but praise from her students who admire and respect her leadership. The ease and success with which the guys have entered reflects Dr. Bowman's fine talent.

The entire campus is anxiously awaiting the Spring Concert when the Company reveals their "newest" talent and refreshes us with the usual abundance of grace and beauty of dance. And in the words of a Company member, "It's a nice change."

Crowd Grew For TAC

By CHERYL WILCOX

The United States Air Force TAC Showcase Band took the Gold Room by storm Saturday afternoon at 2:00. Gator Allmond, Walt Street, Lew Taylor, Marty Martes and Terry Klemensen, from Langley Air Force Base are the 5 talented performers who make up TAC Showcase.

Beginning with the first notes of the popular tune "More Today Than Yesterday" the crowd was made to smile, tap their feet, clap their hands and even sing along with TAC. The crowd was small in the Gold Room, but throughout the forty-five minute performance it continued to grow.

Gator Allmond and Walter Street sang such tunes as "Mame", "Up, Up and Away", "One in a Million", "Bandstand Boogie", "Rhinstone Cowboy", "She Believes in Me", and "New York, New York". Their arrangements and vocals would have made even Kenny Rogers and Frank Sinatra take notice.

Walt Street explains that it takes many hours of auditions to be a member of TAC. Lew Taylor, the arranger of much of the groups music, commented "Even before I got in the Air Force, I auditioned and was promised membership in the TAC Band at Langley."

Listening to TAC Showcase Band was a terrific way to spend a Saturday afternoon. Those that missed TAC try and catch them next year because they will be back.

Senior Spotlight

By BRENDA COLEMAN
"I just know this is going to be a fun-filled interview," began senior Jim Dunn. "Remember, this was YOUR idea!"
Rather reluctantly, Jim submitted to being this week's senior in the spotlight. "Why did I come to Longwood—it was the first college to accept me—Seriously! I had heard that LC was a teachers' school, so I went into education until I decided I didn't want to teach."

Since he decided not to pursue an education major, Jim is now graduating with a math computer science major and an English minor. "My future??

Graduating would be a nice step forward. I'd like to go to graduate school and get a job in the New Orleans - Gulf of Mexico area. I love that area of the country. I went down there during fall break my sophomore year and just fell in love with the place. It is always so warm, quiet, and nice."

"I had to change to a math major because there is no money or future in education. It was not worth all the time and effort in my classes. You have to be dedicated and I wasn't."

Jim may not have been dedicated to his first education major choice, but he has been dedicated to the organizations he belongs to. He was one of the founding brothers of Pi Kappa Phi social fraternity as well as vice-president and secretary. He was in Freshman Commission as an elf and has been active in both orientation and Oktoberfest.

"Yes, I've been involved; however, I'm sorry I came to Longwood in a way. I would have rather gone to a larger school BUT I'm also glad I met the people I've met here. I could not have met this same group of people anywhere in the world."

A native of Virginia Beach, Jim predicts that "Longwood will eventually have to become a university. The school is growing. Just since I first entered, (Continued on Page 8)

Critique Column

By JOE JOHNSON

Probably the best thing one can say about "A Change of Seasons" is that it had an excellent first scene. But angel-faced Bo Derek (that's right, the one with all those glorious digits) had to get out of that hot tub sometime. After an exquisite sampling of nymph-like beauty, the movie went steadily downhill.

Anthony Hopkins plays an English professor who is two-timing it with a sexy coed (Bo) from his class. His wife, Shirley MacLaine, finds a more suitable revenge than divorce and tosses about with Michael Brandon, a cabinetmaker, who just happens to arrive at their home in time for Hubbie's convention in Montreal.

For their two-week vacation, they devise a unique (their daughter says "sick") plan for allowing wife and husband to vacation with their extramarital mates, respectively. Believe it or not, everything works out for this "commune of geritol generation" except for one lonesome loser, who, in keeping with the trendy feminism throughout the film, is (you guessed it) the hubbie.

The script manages to take some of my favorite performers and make them look like complete lunatics. Shirley MacLaine giggles and screeches like a high school freshman to reveal her inner beauty and charm. Anthony Hopkins is forced to talk in an inaudible mumble with a silly sardonic half-grin to express his wit and razor-sharp intelligence. And, as if mumbles and half-smiles weren't good enough, the script has him lecture on Shakespeare during the introduction and later gets him into an argument with his wife's playmate about Andrew Marvell's poetry and the essence of time.

Michael Brandon doesn't do much of anything except make love, make cabinets and make dinner. He does, however, manage to throw a little philosophy into the movie (if you want to call it that). It goes something like this—"You can love some of the people all of the time, or you can love all of the people some of the time, but you can't love all of the people all of the time."

It's not that I don't appreciate what Erich Segal, Ronnie Kern and Fred Segal were trying to do (Continued on Page 8)

Valentine Wish

Dear Students,

This is the week of Valentine's Day and we felt it was our duty and privilege to wish all students, faculty, and administration a warm and special week.

Sometimes it is difficult to tell someone that you love them. This is the week to change that. Time and life itself is too precious and short to let slip away with emotions kept inside. Tell your classmates, tell your family, but more importantly, tell that friend sitting beside you that you love them.

"For it is not how much we love, but how much we are loved." Gang Green—be our Valentine!

WHAT DO YOU MEAN?

I NEED SOMETHING FOR THAT ONE GIRL OF MY DREAMS, THAT ONE SPECIAL ROSE IN THE FLOWER GARDEN OF LIFE. TO LET HER KNOW THAT I'LL ALWAYS BE TRUE TO ONLY ONE HEART...

WELL, YOU SHOULD BE ABLE TO FIND SOMETHING TO EXPRESS THAT WITHOUT SPENDING A LOT OF MONEY.

YEAH, BUT I NEED SEVEN OF THEM!

Editor's Turn

Valentine's Day should be a time to show extra attention to those that mean the most to you. This day of celebration will include special thoughts or events for your immediate circle of friends and family.

It would be commendable to share this meaning of love and concern with others you may not know. The community here at school or in your hometown is certainly full of people who would appreciate any small token of attention.

Many events that will be coming up on campus will require voluntary help from students. The members of Geist would appreciate your gift of participation in the Geist Bloodmobile Drive. The Phonathon that will take place in Lankford will be a success if students will donate their time to make the calls. Student participation is the main element of the Super Dance. People are needed to help at the dance and any pledge you can give will help make the contribution to the Muscular Dystrophy Association even greater.

There are infinite opportunities to help someone else during the Valentine season. So, get involved with the campus concerns and help someone else.

College Health Care Improves

By MARK KARL SEGAL

A recent interview with Mrs. Vivian Roop provided some insight into the level of health care provided by Longwood College. In the past there have been many complaints concerning the quality of care given; specifically the competency of the attending school physician.

Last summer Longwood College hired two new physicians in place of the former doctor — Dr. Javier. Since the two new doctors have arrived the quality of health care has been more efficient and a better nursing staff has improved the full time infirmary staff tremendously. It is not the policy of the ROTUNDA to make generalizations about the professional competency of any doctors nor is it policy to push its readers to agree with any one point of view. The focus of this interview is to assure the students that health care is improving and to vanish any predetermined stigmas students might have about the infirmary. Mrs. Vivian Roop is a Registered Nurse and has been with the Longwood Infirmary for ten years. She has been the Head Nurse for nine years.

— ROTUNDA: Who was the doctor last year?

— ROOP: Dr. Javier

— ROTUNDA: Why did he leave?

— ROOP: Dr. Javier was deathly ill. He had a very bad heart problem.

— ROTUNDA: Do you feel that his heart problem could have interfered with his work?

— ROOP: I can't say that. He is a good doctor. But he was working against his doctor's orders.

— ROTUNDA: Mrs. Roop, many students have held a common complaint that regardless of their illness they have been administered salt to gargle with and have then been discharged.

— ROOP: I don't know if salt water is good for a sore throat or not. But it is a saline solution to shrink the tonsils. It is considered here to be the least expensive and best mouth wash. After all it is the parents that have to pay for it.

— ROTUNDA: Do you feel that the students' complaints are valid? Or do they just like to complain?

— ROOP: It is human nature to complain. There are complaints about the dining hall and campus police. You can't satisfy all of the students all of the time. People can go from doctor to doctor to get the answer they want to hear. If you keep looking, anybody can get the answer they want. Not all students will agree with every diagnosis, but we can only diagnose students to the best of our professional ability. Of course we (the nurses) don't diagnose — that is the doctor's position.

— ROTUNDA: Not to get off the subject, but many students think very poorly of Southside Community Hospital. Do you feel it is a good hospital?

— ROOP: The doctor that runs the emergency room is from U. Va., and I feel the emergency room there is very good.

— ROTUNDA: It is also felt by many students that if a doctor has to come to Farmville to practice then he is not a very good doctor. Can you clear this up?

— ROOP: Doctors don't come to Farmville to practice because they are bad doctors. They come to Farmville to suit their careers and needs. They obviously can work less hours and can see more patients. And that is important to being a good doctor.

— ROTUNDA: Can you tell us something about the new doctors at Longwood?

— ROOP: Well, there are two. Doctor Cramer is young. He is very thorough. He has a great personality with the students. He is very sincere and dedicated to the profession. After July he will further his education in surgery at the University of Virginia, and make it his specialized field.

Dr. Williams is a native of Victoria. He is also young. He is married and has two children.

— ROTUNDA: I don't feel it is important that I tell he has children.

— ROOP: Oh yes! I feel the students would be more inclined to think that if he has children he can sympathize with the students more. It makes the students think he will treat them as he would his children. . . He went to MCV and currently lives in Blackstone. He is also very dedicated and professional in pursuing diagnosis and treatment of his patients on an individual basis. He plans to open a family practice center at Southside Community Hospital.

— ROTUNDA: Do you feel that the quality of health care here has improved?

— ROOP: The quality has definitely improved. The students are fortunate to have the nursing staff they have now. They are the best in eleven years. They are very kind and sincere to the students.

Political Views On Campus

The College Democrats

By LISA KOWALIK

Although the College Democrats are in a latent stage now, they plan to gear up in the fall for the Governorship race.

The club's immediate goals include securing a speaker to come to Longwood and making a constitutional charter, which they must have to be affiliated with the National Young Democrats.

The officers of this year's

College Democrats are David Oakes, President; Cindy Thurman, vice-president; and Rebecca Miller, Treasurer. The adviser is Dr. Stuart.

When asked to comment on the outcome of the Presidential election, President David Oakes said, "The dissatisfaction with government will continue as long as the inflation rate continues to climb and if Reagan doesn't alleviate this, he will be defeated just as Carter was. We are in for a succession of one term Presidents because we expect too much from them. The President's only one man—he can't solve all of the countries economic ills at once."

David describes the purpose of the College Democrats as "increasing student political awareness and participation, spreading the principles and ideals of the Democratic party, and supporting the Democratic candidates for office."

The College Republicans

By JOE JOHNSON

Were you thrilled by the Republican landslide in Congress? Did you cheer when Reagan was sworn into office or gloat over Jimmy Carter's defeat? If so, you might be interested in the Longwood College Republicans, an on-campus student political organization.

The club presently has about 15-16 active members who pay $1 dues each semester. Their constitution, which is based on the constitution from Washington and Lee University, allows them to elect officials for each semester. Current officers are: Chairman, Kurt Adams; Vice-Chairman, Thomas Moran; Secretary, Sandy Dyer; Treasurer, Cheryl Pelkey; and Programs Director, Jack Barker.

The Longwood College Republicans evolved from the Longwood Young Republicans Club which was formed in 1964. They are currently the oldest and largest student political organization in America. Dr. Helms, the advisor for the club, said that there are three main reasons for having such an organization. One reason is to help the student learn about government organization and the political structure of Virginia, in particular. Another reason for the club's existence is the actual contribution it makes to a Republican campaign—phone banks, campus surveys, distribution of absentee ballots, and the ever-familiar political poster and speeches. The third reason is the social activity of the club such as workshops and fund-raising events. "You make lifelong friends in an organization so closely knit," Dr. Helms said.

In the past, the Longwood

College Republicans have been active in workshops at James Madison University, VCU, Washington and Lee, and UVA. They have also sponsored such fund-raising activities as keg parties and car washes. On February 7-8 members attended a meeting of the College Republican Federation of Virginia. Kurt Adams explained that the members who attend will vote on the Republican Party Platform and will also vote for delegates who will represent them in the State Central Committee of the Republican Party.

The Longwood College Republicans have also begun publishing a newsletter on their views and the party platform. They have written many of the articles themselves, but a few of the articles were written by some very new and very old Republican officials, namely, President Ronald Reagan and (get ready for this) ... Abraham Lincoln!

Omega Psi Phi At Longwood

By SANDY NORTHEGE

Have you heard wild barking or seen the rhythmic stepping and singing being displayed by some of Longwood's students since the start of this semester?

Well, don't worry it is just the newly organized fraternity of Omega Psi Phi. The seven, young men from Longwood and one from Prospect were initiated Friday, December 19, 1980. The graduate chapter of Zeta Alpha Alpha, composed of nine area members, initiated the pledge. The Longwood students are still affiliated with the graduate chapter, although they are in the process of being an official chapter on Longwood's campus.

The Omega Psi Phi fraternity was established on November 17, 1911. The four founders are Professor Ernest E. Just (faculty advisor), Frank Coleman, Edgar Love, and Oscar J. Cooper. Bill Cosby, Reggie Jackson, "Too Tall" Jones, and Count Basie are a few of the famous members of the Omega Psi Phi fraternity. The fraternity colors are purple and gold. Their symbol is the escutcheon shield, and their sister sorority is Delta Sigma Theta which is not located on Longwood's campus.

The Omega Psi Phi's nickname

is the "Que Dogs." One of the members from Longwood, John "Turk" Crosby says, "that the nickname 'Que Dogs' is the reason behind the barking, and we step because we enjoy it and the people enjoy it, that's always been something black fraternities and sororities do. Although we act this way, we still think of ourselves as gentlemen and scholars as expressed by our cardinal principles, manhood, scholarship, perseverance, and uplift. A young man will never become a brother of the fraternity unless he can uphold these principles."

The Omega's future plans involve such activities as: a blood drive, dances, talent hunt, commemoration of Black History Week, Social Action Program, and various community and school projects.

The fraternity promotes unity and brotherhood among the black students on campus and creates a working relation with the IFC (Inter-Fraternity Council) and the school administration. The IFC played a tremendous role in the start of Omega Psi Phi on Longwood's Campus, and the Omega's would like to extend their thanks to Barry Driver, President of IFC, for all his help and support.

Player Of The Week

From Sports Info

Freshman wrestler Frank Denaro, who won both his matches in the 126-pound class last week, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period January 30-February 6.

Denaro pinned John Lemis of Newport News Apprentice in 4:37 and came back to pin Tom Boutin of Lynchburg in 1:50 Monday night as Longwood lost to NNA 27-22 and nipped Lynchburg 31-29 for its first win of the season.

Lancer coach Steve Nelson pointed out that the first-year college grappler had lost weight to wrestle at 118, but still returned in a fine showing at 126.

"Frank was just recovering from an eye infection that had kept him out of competition," said Nelson. "He had lost nine pounds in two days to make weight at 118 and then we moved him up to 126. He really came through for us."

Denaro's pin in the Lynchburg match was crucial to the Lancers obtaining their first win of the season as the hard fought bout was decided by just two points. Longwood will take a 1-3 record into Wednesday's home double-header with Richmond and arch-rival Hampden-Sydney.

With a 2-6 record in dual matches, Denaro has an overall mark of 9-14 while moving between 118, 126 and 134 pound weight class.

Gymnasts Break Records

By LISA SPENCER

Dominance was the name of the game Saturday when Longwood (129.75) hosted East Carolina (120.40) and Virginia Tech (77.80) in Lancer Hall. And dominate the Lady Lancers did. Winning every event and the all-around competition, the Longwood gymnasts demonstrated the tremendous depth that they have boasted of while compiling an 8-2 record.

"The good thing about the team this year is that everyone is contributing," commented Longwood coach Ruth Budd. "The fact that four different people won each of the four events proves that we have a lot of talent."

The Lady Lancers were so completely in charge that they allowed only two non-Longwood gymnasts to place in the meet. During the high-scoring competition three Longwood school records were broken. The team score of 129.75 broke last year's record by more than one point. Kathy Idelson scored an 8.35 for a team high in the bars, and Monica Chandler's 8.75 in floor exercise was another team high.

Nancy Pierce who had not placed in an event this year proved that she had the talent to win as she took first place honors in the balance beam. Her score, combined with Idelson's win in bars, Chandler's first in floor, and Sharon Pillow's vaulting title provided the momentum for another Longwood victory. Chandler also took the all-around title with a season high of 32.95.

Also placing for Longwood were: vaulting—2nd Monica Chandler, 3rd Kathy Idelson, and 4th Kim Pickel; bars—2nd Chandler, and 4th (tie) Lisa Winkler and Jaudon Conkwright; balance beam—2nd Chandler, 3rd Idelson, and 4th Conkwright; floor exercise—2nd (tie) Pickel and Pillow, 3rd Idelson and 4th Margi Janger.

More important now to the Lady Lancers than rejoicing in Saturday's triumph, is concentrating on their upcoming meet Friday night. At 7:00 p.m. in Lancer Hall, Longwood will face defending Division II State and Regional Champions William and Mary. W&M was the only team Longwood failed to defeat last season and finished second behind them in both the state and regional championships.

"I really hope that we can win the William & Mary meet," stated Budd. "If we can we would know that we have a good chance of winning regionals."

Lancers Seek End Of Losing Streak

From Sports Info

Longwood's men's basketball team, which suffered its fourth straight loss Thursday night 94-85 to Virginia State, will seek to rebound Saturday night when the Lancers visit Liberty Baptist.

Now 14-9, Longwood defeated the Flames 69-59 in the finals of the Longwood Invitational Classic in December. Led by 6-8 center Steve Isaacs, Liberty Baptist has lost more than its share of close games this season, but has a reputation for playing tough on its home court.

The Lancers played well in their loss to the Trojans Thursday, hanging close to the talented CIAA team until late in the game when Virginia State cashed in its free throws to pull away. Freshman Jerome Kersey poured in 25 points in the second half to give him a career high 31 for the game.

Other Lancers who played well included the ELIZABETH, NJ duo of Joe Remar and Ron Orr. Remar scored 17 points while repeatedly taking the ball to the basket and handed off seven assists. Orr was the top rebounder in the game with 12 and also scored 15 points. Guard Mike McCroey contributed 10 points but fouled out with nearly seven minutes left in the contest. Junior Kenny Ford had an off-night offensively, but came through on defense. Ford held high-scoring Darrell Stith scoreless in the first half as the chaser in Longwood's box-and-one defense.

Averaging 16.8 points and 9.4 rebounds, Kersey continues to pace Longwood statistically. The 6-6 forward also leads in blocked shots (28) and shooting percentage (62.6).

McDonald's Player Of The Week

From Sports Info.

Freshman forward Jerome Kersey, who scored a career high 31 points and grabbed 9 rebounds in a 94-85 loss to Virginia State Thursday, has been named McDonald's Player of the Week.

Kersey's selection covers the period January 30 - February 6. McDonald's Player of the Week is chosen by the basketball coaches at Longwood.

The 6-6 forward is the Lancers leading scorer and rebounder, averaging 16.4 points and 9.4 rebounds per contest.

"He has progressed beyond our wildest dreams as his performance Thursday shows," said assistant coach Martin Schoepfer. "He seems to get better every game."

Kersey also lead the Lancers in blocked shots with 28 and slams with 14.

A Social Work major, Jerome is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Kersey.

Sports Profile

By MARK KARL SEGAL

Sports Information makes it simple — "SHARON PILLOW: Sophomore, J.R. Tucker High School, Richmond, VA . . . finished first all-around in 7 out of 8 dual meets last season . . . set new Longwood standards for high score in an individual event (9.0) and all-around (34.05) . . . won both State and Regional honors by placing first all-around . . . qualified and finished 13th all around in Nationals . . . named Longwood's Female Athlete of the Year last season . . . consistency is her trademark . . . is a member of the Intercollegiate Athletic Council at Longwood . . . plans to teach and coach gymnastics."

This is all that consists of Sharon Pillow — or as most will know her. Reading about her in our cold pine bleachers lends a narrow eye into the life of Sharon.

But here is this High School freshman — a girl — a small girl ready and willing to learn the tosses and turns; willing to sacrifice the pizza and zits of a standard teenage life for a less attractive one — the tumbles of gymnastics. Gymnastics is full of tumbles. Physical tumbles of course, but the real tumbles are that of the human mind. You see, this sport is so different. It combines the elements of all sports; the free fall, jumping, running, propelling with excruciating force the body from one bar to the other and walking on a board above the ground. All of this sounds very easy. But when you have to do all of the forementioned with more precision and skill than the girl next to you, then the real trouble begins.

Sharon came to Longwood two years ago; packed away with a scholarship, and honed on the finer skills of gymnastics from her junior and senior high school years spent at the United States Gymnastics Federation: "A 'private' club," as members will tell.

Before the "private club," emerged a sophomore who was the Colonial District All-Around Champion and Runner up in the Central Region. Then it was off to the USGF Club. There, in her senior year, she placed sixth in all-around in the advanced state meet. She also qualified for the Regionals and Eastern National Championships.

While performing for Longwood as a freshman Sharon controlled the tempo of the team. She worked hard.

According to Longwood's gymnastics coach, Ruth Budd, "Sharon is a perfectionist. She puts a lot of pressure on her self." Last year Sharon came to Longwood with no former college goals to beat. All she could do was get better. There was no room for her to do poorly so she performed as if she were in the Olympics. In the state meet she was first in vaulting, bars and all-around competition. Her ability to quickly adapt to the college circuit enabled her to place first on vaulting and all-around at the Regional meet. Then it was on to the Nationals. There she placed 13th on vaulting and all around competition. Well Sharon returned to Longwood in the fall. And that return is where the tumbles of the human mind enter the picture. Sharon has several elements working against her that she must overcome. Knee surgery over the summer has brought more mental torture to Sharon than physical explains Budd. Because of this and a new scoring system that is up dated every four years with the difficulties of olympic competition; Sharon is playing a game of mental roulette with her mind.

"One must have superior confidence in one's self in order to be a good gymnast," tells Budd. And Ms. Pillow is battling back. She counters the war: "I have learned to live with it. (Her knees). I can't dwell on the fact my knees could give out. But I have not been able to perform as well because mentally I knew my knees could go. But now I feel I can do better. I am becoming more consistent."

Budd agrees. "She has not been first in all-around competition but she has been placing second." There is the cheer that goes "second to none." The none is Sharon herself. She is not battling other gymnasts but her record of last year. "She feels she has to do what she did last year," says Ruth Budd. "This is a transition period for Sharon. If she can make it through this year I believe she could really get going."

Sharon was so in love with her success that she is scared of defeat. Success has always been steering her mental wheel. In high school she graduated in the top one-fifth of her class with a 3.2 average. It is not just her ability to perform but the kid has a brain on her shoulders.

According to Budd that "transition" period is here. She could easily shy away from her defeats and quit gymnastics because of her knees. But she will never know what it really is to win unless she sticks out the other two years.

A winner never quits and a quitter never wins is par for the course. If Sharon places last for the next two years she will not be a loser. She will be a winner that never quit.

Wrestler's Win

By KURT COFFIELD

Lancer Hall was the site of a rowdy crowd Monday, Feb. 2, as the Longwood Grapplers won their first match of the season over Lynchburg College 31-29.

The stage for the match was set last semester when the Lancers traveled to Lynchburg and the match turned into a fist fight, and a defeat for the Lancers. When the Lynchburg Hornets came to Longwood the wrestlers wanted to make a good showing for their vocal home crowd.

With a strategic double forfeit at 118 the 126 pounds took to the mat with Frank Denaro of Longwood pinning his opponent in the first period. In the 134 pound match Derek Wolfe fought hard but was defeated by a minor decision. The 142 pound match ended in Disqualification of Mike Freischlag when he supliyed his aversary 'till unconsciousness. The next weight class saw Steve Shennett quickly deck his opponent for 6 more team points. At 158 veteran Roy Carswell wrestled diligently but was defeated. In the 167 pound class Mike Gnoff won 3 team points in a close victory. During Gnoff's match Lancer coach Steve Nelson questioned the referee's call and chose to have a few words with him. The choice words cost Longwood 2 team points and expulsion of the coach.

At this point the score of the match was Longwood 19 - Lynchburg 23, and after John Keegan was pinned by the Lynchburg captain the score stood Longwood 19 - Lynchburg 29. With 2 bouts remaining the wrestlers needed 11 points or 2 pins for the victory. At 190 pounds Dan Richards came through in the clutch situation with a pin in the first period.

Going into the unlimited match Lancer Hall had reached an emotional peak as Joe Bass warmed up to wrestle his 300 plus pounds opponent. Joe, using a bearhug, slammed his extra large opponent to the mat 3 times before pinning him in under a minute. With his final slap of the mat the Lancer grapplers had won their first match of the season 31-29!

The Lancers are riding their winning streak into a match against archrivals Hampden-Sydney and Richmond on Wednesday night in Lancer Hall. Everyone come out and cheer for Longwood so the grapplers can continue their winning streak.

Lady Lancers

Lack Luck

By KAY SCHMIDT

The Lady Lancers have continued their losing streak by failing in two games last week. At 8-2 earlier this season, the Longwood women's basketball team has lost nine straight games, dropping their record to 8-11.

This past weekend the Lady Lancers traveled to Rock Hill, South Carolina, to participate in the Winthrop Invitational Tournament. In the first round, Thursday night, Longwood shot only 32 per cent from the floor to fall to Western Carolina 48-78. Top performers for the evening were Patty Lia with 15 points and Cindy Eckel with 10 rebounds.

In round two, Longwood contested with Pembroke State of North Carolina. Trailing by only two points at half time (37-35), the Lady Braves rallied to defeat Longwood 74-61. One thousand point scorer Brenda Fettrow lead the team with 17 points, 13 rebounds, and 5 assists. Also scoring in the double figures were Cindy Eckel with 14 points and Robin Hungate with 11 points.

Longwood now stands fourth in VAAW Division II with a 5-4 conference record. Leading the conference is George Mason with a 7-2 conference record. In other conference standings the Lady Lancers stand second in both team defense (62.9 per cent) and in freethrow percentage (62.4 per cent). In individual scoring sophomore Cindy Eckel stands third, averaging 17.5 points per game.

Play Ball

By DEBBIE HOGGE

Stretch, take ten laps, and let's play ball. Yes, tryouts for Longwood's first women's softball team are well underway. The team is coached by Nanette Fisher, also Longwood's volleyball coach. Ms. Fisher is a graduate of Longwood and has previously coached high school teams. This is her first year teaching and coaching at Longwood.

Both the coach and players are excited about getting started, but because of the extremely cold weather they have not been able to go outside. However, as soon as it warms up they will be right out there. Their first game is not until April, so there will be plenty of time for practicing batting, sliding, and strategies. The schedule includes a couple of tournaments and several doubleheaders.

Combining the players' talents and Ms. Fisher's coaching, Longwood should have an excellent softball team. So come out to both home and away games and support a very promising team!

Longwood has become more widespread academically. Also, a lot of traditions have died down because they do not need to be as pronounced as they once were. However, I hope that not all of them go out of existence.

"I've noticed that in some ways Longwood has changed for the worse. The biggest mistake ever made here was not keeping freshman housing. I lived in South Cunningham freshman year. Two floors were guys and two floors were girls. We were all together toughing it out. We were one big family—sharing our problems—sharing experiences for the first time. Another mistake was tripling. I was involved in one and it was an uncomfortable situation."

When asked for last comments, Jim adamantly stated that what he wanted to say was his own personal views, not reflections from other groups. "I think that people not involved in a sorority or fraternity see these groups as a bunch of derelicts joined together under three Greek letters. They are more than that. People in sororities and fraternities share a bond other than drinking. They study together, share problems, share everything else in college life. Some look at the rivalry these groups have. Sure there is rivalry because it shows the pride we have in ourselves."

"Every sorority and fraternity has good, able-bodied people in it and we are all going to make it—together. It would be easier if people outside those groups would try to understand a little more."

French Renovation Begins

By JOE JOHNSON

The girls have fled and the workers have taken over the now evacuated French building. 1st floor French building—Mountains of bagged insulation fill the lobby. Black foam and unwaxed floors marked where carpets once layered the hallway. 2nd floor French building—Unhinged doors and dismantled sinks are scattered throughout the stark, barren rooms. 3rd floor French building—A cool breeze blows through gaps where walls and windows once definitely stood. "It is slowly and thoroughly being devastated so that later it may be recreated into a far more efficient and appealing building," said Mr. Roy Hill, Jr., Director of Physical Plant at Longwood.

The demolition of the dorms started on January 26 and will be finished February 11 when the reframing process of the construction work will begin. "We plan on converting the dorms into 2 and 3 room suites with baths and a separate place for studying." Mr. Hill also said that this architectural layout will actually add space for 2 more rooms on each floor.

Other improvements are also being planned. New light fixtures and a new public address and fire alarm system are going to be installed. Each room will have its own telephone and heat control. Radiator covers and vinyl flooring will be added to make the rooms more attractive and easier to keep clean.

Six construction companies bid on the French building contract which was approved as a capital outlay project. The lowest bid was made by the Lewis Bridgeforth Construction Co. which is now the general contractor for the undertaking. The architectural firm that designed the floor plan is Cross-Rhodes Company.

The estimated cost for the entire project will be about $629,900. Mr. I. Finney, Resident Inspector for Longwood College, said that when the idea was first initiated in 1972, the cost was a little over $250,000, but with staggering inflation and quadrupling interest rates, the price soon jumped way past that mark.

The Buildings and Grounds Committee of the Board of Visitors has also approved plans for redesigning the French swimming pool. It will be an indoor-outdoor pool with a 4'x4' skylight and a sliding glass door or roll-up garage door for one of its walls. This removable wall will lead out onto a patio which will overlook the tennis courts on the west side.

The physical plant also has renovation ideas for Main Cunningham, North Cunningham and the annex. They hope to add fire sprinklers, install new bathroom fixtures and lay tile in all the rooms. They plan on building a kitchen, study and laundry room for the basement of North Cunningham. A suite for the handicapped may be added in South Cunningham.

Although the State Legislature has yet to approve the Cunningham buildings' renovations, Mr. Hill and Mr. Finney feel confident that by this time next year, they will be drawing up a budget for the improvements needed in these buildings.

Forensic Tournament Winners

Longwood College hosted its annual forensic tournament on Saturday, February 14, 1981 on the campus. The students in the Forensic Class ran this tournament for 500 high school students, who competed in speaking, acting, and reading. Twenty-five high schools from all over the state were entered.

Emerging as first place winner in the varsity division was Prince Edward Academy of Farmville; J.R. Tucker of Richmond and Central of Lunenburg of Victoria were in second place; Third place was won by Southampton Academy of Courtland.

In the novice division Clover Hill High School of Richmond was third; Southampton Academy, second, and Prince Edward Academy of Farmville was first.

The schools attending were Kenston Forest School, Holy Cross of Lynchburg, Dinwiddie, Varina, Bluestone, Halifax, Prince Edward County High School, Charlottesville, Heritage High School of Lynchburg, Clover Hill, J.R. Tucker, Jefferson Forest, Central of Lunenburg, Cumberland, Hermitage, Rustburg, E.C. Glass, Southampton Academy, Brookville, Albermarle, Nottoway, Meadowbrook, Staunton River, Randolph-Henry, and Prince Edward Academy.

The Longwood College students running the contest were Melissa Sager, Karl McKinnon, Llew Childress, Carolyn McIvor, Faith Clark, Cindy Roakes, Beth Slater, Patia Truitt, Pat Carnes, Theresa Moore, Diane Noel, Barbara Mooney, Laurie Carroll, Susan Alexander, Karen Nettemeyer, Alice Bartlett. Over sixty Longwood students served as judges in the contest. This tournament was under the direction of Mr. I.B. Dent, Mrs. Nancy Anderson, and Mrs. Jean Doss and marks the fourteenth year that it has been held.

Jewels Returned

By JOE JOHNSON

The jewelry which was stolen from Lancaster Library Gallery on January 27 has been returned! Mr. Mark Baldridge, Associate Professor of Art at Longwood is the goldsmith who formed the precious metal works (jewels) which were being displayed as part of the Annual Art Department Faculty Show when they were stolen.

The art work's miraculous reappearance was confirmed by Campus Police Chief, Neil Smith, on Thursday, February 12. When asked about the approximate time of reappearance or possible suspects, the Longwood Police Chief refused to comment.

The Jewelry was returned to the Longwood Post Office sometime between January 28 and February 10. Patty Scholberg, a student employee of the Longwood Post Office, said that a long brown envelope with a note attached to it had been lying around the office for nearly a week when Mrs. Yeatts, also an employee of the Post Office, read the note which had the letters SPE written on it. Mrs. Yeatts, apparently thinking the letters stood for the Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity, put the package in Jeff Houser's mail box. Jeff Houser is a Sigma Phi Epsilon brother who also works in the Post Office. Both Jeff Houser and Patti Scholberg have been questioned by police investigators.

When hearing of the jewelry's safe return, Mr. Baldridge said, "I am just thankful to get the work back without harm. I am also thankful for all the support given to me by everybody around here." When asked if he would like to apprehend the person who stole the art work, he said, "Yes...it's people like him (the thief) that make you wonder if all the effort and time you put into a project is worth it...I'd like to burn him as much as possible."

Sophomores Do It Up Right

By TAMARA NASH

For those of you who may think the Sophomores have been out of the limelight lately, think again. As Sophomore Week approaches the Class of '83 has prepared to step out and step out in style.

Under Chairman Kelly Jones, the week of February 23-28 is packed full of fun and excitement for the entire Longwood community.

The week begins with the Sophomore Auction at 7:30 p.m. in the Lankford ABC Rooms. Chaired by Sarah Rengstorf, the annual auction involves the auctioning of items donated from faculty and local merchants. Be sure to be there to place your bid for some most interesting and desirable items!

Monday is also Red-n-White Day in honor of the freshmen and junior classes but on Tuesday, it's time to "strut your green" for Green-n-White Day. Tuesday is also the first day of production for the Sophomore Road Show. Under the direction of Lisa Bowers and Cherie Stevens, the "Charlie Brown Gang" will travel to Holly Manor in Farmville. Wednesday, the cast will travel to Richmond to appear at the Crippled Children's Home and the Richmond Memorial Hospital. In compliance with Longwood tradition, Wednesday is officially Blue-n-White Day.

Put Chairman Pam Coffman, Ross Conner, Mark Winecoff, and seven sophomore acts into a room together and what do you get? Thursday night's entertainment! Held in the Gold Room, Sophomore Open Mike will provide some of the best acts this side of Broadway!

How could one possibly end a week like this with as much class as it deserves? How about a mixer Friday night in the lower dining hall from 9:00 til 1:00 featuring CHESS. The admission will be $1.50 for sophomores, $2.00 for Longwood students, and $2.50 for guests. Mary Cawthorne chaired the Mixer Committee.

After all their hard work, the sophomores will be allowed .50 off the admission price to the Student Union's Saturday Night Live with SILVERSPRING.

The sophomores have a week planned that will provide something for everyone. Be sure to catch any and all of the activities you can. It's guaranteed that after February 28, there will be no doubt that the Class of '83 knows how to do it up right!

Questions To Be Asked

The following is a list of questions for the Press Conference today at 12:45. questions 1-6.

1. Why are some of the dorms on campus made to follow and interpret college regulations more strenuously than others?

2. There continues to be a problem with objects being thrown from the windows of Cox. Is there any possible way to control this?

3. Have there been any plans made as to a better method of securing the rooms in Tabb and the Cunninghams?

4. Is there any possible way to upgrade the advising system? Especially, clarifying the description of the Social Science requirements.

5. Why has the Physical Education schedule of classes been changed so that Juniors this semester must carry an Organization and Administration overload of classes including Test and Measurements and

6. Why aren't transcripts reviewed prior to the Senior year to locate any missing or incorrect scheduling of classes?

Ve Vant Your Blood

The 1981 Geist Bloodmobile will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 25-26. This important life-saving event will take place in the Red-White-Green Rooms located in Lankford Building. Geist's quota this year is 250 pints of blood that will be used in the areas surrounding Farmville and in the town itself.

Donors and volunteers for the canteen, registration, etc. may sign up in the New Smoker during the week of Feb. 16-22. Geist members will be in the New Smoker on Feb. 23 and 24 to answer any questions concerning the Bloodmobile and to recruit more donors and volunteers. Sign up now and give a gift of life.

DONOR REQUIREMENTS...

The purpose of setting up requirements for donations is two-fold:

- ... to adequately protect the donor's health; and
- ... to provide a safe unit of blood for the recipient.

The following conditions would either temporarily or permanently eliminate a person as a donor:

If the donor...

1. Is under 17 years old (after the 66th birthday, donors may be accepted if they have written consent from their personal physician dated within four weeks of the date of donation).
 2. Weighs less than 110 pounds.
 3. Has been in a malarious area in the last six months and/or has had anti-malarial drugs in the last three years.
 4. Has a respiratory ailment now.
 5. Has been pregnant within the last six months.
 6. Has diabetes requiring insulin injections.
 7. Has had cancer, except for basal cell skin cancer.
 8. Is under medication for epilepsy or convulsions.
 9. Has active allergies, hay fever, or asthma on the day of donation.
 10. Has had a tooth extraction or oral surgery in the last 72 hours.
 11. Has donated plasma in the last 48 hours.
 12. Has donated blood within the last 56 days.
- In doubt, a potential donor should come and undergo the pre-donation medical check-up given by the Red Cross. If he or she is deferred, the specific reasons will be explained.

Graham To Lecture

From Public Affairs

The next Faculty colloquium Lecture at Longwood College will feature Dr. Gerald P. Graham discussing "The Physiological Potential of the Female Athlete."

Dr. Graham will speak on Wednesday evening, February 18, at 7:30 in the Wygal Building auditorium. His lecture is open to the public without charge.

Title IX legislation has raised many issues concerning the status of the female in the world of athletics, Dr. Graham states. Questions are being asked as to whether the female can perform the same physical tasks as the male and, if so, how close she can come to the male's level of performance.

These questions are important not only in athletics, he says, but to the military, police, firefighters, and heavy industry.

Another aspect of Dr. Graham's lecture will concern "the physiological consequences of a woman pursuing highly stressful conditioning," including her susceptibility to injury and gynecological problems.

Dr. Graham's major research interests concern the physiology of exercise or how the body responds to physical activity. A strong advocate of aerobic, or cardiovascular, exercise for fitness, he directs Longwood's annual minnithon run.

A certified exercise technologist, Dr. Graham is qualified to perform graded exercise testing on persons age 35 and under who have no coronary risk factors and to assist a physician in the testing of all other persons. He has recently been selected to serve on the State Advisory Council of the American Heart Association as a member of the Cardiovascular Health Education Committee.

A member of the Longwood faculty since 1972, Dr. Graham holds degrees from Muskingum College, Ohio State University, and the Ph.D. from Kent State University.

VOTE FOR THE FACULTY RECOGNITION AWARD 1981

Students may fill out ballots from February 16-20 during lunch and supper mealtimes in the Rotunda.

VOTING WILL END FRIDAY AFTER LUNCH.

Harrup Joins Board Of Visitors

By BRENDA COLEMAN

It is Friday afternoon, March 6. The Board of Visitors slowly shuffle into the board room, silently nodding greetings and how-are-you's to each other. They sit down in unison, generally oblivious of their surroundings until a young woman strolls confidently into the room and sits down at the board table. A murmur arises from the group and the question is raised, "Who is this person?"

"This person" is Sharon Harrup, President of the Student Body. On March 6 and 7, she will be assuming the newest responsibility of the SGA president — sitting in on the Board of Visitors' meetings as a non-voting student representative. Through this duty, she will be able to bring up major student complaints and give the Board the general opinions from the student body concerning campus issues.

"I think it's going to be very beneficial for the students, administration, and Board of Visitors," stated Sharon. "Now with the student rep on the board, the Board of Visitors will be able to receive direct student input." "This session the new proposed alma mater will be discussed as to the students' opinions. The Student government is now in the process of gathering insight into this matter. They will probably also ask how the new student government structure is functioning on a whole. Thus far it seems to be operating at a very efficient level and I will inform them of this fact."

If any students have questions they would like to have presented to the Board or opinions they feel should be aired, please contact Sharon Harrup at 325 Wheeler — Box 436, — phone 392-9210 before March 6.

The Virginian will also include color pictures of special events such as Mardi Gras, Oktoberfest, Robin Thompson, Vincent Price, Louisiana's LeRoux, and Lacy J. Dalton.

But the most important pictures included in the 1981 Virginian are of... you! Many, many candid pictures of parties, conversations anywhere on campus, out on the street, in the dining hall, at any of the events listed above, or in your dorm room or classroom.

With all these cherished memories between two covers, and for the low price of $14.00, you should share in the joy of keeping forever hundreds of moments frozen in time, made into pictures and bound together... for you.

Captivating Parker

By LISA KOWALIK

William Parker gave an impressive performance in Jarman auditorium last Friday which made opera sound like an understandable and enjoyable type of music, instead of an unheard of foreign language.

Mr. Parker, a baritone opera singer, and his accompanist William Huckaby performed a variety of compositions ranging from Charles Wakefield Cadman's "Four American Indian Songs" to Ned Rorem's grisly war scenes.

Mr. Parker opened the show with four compositions by Charles Wakefield Cadman, whose music is based on the tribal melodies of the Omaha and Iroquois Indians.

Throughout the show, Mr. Parker used gestures and facial expressions to further explain the operas. Explaining the Cadman selection "Far Off I Hear a Lover's Flute," Mr. Parker related to the audience the "Indians' belief the souls of the dead come alive in the stars of the Milky Way," and then gave a rousing rendition of the song, which describes a soldier looking up in the sky to find the star that is his sweetheart.

Mr. Parker brought alive Ned Rorem's "A Night Battle," "Specimen Case" and "The Real War Will Never Get in the Books;" all of which were gr-uesomely realistic descriptions of the horrors of the Vietnam War.

Contrasting with the seriousness of the first half of the show, Mr. Parker opened the second half on a much lighter note, bringing smiles to the audience with Igor Stravinsky's humorous romantic interlude "The Owl and the Pussy-Cat" and concluding with a lively rendition of Charles Ives's "He Is There!," written to commemorate America's victory in WWI.

Mr. Parker came out for two encores, "Beautiful Dreamer," which he announced as a Valentine present, and "I Love My Voice," which he dedicated to all the voice majors.

Sound Gallery Presents Silent Partner

By SUSAN BUTLIN

Coming up February 24, Sound Gallery presents, "Silent Partner". What is Silent Partners, you say? I'm sure there are quite a few guesses but the right answer is this: Silent Partner is an original rock duo. I say original because they are not a dance band nor does their music sound like any other band.

Kemp Jones and Don Porterfield make up with duo with Jones on the keyboards and guitar, and Porterfield on the bass, keyboards and guitar. They harmonize while they play an array of instruments including a mini-Moog, a Yamaha electric guitar, an acoustic guitar, keyboard bass and electric bass plus various arcane pedds treadles and foot switches. Heavy emphasis is placed on their lyrics and vocals.

"Hung By A Thread", the duo's debut album, recorded in 1978, consists of Jones, Porterfield and former members Ben Bickerstaff and David James, (both whom of which are no longer with "Silent Partner"). The album has been described as being "natural, certainty of self and directness". The story behind this album is rather interesting. It was financed, produced, and designed by the group, as a calculated risk. No one in the band had much recording experience or familiarity with the studio.

Some of "Silent Partner's" previous engagements include: Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, University of Tampa in Florida, University of Georgia and many other places other than universities such as: The Zodiac and Cave in Virginia Beach, and The Sun Deck in Isle of Palms in South Carolina. It seems that each of their previous engagements turned out to be very successful and Silent Partner has been highly recommended to Longwood by other Student Union Activities Directors.

They will appear in the red, white and green rooms at 8:30. Admission is $1.00. Keep February 24th open and see what sounds are rockin' with "Silent Partner".

Goodwyn Recital

Sandra Gail Goodwyn, a junior music major at Longwood College, will give a piano recital on Thursday evening, February 26, at 8 o'clock in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

Miss Goodwyn, a piano student of Ms. Frieda Myers, will play compositions by Bach, Chopin, Mozart, and the contemporary composer Ross Lee Finney. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Royce S. Goodwyn, of Powhatan, Miss Goodwyn is the accompanist for Longwood's concert choir and Camerata Siners and a member of Sigma Alpha Iota music fraternity.

The recital is open to the public at no charge.

Ready For Action

By TAMARA NASH

Rimers of Eldritch is rolling into its final week of practice and "all systems are go." February 25-28 are the dates on which Rimers will be presented at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

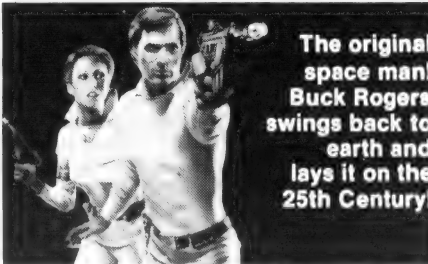

Judy Stanley, assistant director and stage manager for the show, is pleased with the progress of the play. The most intricate part is the lighting in which there are almost continuous cues. Jeff Sledjeski is Light Crew Chief and his job is not an easy one but from the past shows, there is no doubt that Jeff will do an excellent job.

Rimers of Eldritch has a variety of titles — mystery, love story, tragedy — but none are quite accurate. The audience is deliberately misled as each character adds his or her own twist to the same story and finding the guilty party is not as easy as you may think. Rimers of Eldritch is sure to make you think as well as entertain you.

Dr. Young, the cast, and crews have worked diligently to prepare Rimers of Eldritch into a fantastic show — one you won't want to miss!

Lancers Sparkle In Victory

From Sports Info

Ending a four-game losing streak, Longwood's men's basketball team turned in its finest performance of the season Saturday night in a 92-79 triumph over host Liberty Baptist. The Lancers (15-9) wind up their regular season play this week at home with Radford Friday. Division I Howard Saturday and North Carolina Central Monday. The Lancers, who played at Pembroke State on Monday, face tough opposition in the coming week. Radford, which has been on a hot streak recently, beat Longwood 58-57 January 31. Without a doubt the toughest opponent the Lancers will face in the regular season, Howard boasts a towering frontline that measures 6-8, 6-9 and 6-11.

Known as "The Dunk Patrol,"

Howard's Bison had collected 76 slams in their first 19 games as of February 10. Leading the way are 6-9, 210 forward James Ratiff with 28, 6-8, 230 forward Larry Spriggs with 22 and 6-11, 220 center James Terry with 18. While Howard has had an up-and-down season, its frontline will present big troubles for the Lancers whose tallest cager is 6-6. The contest will be Longwood's first ever against a Division I foe in men's basketball.

Junior tri-captain Kenny Ford flashed the form that made him an All-American last season in Longwood's big win over Liberty Baptist Saturday night. Ford canned 10 of 12 shots from the floor and scored eight points in less than two minutes as Longwood snuffed the Flames in the second half.

Ford, who now has 976 career points, could become Longwood's first 1,000 point scorer in men's basketball if he can score 24 or more points the rest of the season. The 6-2 forward had plenty of help from his friends Saturday night as six Lancers reached double figures.

Senior Thomas Alston hit seven of seven field goals and scored 15 points as Longwood hit 24-27 shots in the second half for a sizzling 88.9 per cent. Alston scored six points in two minutes as the Lancers pulled away from a 36-36 halftime score to go ahead 63-46.

Gymnasts Defeat Indians

By LISA SPENCER

The William & Mary-Longwood gymnastics meet Friday night was a much anticipated one for the Lady Lancers for two major reasons: It was the first time in two years that the teams have met in a regular season competition, and W&M was the only team Longwood failed to defeat last season. So when the Lady Lancers emerged victorious by a score of 128.55 to 122.30, they realized that their chances for the state and regional championships are closer than ever before.

Longwood has only one major obstacle to overcome before the championships begin—they travel to East Tennessee Saturday for a meet with James Madison and ETSU. JMU defeated Longwood earlier this season, but Coach Ruth Budd feels very confident about meeting them again.

"I feel like we can give them more of a run for their money this time," stated Budd. "We have improved tremendously since we last met with JMU."

Kathy Idelson was again Longwood's mainstay in Friday's meet. She had a season high 33.35 to win the all-around competition, took first place in the balance beam and bars, and second places in vaulting and floor exercise.

Lisa Winkler, who transferred to Longwood from W&M, proved she had found a home with the Lady Lancers by tying with Idelson for first place on bars.

Also placing for Longwood were—ALL-AROUND: 2nd-Sharon Pillow; VAULTING: 3rd-Pillow and 4th-Kim Pickel; BARS: 4th-Pillow; BEAM: 2nd-Pillow; and FLOOR EXERCISE: 3rd-Monica Chandler and 4th-Pillow.

This win boosted the Lady Lancers' record to 9-2.

Player Of The Week

By LISA SPENCER

Freshman gymnast Monica Chandler dominated last week's gymnastics meet with East Carolina and led the Lady Lancers to a record-breaking team score of 129.75. For her efforts, Chandler has been selected as Longwood College Player Of The Week for the period February 6-13.

Monica's recent accomplishments include establishing a new floor exercise record (8.75) for Longwood, scoring a season-high 32.95 all-around total, and placing second in vaulting (8.50), bars (7.95), and beam (7.75) against ECU and VPI. But even though she has played a big role in the Lady Lancers recent record-breaking performances, Monica has found it to be difficult to adjust to collegiate gymnastics.

"I have found that there is a big difference in high school and college gymnastics," commented Monica. "There is much more competition and pressure than I've ever experienced. But sometimes that pressure makes me perform better."

Monica entered the Longwood gymnastics program on an excellent note—she was the reigning Virginia State AA Champion in bars, vaulting, floor exercise, and all-around.

Although Monica will readily admit that she loves gymnastics, she has no romantic illusions about the sport. "Gymnastics is a big part of my life," she stated,

"But sometimes it can be very lonely. If you're injured, or you have a bad meet, you have to try very hard not to become depressed."

A major boost for Monica has been the closeness she has found with the other girls on the team. She has many compliments for her teammates:

"Everyone is always ready to help each other. There is always someone there to give you confidence or to help you with a routine. They are really great girls."

Monica, who has been the all-around champion for Longwood twice this season, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm T. Chandler of Sterling.

Valentine's Day Victories

The Scrappers traveled to Towson State, Maryland, February 14 and marked up 2 victories to their record. After losing to host Towson State, 47-6, the mat men came back to defeat Howard University 26-25, and Loyola University of Baltimore 25-21.

Against Division I for Towson St. Dan Richards defeated his opponent by a major decision, while Mike Freischlag drew with opponent, accounting for Longwood's total points.

In the 2nd match versus Howard University, another Division I adversary, Longwood was the recipient of four forfeits. With 24 free points all the Scrappers needed was another draw from Mike Freischlag to ice the victory.

In the final match against Loyola University, Longwood wrestlers scored their points in a streak, from the 142 lb. class to the 190 lb. class. Both Freischlag and Steve Shennett scored major decisions over their adversaries. In the 3 succeeding matches David Dodd, Roy Carswell, and Joe Bass recorded 11 team points between them, enough to secure the Longwood victory.

On Tuesday the 17th the Scrappers take on Elon College at 7:30 in Lancer Hall. Come on out and support the Wrestlers in their last home match of the season.

Lady Lancers Back On Track

Sports Profile

By MARK KARL SEGAL

There is this little town down in the Southern part of Virginia, in the flatlands. And these boring flatlands are theoretically indicative of their personage. But it appears there is an oasis amongst the absence of contour; it is called Clarksville. Clarksville is not actually the oasis, but is the owner of the oasis. And the camel that has been stuffing his gullet at the watering hole happens to be Jerome — not Jerome A. Kersey or Jerome P. Kersey — but just Jerome Kersey. That is all. So Jerome the camel is feeding his face at the oasis — which we will call Bluestone High School. It was there that our hairy desert rhino nourished himself with enough basketball talent and accomplishments to take the journey to Farmville.

So far urban theory pertaining to small town accomplishments stands untouched. But I will attack that aspect of the city-slickers as Country-bumpkin. I will be aided by my faithful camel Jerome. He and I will shake the loose twigs from Thoreau's tree of simplicity and prove that the "nice guy" from nature can keep his simplistic values in a screaming world of big guns and succeed.

Jerome is a shocker. The big basketball sensation at Longwood while only a freshman is only 18 years old. He didn't leave Clarksville empty handed. His senior year at Bluestone he was first-team all-district, second-team all-regional, his team's best offensive player and the team's Most Valuable Player while playing forward. He didn't come to Longwood on those credentials either. His friend from home, All-American Collegiate baseball player Doug Toombs told the coaches at Longwood about this sleeping prodigy backhome. Martin Schoeper, assistant coach to Dr. Ron Bash, went to see him play at a tournament. He never spoke to Jerome. "I heard he was there (at the game)," tells Kersey.

"I got a letter from Coach Bash to come and scrimmage with the team last spring. He saw me play and said he liked the way I played. Right there on the sidelines he offered me a scholarship to play ball."

While Jerome's grandmother was wiggling restlessly in her seat back home at the sound of the big news, Jerome was packing his off court demeanor and getting ready for the haul to Farmville. No one else in the rural high school received a scholarship from any basketball teams that year. "Some folks back home didn't believe me when I first told them. But everybody was happy for me," exclaims Jerome.

Jerome is not out after practices sharpening his skills to destroy the enemy (city slicker) mentally. It doesn't interest Jerome to lead such a life. Well without the mental edge of just plain meanness how does he go one on one on the court and always seem to succeed? Perhaps his simplistic values make things easy. Nothing complicated, just a world of good and evil (stay away from the evil) and work and play. "When you get on the court it is total seriousness. Some guys laugh and stuff before and during the game. But when I am on the court it's time to play ball. You can laugh, sure, but only after you win."

Win is what the Lancers did last year (28-3). This year with a move to Division II the Lancers have thus conquered only 14 games out of 23. Not so bad — but not as glamorous as the Final Four team of 1979. Maybe Ron Bash is just stuck in between the years of excellent and very good. Whatever, Bash leaves no room for disgrace. In 1974 Bash coached at Stony Brook; his first season there and only his second coaching. He turned the team completely around. That first season went 2-21. Three years later after consistently bettering the team's win loss record he ended up 27-4. The season before Bash entered Longwood the team was 8-16. He continued his path of destruction with a 19-8 record, then on to glory; 28-3.

It was that kind of winning and determination that sucked Jerome's talent into Longwood's Bash oriented basketball vacuum. It was Longwood's vicinity to home and small town atmosphere that convinced him to come. The 6'5", 200 pounder was astonished even by his trip to Alaska where the Lancers played. "When we went to Alaska it was my first time flying. The others had flown before — I think

I was the only one," revealed Jerome. He even felt that Anchorage was "a miniature New York," and Anchorage is less than half the size of Richmond. But his awe of the big city didn't destroy his small town determination. The Lancers who were expected to go 0-4 in Alaska games some how ended up 3-1 against teams that played the likes of powerful North Carolina.

Yet back amongst the 48 contiguous states the Lancers are some how coming up short in the W column. "We make the same mistakes; just little things. When we are losing by a few points we get fouls by trying to steal the ball."

Jerome speaks from his dorm room among quarters exemplary of his off court demeanor: beds made, no dust, pictures of basketball games and one of Ralph Sampson standing by the Rotunda in Charlottesville. The pictures are above his bed; looking down on him while sleeping. In the middle of the room sits a coffee table; an altar to his accomplishments. This is where he displays his treasured scrap book of Friday night games that were won. He was a high school hero bringing acclaim and attention to a high school of hamburger eating adolescents. But the days of hormonal glory are over. He is now on the road to real winning. He will always keep that first scrap book but it will lose its importance as he moves to bigger things. Already Bash says, "He is the leader of the team even in the freshman year. Some of the guys look for him when the going gets rough."

Longwood is only the beginning, continues Bash. "If he can continue to have the same rate of improvement that he is having now later in life — I see him as having unlimited potential." This doesn't only encompass basketball and Bash knows that. "He has fulfilled all of our expectations on and off the court. He is well respected for his demeanor on and off the court."

So our buddy the camel moves on. Longwood will be but another water fountain. Even here in a bigger and faster world than Clarksville, he stands out as an oasis amongst the dryness. "I don't get in to that fraternity stuff. It is not for me," he will tell. He still wants to live his own life at his own pace, and surely he is happy inside. He has to be.

Longwood College Women's Basketball team ended its 10-game losing streak last week with wins over Maryland-Eastern Shore and UNC-Greensboro, after early week losses to William and Mary and George Mason. The Lady Lancers now stand 10-13 overall and 5-6 in conference play.

Tuesday, Longwood hosted conference leader George Mason. Although tied at halftime (41-41), the Lady Lancers fell 79-74. Playing her best game this season, Robin Hungate had 15 points, 8 rebounds, 2 blocked shots, and 2 steals. Also scoring in the double figures were Senior Linda Pullen 12, Paige Moody 11, and Cindy Eckel and Patty Lia with 10 points each.

Tuesday the Lady Lancers traveled to William and Mary for another conference contest. With a field goal percentage of only 37, the Lady Lancers were edged 64-63. Forward Cindy Eckel led by pouring in 23 points and 11 rebounds.

On the road to Maryland-Eastern Shore, Longwood enjoyed a 74-63 victory Saturday. Freshman Paige Moody led four players in the double figures with a career high 17 points. Center Karen Savarese and guard Brenda Fettrow added 11 each, while Cindy Eckel contributed 10.

Sunday, in its fourth game of the week, Longwood defeated UNC-Greensboro for the second time this season, 50-72. The Lady Lancers led 20-35 at halftime and shot 46 per cent (32-70) from the floor, and 67 per cent (8-12) from the line. Sophomore Patty Lia and senior Brenda Fettrow scored 14 points each.

Outscoring the Flames 29-10, Longwood used a devastating fast break.

A layup by freshman Jerome Kersey, who tossed in 18, gave Longwood its biggest lead at 65-46 with 10:07 left. Kersey hit eight of 10 shots from the floor.

Soph guard Joe Remar broke his own single game assist record with 15 assists, including nine in the second half. Remar, who committed no turnovers, added 11 points in perhaps the finest game of his career. He had set, the old assist record of 12 last season. Remar now has 123 assists for the season.

Center Ron Orr added 12 points for Longwood and guard Mike McCroey also scored 12. McCroey added eight assists as the Lancers totaled 32 for the contest. Kersey continues to lead Longwood in scoring (16.9) rebounds (9.3), shooting percentage (63.2), blocked shots (28) and slams. Ford is tops in free throw percentage (81.8).

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1981

Fire Safety Scrutiny Proves Malevolent

By MARK KARL SEGAL

A rash of recent false fire alarms and even an incident in Curry dormitory have raised questions about the quality of fire prevention and accessible equipment available to Longwood through the college and the town of Farmville. On February 17th the Student Government Association held a press conference with the administration of the college. The question was asked, "In reference to the recent Las Vegas fires, what rescue methods could be used to remove the 10th floor students from the building if there was a fire on the 8th floor?"

President Willett and William Peele, vice president for Administration quickly and efficiently provided any and all information concerning rescue, prevention and fire education.

A private press conference with the ROTUNDA on February 18 provided additional insight into the administration's fire policies. Those present were: Dr. William J. Peele; Thomas Nanzig, Director of Housing; Melvin Moore, Physical Plant operation and the College Fire Warden. Many students are not aware of the fire program at Longwood and tend to think of Curry and Frazer dormitories as dry haystacks in the middle of the

Curry Smokes Ham

Sahara desert. But it is virtually impossible to label these dorms flammable. In spring of 1979 there was a fire in Curry. The fire was so intense that the steel in the structure of the building was melted. Yet the fire did not spread past the suite it was in. This containment is indicative of the fire proof design of the building. The fire doors to the stairwells have a minimum heat endurance time of two hours, and the stairwells were designed such that anyone fleeing a fire from the 7th floor and the fire is on the 5th floor cannot get close to the floor/hallway entrance. But what if the fire had for some reason spread into the stairwell? Could Farmville produce rescue equipment for those on the 10th floor? At the time of the 1979 fire the answer was "no".

Since that incident the college has purchased a hook-and-ladder truck at a cost of $200,000. Longwood college rents that piece of equipment to the town of Farmville for one dollar a year.

Concerning the Curry incident of two weeks ago: a manual alarm was pulled at 3:13 a.m. at 3:20 a.m. the fire department was on the hall. They could smell something burning but there was no smoke present. Some girls on the hall reported that the hall was filled with smoke, but the smoke alarm didn't go off; instead the girls pulled the alarm. A check of the smoke alarm indicated that it was in proper working condition.

The smoke was alleged to be from an art project baking in the hall oven. But students had to wait two hours in 25 degree weather. What was not known was that the entire floor wiring was being checked for safety purposes. The smoke from the art project was only alleged and all other sources the smoke could have come from were being checked and double checked.

On February 18th the college provided a fire-prevention clinic. This is the type of activity that students will quickly complain there is not enough of. Ironically some 25 or less students appeared. There are two things that could kill students in case of a fire; the first being this apathy and the second being false alarms.

According to "Concerned Student" that sent his or her letter in to the Editor "False alarms destroy the trust of the students in the alarm system...everytime one is pulled less students leave the dormitory...How is the puller to live with himself when he or she reads '150 Students Dead In

The college—through Dr. Peele's office—has devised a plan to prevent such an occurrence. Through student and faculty cooperation, a program consists of approximately 125 members. Each Building on campus has a building-warden, which in academic buildings would be a faculty head. Each floor has a member who is responsible for evacuation, equipment checks and education. In residence halls the Head Resident is the building-warden with the Resident Assistants taking charge of each floor. In addition to this comprehensive program the school has a Student Fire Warden, Donna Dix. Donna is educated through the cooperation of the Physical Plant. She is responsible for scheduling residence hall fire drills, and reports to Residence Board all fire drills and equipment up-keep.

In spite of all this, several loopholes were found: Why doesn't Frazer and Curry have a sprinkler system? Why don't the fire alarm boxes discharge a substance that makes the puller visible?

The first one was answered by Dr. Peele, "When Curry and Frazer were made in 1969 and 70 the building code did not call for a sprinkler system." He did agree that a Sprinkler system would be an added preventive measure.

Housing The Greeks

By SANDY NORTLEDGE

"Barry Driver, (President of the Inter-Fraternity Council) had done a very responsible job cooperating on this decision," said Mr. Thomas Nanzig.

The decision Mr. Nanzig is referring to is the moving of some fraternities into Main Cunningham. Mr. Nanzig stated, "that it is a real necessity to provide fraternities with reasonable facilities, both housing and chapter rooms, and also to provide for their systematic growth on campus." Four proposals were presented to the IFC (Inter-Fraternity Council) concerning the housing of fraternities at Longwood. The proposals are as follows:

1. Transfer two fraternities into Curry dormitory and use the chapter rooms that Delta Zeta and Alpha Delta Pi had used before they moved to Stubbs dormitory.

2. Expand fraternities into Frazer and use the activity rooms on the ground floor.

3. Put one fraternity on second floor Cox dormitory and use the activity room there.

4. Move the fraternities into Main Cunningham.

The fourth proposal is the one that has been accepted and will go into effect next year. Main Cunningham would be able to house six fraternities with 16 people from each fraternity. There would also be space left over for other fraternity members who could not get on their floor. Main's annex would house three fraternities while the three main floors would house three fraternities also. This proposal is "very neat, very clean and very fair for each fraternity," said Mr. Nanzig. Three chapter rooms would be located in the basement of Main Cunningham. Main Cunningham's second and third floors would have the activity rooms to use as chapter rooms. The sixth chapter room could possibly be located in North Cunningham's basement.

If the fraternities of Alpha Chi Rho and Alpha Sigma Phi accept housing in Main Cunningham, they will be housed on the second and third floors. The fraternities will be able to use the storage closets there. The study rooms may be changed into chapter rooms if arrangements can be made for study facilities for independent students. The fraternities of Pi Kappa Phi and Sigma Phi Epsilon will stay in Frazer as of now. As of yet, Omega Psi Phi and Delta Sigma Phi are not eligible for housing.

Another important item the fraternities might keep in mind is that the buildings of Main and North Cunningham will be renovated. The cost will be 750,000 dollars, and the renovation process will start between 1983-1985. The renovations will include: sprinkler systems, new exits, new bathroom facilities, new locks, refinishing of walls and doors, carpeting of lounge areas and new kitchen facilities. These renovations should not require the students to be evacuated during the school year.

Mr. Nanzig also gave the tentative plans for next semester's housing. North Cunningham and fifth floor Frazer will be allocated for the "new" men. Freshmen women will live in Tabb and French dormitories and also seventh and eighth floors Curry. South Ruffner females may homestead, however, a resident assistant will be appointed to South Ruffner.

Students living in Main Cunningham who may have to move because of the fraternities will have homesteading privileges after the other students have homesteaded. They must homestead with their roommate. Students who lived in French dormitory will also be able to homestead if they homestead with another student who lived in French dormitory.

Revised Curriculum

By JACQUILINE BURTON

Students registering later this semester for the courses they plan to take in the fall are going to discover that the English program has undergone a massive overhaul. After two years of extensive study, the English Curriculum Committee, composed of English faculty and students and presently headed by Dr. Donald Stewart, has adopted the plans for a revised English program which will become effective for the 1981 fall semester.

The changes to be brought about by the revised curriculum involve the replacement or combination of some of the former courses, along with the addition of several completely new offerings. Also, many of the courses presently offered will undergo no change in content, but will be re-titled or given a new course number.

Among those courses to be dropped from the curriculum by the English department are the so-called survey courses: English Literature (120-121), American Literature (140-141), and World Literature (160-161). These courses, which fulfilled major requirements for English majors and elective requirements for other students, have been replaced by the Survey of Western Literature (200-201). This new two-part offering will broadly encompass the essential material covered in the former surveys.

Other new English courses to be offered beginning next fall semester will include two three-credit American studies: English 331-American Literature: 1820-1865, which will be taught by Dr. William Frank; and English 333-American Literature: 1920 to the Present, which will be taught by Dr. Martha Cook. A two-credit course, English 483-Teaching Writing, will be taught by Dr. Ellery Sedgwick. English 241-The Contemporary Novel—will be re-listed as English 340, and English 320-21-Sixteenth and Seventeenth Century English Literature will become English Renaissance Literature 428. Undergraduates will see no 500-level listings in their catalogue. There will be 400-level listings for all courses open to undergraduates which graduate students will register to take at the 500-level.

English curriculum, students may expect an increased opportunity to study more limited subjects in greater detail. English 200 and 201 will provide a broader, more general view of the study of literature which will be more suitable and appealing to the needs of the non-English major, while being ideal as an introduction for the potential English major.

The programs of rising-senior English majors will be relatively unaffected by the new major requirements of the revised curriculum. English majors who will be sophomores and juniors next year should seek advice in regard to the effects of the new curriculum upon their own programs. Those English majors who have completed six credit hours of survey courses will not be required to take English 200-201. All other requirements may be fulfilled with elective courses on or above the 300-level. A senior seminar course—English 460—will be required for those English majors graduating during the 1982-83 session. More information pertaining to the changes which will be occurring in the English curriculum will be provided for students before registration.

Featuring... The Sophomores

By TAMARA NASH

There is no better time to be a sophomore than this week. Sophomore Week, February 22-28, is this week and its plans involve the entire Longwood community. The Class of '83 is responsible for an unlimited amount of activities that promise one super week!

However, the sophomore class officers and the handful of sophomores who care are concerned over the lack of participation from the rest of the class. The sophomores are actively involved in many activities on campus, nearly everything but their own class. "The lack of participation can really be frustrating," says one officer. "It's really hard to plan anything and then get it done."

Sophomore Week is a good example of such unsupported plans. Everyone who tried out got a part and there were more than enough parts to go around. Rehearsals were limited with the entire cast seldom being there at the same time but those who were there were dedicated and the show will take to Richmond on Wednesday, February 25, will be a fine representative of the sophomore class.

The auction committee also had its difficulties in getting merchandise to auction. But if you can't get support from your own class, how can you expect it from others?

Each class needs to stick together if they want to achieve any type of success. So Sophomores, this is your opportunity. Wear red-n-white Monday. Find something green for Tuesday and Wednesday, be a blue-n-white in support of all classes! Open Mike on Thursday, February 26, should be great so go over to the Gold Room and support your fellow classmates! Friday night's mixer will be held in the Lower Dining Hall. CHESS will provide one of the best sounds on campus this semester and you'll be sorry if you don't go. Admission is $1.50 for sophomores, $2.00 for L.C. students, and $2.50 for guests.

And whether you're a sophomore, freshman, junior, or senior if you see one of the sophomores who was responsible for pulling this week together, be sure to tell them "Good luck!"

Let's Go "Bull Vaulting"

By LISA BOWERS

Dr. Gerald P. Graham, Associate Professor of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, spoke Wednesday night at the Faculty Colloquium in Wygal auditorium. In his speech, entitled "The Physiological Potential of the Female athlete", Dr. Graham discussed the high athletic achievements of women, as well as their limitations. He utilized slides of photographs and charts in his presentation, and his speech was humorous as well as informative.

He began with a history of women in sports, stating that women had been known to be athletic since 300 B.C. when the women of Crete got their daily exercise by vaulting over the backs of bulls.

Dr. Graham's research indicated that although women's body fat-muscle ratio gives them a lower aerobic capacity than men, their long-distance swimming times are often better than men's because this lower muscle mass gives them added buoyancy in water. On short-distance swims, however, men excel because of their muscular strength. Likewise, long-distance running is often easier for women because when muscle metabolism is exhausted, glycogen-fat metabolism takes over. Once more, women's extra body fat becomes useful in sports.

Dr. Graham emphasized that for many women, difficulty in sports during their menstrual periods is often psychological. Most women can participate in athletics during their periods with no noticeable limitations. In the case of a healthy woman, even pregnancy may not affect her athletic participation. Dr. Graham cited a case in which one female runner continued to job five miles a day throughout her pregnancy up until the day her baby was delivered—a normal, healthy child.

Dr. Graham emphasized that most athletic injuries are not sex-related. Most women's injuries occur to the ankle and knee, with shin splints and bone stress fractures being common in women.

In conclusion, Dr. Graham stated that women are closing the gap between their own records and those of men. He offered, finally, a word of encouragement to all athletes present: "YOU alone can realize your physiological potential."

WUTA SURVEY

This will be your chance to influence the broadcasting material on Longwood's radio station. The survey will be distributed in the dining hall during lunch, Thursday, Feb. 26. All you will need is a No. 2 pencil and 3 1/2 minutes to express your opinion!

Faculty Art Exhibit

Sunday, February 22 concluded the annual Longwood College Art Department Faculty Exhibit. Contributors to the exhibit were: Barbara L. Bishop, Professor of Art and Department Chairman; Diana Detamore, Adjunct Faculty; Randall W. Edmonson, Instructor of Art; Elisabeth L. Flynn, Associate Professor of Art; Mark S. Balderidge, Associate Professor of Art; Virginia Mitchell, Assistant Professor of Art; Gertrude Shook, Adjunct faculty; James G. Silliman, Assistant Professor of Education; Hoiner L. Springer, Jr., Associate Professor of Art and Jacqueline J. Wall, Instructor and Director of Art, J.P. Wynne Campus School.

For Those Who Wait... On Tables

By JACK BARKER

Courtesy is a mutual thing. In order to receive it you must be willing to give it. Some students don't realize this when they are eating in the dining hall. These students abuse the privilege of enjoying a "family style" meal.

Students should keep in mind that the waiters and waitresses are people too. The Blackwell Dining Hall waiters and waitresses would like for the student body to keep this in mind and show some conduct which will be acceptable to the real world when they graduate.

You can exemplify some mature, courteous behavior by:

- 1) Stacking your plates to make their clean-up easier—Remember that they have tests to study for the homework as well as you do.

- 2) Taking your trays to the window on week ends—Keep in mind that they like to have some free time on the weekends, too, rather than cleaning up the mess you leave behind.

- 3) Don't keep sitting at the table and talking after you have finished your meal. Other waiters and waitresses have to reset the tables. They are trying to help pay their way through college.

Having been a waiter for two years now, and having for the most part enjoyed it, I feel it is the responsibility of everyone at Longwood to make life pleasant for all. The waiters and waitresses devote a lot of time to their jobs, so show them a little respect. Be glad you have the privilege of having sit-down service. If it weren't for waiters and waitresses, paid by the state of Virginia, you would have to endure a long buffet line at meals, not to mention increased tuition to pay for the increased hired help.

Market Basket Rises

Local consumers experienced rapidly rising prices for food during the past month. According to the latest market basket survey, food prices locally went up a staggering 3.8 per cent from the month of January.

The local increase was much greater than those observed in other areas of the state. In fact, February food prices in Northern Virginia (which had previously experienced the sharpest increases) actually went down an unexpected 0.4 per cent.

The table below shows how the local market basket compared with the other measured areas.

	Jan. 1981	Feb. 1981	Change 1/81 - 2/81	Jan. 1980	Change 2/80 - 2/81
Farmville	$60.80	$63.13	+ 3.8	$53.35	+ 18.3
Richmond	59.34	60.96	+ 2.7	51.73	+ 17.8
Norfolk/Va. Beach/Portsmouth	58.76	59.70	+ 1.6	51.68	+ 15.8
Northern Virginia	64.22	63.95	- 0.4	N.A.	N.A.

Of the 40 items measured in the local market basket survey, 22 items went up in price, 13 went down, and five reflected no change from the previous month. The items going up were flour, corn flakes, bread, hot dogs, fryers, frozen haddock, tuna fish, evaporated milk, frozen orange juice, frozen green beans, apples, bananas, oranges, onions, potatoes, peaches, peas, coffee, cola drinks, shortening, peanut butter and margarine.

Declining in price were soda crackers, round steak, hamburger, pork chops, bacon, cheese, milk, ice cream, carrots, celery, lettuce, tomatoes, and grape jelly. Showing no change in price between January and February were eggs, cabbage, corn, tomato soup, and sugar.

The difference between the "high basket" (total of the highest prices found in local stores) and the "low basket" was a significant $17.82, showing that the food dollar can be stretched by shopping around for the best prices.

The local market basket study is conducted by the Economic Seminar class of the Business and Economics Department, Longwood College, and is under the direction of Dr. Anthony B. Cristo. The study is funded by the Longwood College Foundation.

Is This Mike On?

By TAMARA NASH

You thought it couldn't be done but yes, folks, there is an open mike act longer than Joanne Mosca's — Ross and Chris Conner's! The amount of talent varies quite a bit but both acts were enjoyable as well as the entire Open Mike Show on Tuesday, February 17.

Matching shirts, Duke, Ken, and Bill opened the show with their usual fun-filled antics. Throughout the show, the "thrilling trio" exerted unlimited amounts of energy — from newscasting to rock shows to press conferences — they covered every aspect with humor (sort of) and kept the filled-to-capacity-crowd anxiously awaiting the next "fill-in."

Leigh Ann Goddin charmed the crowd with her easy-going singing accompanying herself on the guitar. Her songs were smooth and mellow. The audience enjoyed "Farmville on a Saturday Night," an original piece that caught the feeling of Farmville in "one easy song."

Open Mike regulars, Joanne Mosca and Sue Wilkerson, were welcomed warmly by the crowd who knew what to expect. Joanne and Sue blend with a harmony seldom found within any group. Especially noteworthy was "Desperado," featuring Sue on vocals. If things work like they should, these two will be known on more campuses than Longwood's before too long.

Talent in the Conner family is well-hidden by Chris and Ross. Their act was filled with variety, a few songs, a little magic, and a lot of jokes (namely, Chris and Ross). They harmonized a little (very little) on a medley of beach songs and handled "My Girl" almost as efficiently as the White Shadow gang. The duo brought out a guitar and banjo and succeeded in holding them. Albert Jay provided his own sideshow during their act and helped make the humor complete.

For a little audience participation, an air guitar contest was held which left most of the audience in stitches. Bob "Ralph" Lemieux emerged victorious (with a little help from Alpha Sigma Phi) by commanding more applause than the other three contestants: Paige Moody, Marcia Fastabend, and Mark Rogers.

Anne and Danny was a really outstanding ventriloquist act. Anne has her performance near perfection and the crowd fully enjoyed her "cuts" on certain members of the audience!

Rob Fleischer and Alan Hoffman were smooth and mellow with their clear and precise duets. Their rendition of "Aubrey" was well worth hearing, as well as their other selections. Both displayed musical talent in vocals, piano, and guitar to combine for a super combination.

Representing "Street Corner Symphony," Felicia Mann gave a commendable performance. Her first number, done a cappella, prepared the audience for her second number — an original composition in which Felicia aroused the audience with her ability to "scat." Seldom done here, the crowd fully appreciated her talent.

The success of Open Mike continues to grow and a lot of credit goes to Duke, Ken, and Bill. The support of these shows is strong and promises their continuance. If you haven't been to an Open Mike, don't miss the next one. You may discover some really hidden talent and be able to cash in on their "fame!"

SILENT PARTNER

By SHEILA GOLLHARDT

Tonight's Sound Gallery will feature two newcomers to Longwood College. "SILENT PARTNER" consisting of Don Porterfield and Kemp Jones, will perform tonight in the Red-White-Green rooms at 8:30 p.m. as a special treat, admission to tonight's "SILENT PARTNER" will get you a free beverage. Now who could pass up a free beverage and good music — all in one night. Help Sound Gallery support Sophomore Week. It will be a night full of fun and excitement. The concert is $1.00 w.i.d. to Longwood students and $1.50 to their guests.

Artist Of The Month

Lisa Cumbey is the artist of the month for February. Lisa is a senior at Longwood College working toward a B.F.A. degree with studio concentration in drawing, printmaking and graphic design. A native of Courtland, Virginia, Lisa attributes her first serious interest in the arts to the creative instruction of Myrna Dworsky, her eighth grade art teacher. She won her first blue ribbon in 1973 and has since won numerous ribbons and cash awards in competitions judged by noted artists and curators such as Clarence Macnelly, Barclay Sheaks, Anthony Radich and the late Dick Cossitt.

Her latest achievements include the 1980 Art Department Purchase Award and the "Best in Show" title in the 1980 Walter Cecil Rawls Museum's annual Five County Art Show. She is the Art Editor of The Gyre, Longwood's literary and art publication, and the Student Director of Showcase Gallery.

The winning artwork is an untitled abstract photograph done in black and white. This is the first time she has ever submitted any work to the Artist of the Month Contest. Second place winner is Don Lamb and third place winner is Carol Cordes.

Rimers Premiere

By TAMARA NASH

The opening music ends, the house lights dim, the whispers cease, and the curtain slowly rises. Rimers of Eldritch opens tomorrow, Wednesday, February 25 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. The cast and crews, after weeks of practice, are ready for a "professional" performance.

As you sit in the audience enjoying the play unfolding before you, it is only natural that you would compliment the actors especially on conquering a play as difficult as Rimers. You, as an audience, are often unaware of how many hours of hard work learning lines, rehearsing, and building the set are involved in the production. No play is simple and the concentration and dedication of the entire cast and crew is to be applauded.

The talent contained on this campus is astounding and the range of plays diverse. It is most unfortunate that more people do not attend these plays. So as you sit in the audience enjoying the intricate web being tangled on the stage before you, be sure you think of what those characters are—and from where they came.

Faculty Recital

The Longwood College department of music will present Patricia Lust, soprano, in a faculty recital on Sunday afternoon, March 1, at 4 o'clock in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

The program will include Prose lyriques by Claude Debussy, five songs by Charles Ives, and Kramerspiegel, Op. 66, by Richard Strauss. Accompanying Miss Lust will be pianist Rodney Reynerson, who is scheduled to give a Visiting Artist recital on Monday evening, March 2.

The public is cordially invited to attend Miss Lust's recital and the reception to follow in the Green Room, Wygal.

Commenting on the music she has chosen, Miss Lust states that Strauss wrote Kramerspiegel to fulfill an obligation to his publishers "at a time when he was having serious disagreements with them. The poetry, by Alfred Kerr, pokes fun at the publishers in a rather tart manner." The Prose lyriques are settings by Debussy of his own poetry.

The songs in the Ives group were all written in 1921 but represent a wide variety of the composer's styles. "Ann Street" and "The Side Show" are humorous miniatures, "Two Little Flowers" is one of Ives' most lyric songs, and "Afterglow" simply creates a mood. "The Housatonic at Stockbridge," which Miss Lust calls "the most grand" of these songs, is taken directly from the orchestral work Three Places in New England.

Miss Lust has performed as recitalist and chamber musician in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Ohio, Indiana, and Virginia. In larger scale works, she has performed as soprano soloist in oratorios, with the Indianapolis Symphony as part of the Indiana State University Contemporary Music Festival, and in the premiere performance of "An Ellipse of Songs" by Carl van Buskirk.

Before joining the Longwood music faculty in 1979, Miss Lust held positions at Indiana State University, Plymouth State College in New Hampshire, and several public schools. She has a bachelor of music degree from Heidelberg College in Ohio, master of music degree from the New England Conservatory of Music, and is working toward a doctorate in performance at Indiana University.

SOPHMORE WEEK!GOOD LUCK TO ALL THOSE INVOLVED!Looking For Leaders

Dear Students,

Attention all willing and able-bodied young men and women: the time for planning of fall orientation is upon us. All rising Juniors and Seniors are cordially invited to apply as Orientation leaders (2.0 GPA required).

It takes someone very special to be an Orientation leader. A good one must possess a desire to work with and help people. Also he/she must be able to motivate his or her group to attend all meetings and encourage them to patronize the fun activities that will be planned for them.

If you are selected to be an Orientation leader, you will be expected to return to school a few days early and guide a group of approximately 10-15 new students through this orientation program that I'll be planning this summer.

The applications will be in the Information Office — just fill them out and place them in the box. I'm looking forward to meeting and working with you. With your help this will be the best orientation program ever. Do not hesitate to call me with questions or suggestions at 392-4757.

Thank you,
Dallas A. Bradbury, Jr.

Support Geist

Dear Student Body, Faculty and Administration:

On Wednesday and Thursday, the annual Geist Bloodmobile Drive for the American Red Cross will take place in Lankford from 12-6 p.m. This, above all other events Geist sponsors, has the most far-reaching and widely-felt impact upon those around us. The volunteer donating of one's blood is a life-saving gift given unselfishly and without expected return of favor.

Geist needs you, the students, administration and faculty to donate your services or blood to this cause. Please sign up or just come to the Bloodmobile on Wednesday or Thursday. Give the gift of life!

Best Of Luck

Dear Sophomores,

Despite the problems you've encountered trying to get your week together, you've made it! Best of luck with your week and may your blue and white and green and white spirit shine!

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Editor's Turn

As a general rule, the cliché, "If you want something done right, do it yourself," is a good law to abide by and practice. The greater the number of people working on a project, the greater the opinions and problems. Sometimes the mere idea of a group trying to agree to get the job completed is hopeless.

On the other hand, a group of people who sincerely want to work together, giving and taking, usually conclude with a job well done. This week, there are many such dedicated groups who have worked together and are ready to share the results with the rest of the college.

Since this is Sophomore Week, the sophomores will be busy to help make every planned event worthwhile. The members of Geist will be busy with one of their most important projects, the Geist Bloodmobile. Finally, the play Rimers of Eldritch will be performed this week after a great amount of work from all those involved. Remember the hours of hard work put in to make this a special week at Longwood as you participate in these activities.

Editor's Note: Anonymous letters or comments concerning faculty, administration, students or The Rotunda will not be published without the name of the sender. The editor must know who sent the letter and the name will be kept confidential. Please keep this in mind when sending letters.

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"My future plans as of now are to graduate and start really plugging away at life. I love Longwood in a strange sort of way, but it's time to move on and slide down that razor blade of life."

This quote is typical of the realistic, true-to-life attitude senior Kerry McCarthy takes toward life. She is an earthy, honest person with a dry wit and a quick smile.

"I feel that I've had a good education here. However, if I had to do it all over again, I don't know if I would be here. Financially, I probably would because that is one of the reasons I chose to come to Longwood. My family had been planning to move to Virginia, so my sister and I looked into some of the colleges here. It was far too expensive to go to college in New York. Anyway, I was accepted here and at Lynchburg. I came to Longwood because I could afford it."

Kerry has made the most of her time here. A music major with a minor in dramatic arts, Kerry is the current Vice-President of Alpha Psi Omega, the national dramatic honorary fraternity as well as the former secretary. She was Vice-President of Longwood Players as well as an active member both on-stage (in productions such as A Former Gotham Girl, Our Town, and Carousel) and backstage on technical crews. In the music department, she is a member of the Concert Choir and Cameratas. She is the former corresponding secretary of Sigma Alpha Iota, the women's music honor fraternity, as well as the current chaplain. To top all this off, she is about to open Wednesday night as Cora in the Longwood Players production of Rimers of Eldritch.

"I would like to continue training in a practical type of curriculum — preferably in acting or the technical aspects of the theater. I'll probably go back to New York and try to get into the National Shakespeare Conservatory or maybe audition for the Christian Broadcasting Network working out of Virginia Beach. On March 21, I am going to audition for 15 summer troupes and/or companies. These companies are for shows like "The Lost Colony," etc. I guess I'm auditioning just for the sake of auditioning. I also have a possible singing job with a band in New York for the summer. I have a lot of options open right now — including that inevitable marriage idea."

"Of course, I'll miss my friends I've made here. Those people have been great — they were there when I needed them to fall back on. One in particular was Neil Sawyer, the guy I've been dating for four years. He is one of those special people that has given me lots of support and comfort. And I've needed a lot of that these past four years!"

When asked for her major complaints, Kerry was quick to respond. "Apathy! Students have so many great ideas, but they never put them to use. A prime example of this is the Longwood Players. Their rights are being violated because they are not being given the choice to do the plays they want to do. The Players need to take a stand. Yeah, we are peon students but we do have some good ideas. The directors always choose — they are afraid they will lose their power and control. The Players just want their rights back — this is how I personally feel."

"Also, I have no malice against any one person in the administration, but they have been cheating the students for a long time. The administration does not let us know what is going on — they do the same thing to the faculty. If something is wrong they should let us know. A lot of students think everything is fine, especially those who have substituted the school as "mommy and daddy." We have a cautious administration — more so now because everyone is watching them."

Kerry also had some views to share on her major and interests. "Musicians, actors, etc. tend to wear their hearts on their sleeves. That lends to an interesting, if not frustrating, life. Gossip and rumors, for one reason or another, is rampant in the music and drama departments."

"But that really doesn't bother me. I am constantly reminded of

Study Abroad This Summer

European Tour Planned

By JOE JOHNSON

To tour London, Amsterdam, Venice, Florence, Rome and, ah, yes, Paris, in five unhurried weeks for a little over $2,000. Why, it's a madman's vision, a hopeless dream. Well, maybe so, but it is possible and the "madman" behind this fantastic voyage is Dr. Elisabeth L. Flynn, Associate Professor of Art History for Longwood College.

Dr. Flynn will be conducting a study tour course of the many famous European works located in each of these cities. The course will be worth 6 credits and a final examination will be given sometime near the end of the tour. She hopes to have at least 15 students and not more than 20 to allow students to develop their own special interests with direction from the instructor.

"The course is carefully planned so that lectures will be given 'on the spot' concerning the places and art works visited. It is designed to give the students an introduction and an in-depth awareness of the great works of art which stand as the visual expressions of the intellectual and spiritual aspirations and achievements of man." Or as Dr. Flynn put it, "It is an investment in ideas."

Dr. Flynn credits the low price of the trip to FACETS, a New York travel agency. FACETS or the Franco-American Committee for Educational Travel is an American based firm which uses the French Ministry of Education as its principal tour operator. This fact has allowed FACETS to develop educational programs throughout France and a number of European countries which are especially designed for the college student.

Dr. Flynn conducted a similar tour in 1971 which she said was most successful. "I was thrilled by the amount of knowledge the students picked up on the last trip. They seemed to have done more than learn facts; they have gained a new awareness of different cultures and how these cultures have, influenced the society in which we live.

Speaking of the coming tour, Dr. Flynn said, "The students will be touring most of the day but at night they are free to go to concerts or do anything they like." She also added with a smile, "Most of them will probably sleep — we're going to do a lot of walking." Aside from walking, she also plans on swimming in the Mediterranean, photographic work and drawing.

All students are welcome on the trip, art majors or not. Applications can be found in Dr. Lehman's office or at the Bedford Building, Art Department office. There is a $100 deposit due March 2, 1981. The itinerary for the trip is as follows:

London — June 16-23 — The Elgin Marbles, St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey and the Tate Gallery are only a few of the gifts of London which we will come to know. An excursion to Salisbury and Stonehenge will be complimented by city sight-seeing and an excursion to Canterbury.

Amsterdam — June 23-25 — The short two day stay will include a canal trip and visits to the Rijksmuseum and the Van Gogh Museum.

Paris — June 26-July 4 — General sight-seeing will be complimented by special trips to Chartres, Versailles and Reims. A full day is set aside for the Louvre. Other museums will be visited in conjunction with walking tours of special areas including the Left Bank and the Ile de la Cite.

Venice — July 5-6 — Titian, Veronese, and Tintoretto will become familiar friends in the city of St. Mark.

Florence — July 7-14 — The capital of the Renaissance will be the museum where we will live for one week. Donatello, Brunelleschi, Masaccio will welcome us and introduce us to their friends Michelozzo, Fra Angelico and the Medici. There will be trips to Siena, Pisa and Lucca.

... en route to Rome, July 14, our bus will take us to Perugia to see the Porta Augusta and the Fonte Maggiore. In Assisi we will visit the world of St. Francis, Cimabue and Giotto.

Rome — July 15-20 — The five days of Rome will be filled with visits to the Vatican, the Forum, Ostia, Tivoli and many other sites of our Western Heritage. Stops at the Tivoli and many other sites of our Western Heritage. Stops at the Terme Museum, the Campidoglio and the New City will complete this trip and prepare use for future stays in the Eternal City.

... Return to Dulles Airport from Rome ...

Movie Review

By JOE JOHNSON

"Scanners" appears to be one of a new breed of movies working its way into the industry. It is kind of hard to describe, but if you take "The Exorcist" and add a sprinkling of "Star Wars" with just a touch of Love Canal, you might get an idea of what I'm talking about.

For those who liked "Alien", this movie is for you. It has all the mindboggling special effects plus the tension-building silence that "Alien" fans have come to love. For those non-"Alien" fans out there (and there must be a few), stay clear of this movie unless you like heads exploding, veins squirting, and more violence than five Clint Eastwood movies rolled into one.

David Cronenberg, who seems to be a combination of Alfred Hitchcock and George Lucas, created this science-horror story. Mercifully, he didn't try to "say" anything with it except the good guys win again, which is just as well because any inner message would have been garbled by all those eye-popping, teeth-grinding sounds.

The movie, for its genre, is really quite sophisticated. The plot has more curves in it than a country backroad, and a nice little twist at the end makes you wonder who the real villain is. Patrick McCoolan plays the part of Dr. Ruth, a more or less mad doctor who creates a breed of super-telepathic human beings called Scanners. Like good old Frankenstein, the scanners turn on their master and form a separate organization headed by Darrell Revoc (Michael Ironside). The purpose of this organization is to take over the world (of course) and the only thing standing in its way is Cameron Vale (Stephen Lack) a tough, lonely scanner, who Dr. Ruth has taken under his wing. Along the way Cameron manages to pick up another lonely and not so tough scanner named Kim (Jennifer O'Neill) and together they sock it to the dastardly Revoc. Love, courage, blood and guts—what more could you ask for from a movie? Well...maybe a little intelligence wouldn't hurt.

Lancer Gymnasts Prepare For State

By LISA SPENCER

FARMVILLE, VA.—After a cancellation of last week's meet at East Tennessee with James Madison, Longwood's gymnasts are preparing for the upcoming state championships Sunday. Coach Ruth Budd, however, feels that the gymnasts should place more emphasis on the regional tournament coming up March 13-14.

"The state meet isn't very important," commented Budd. "All divisions will be there. What determines participation in nationals is the regional tournament. That's where we're concentrating our efforts."

national ranking of all schools reporting their top three scores placed Longwood 9th in the nation. That ranking was determined before the Lady Lancers' 128.55-122.30 win over William & Mary, and the record-breaking 129.75-120.40 defeat of East Carolina.

The same poll placed Longwood as the number one team in their region, and junior Kathy Idelson (ANNAPOLIS, MD) as the top all-around. Idelson, who has won the all-around title in four meets this season, has broken two Lancer records this season—uneven bars (8.35) and floor exercise (8.65). Her floor ex record was later broken by freshman sensation Monica Chandler (STERLING) who had an 8.75 against ECU.

Sharon Pillow (RICHMOND) won the all-around title in last season's state championships, but has had some difficulty this season. Knee problems have been hampering her performances this year, but Coach Budd feels that she and the rest of the team are looking good in preparation for Sunday.

"The team has been working hard, and they look really good," Budd stated. "We're in good shape and our main concern for Sunday is to try and beat Radford again. They gave us our toughest competition of the season and we need to beat them to be in good shape for regionals."

The team's record going into Sunday's competition is 9-2, and its top performances during the regular season are below:

ALL-AROUND	Kathy Idelson	33.35	William & Mary
BARS	Monica Chandler	32.95	ECU & VPI
VAULTING	Kathy Idelson	*8.35	ECU & VPI

 LONGWOOD 120.20, Virginia Club 49.85 (Chandler 29.95 all-around)

Lady Lancers Fall

By KAY SCHMIDT

The Lady Lancers fell in two conference games last week, dropping their record to 10-15 overall, and 5-8 in VAAW Division II. Senior tri-captain Brenda Fettrow was high scorer in both games with 25 points for the week, bringing her career total to 1085 points.

Longwood, who defeated Liberty Baptist earlier in the season, suffered a 52-71 loss to the Lady Patriots Thursday night. Brenda Fettrow led the Lady Lancers with 9 points, 8 rebounds, and 2 assists.

Saturday the Lady Lancers were downed by Radford 76-92. Longwood got strong performances from Brenda Fettrow, Cindy Eckel, and Theresa Ferrante, with 16, 15, and 10 points, respectively.

This week the Lady Lancers play their last two regular season home games — University of Richmond Tuesday, and Randolph-Macon Thursday. March 6-7 Longwood will host the VAAW Division II State Tournament.

Support The

Player Of The Week

From Sports Info

At the heart of Longwood's recent resurgence in basketball has been the play of sophomore guard Joe Remar. In a 92-79 triumph over Liberty Baptist (Feb. 14) the 6-1 Remar handed out a school record 15 assists while scoring 11 points. Remar came back to score 15 points in last Monday's 62-61 win over Pembroke State.

For his accomplishments, Remar has been named Longwood College Player of the Week and McDonald Player of the Week for the period February 13-20. Longwood Player of the Week is chosen by the Sports Information Office while the Lancer coaches choose McDonald Player of the Week.

"For about five minutes against Liberty Baptist we played as well as we are capable of playing," said assistant coach Martin Schoepfer. "Our play during that stretch was largely due to the performance of Joe Remar."

Longwood's career leader in assists (275 in two seasons),

Remar got off to a slow start in the current campaign but has come on like gangbusters over the past two weeks helping Longwood win four straight games. The Lancers are headed into a season ending game with North Carolina Central Monday.

In his last four games Remar has scored 11, 15, 14 and 13 points while collecting 29 assists. He has teamed with junior Mike McCroey to give Longwood consistent play in the backcourt.

A Social Work major, Joe is the son of Mrs. Inell Remar of Elizabeth.

Freud would say that a girl who loved horses had some subconscious need for the animal that she otherwise could not find in a man. According to Sigmund's theory this really should not last into adolescence. But what if the girl keeps up with her adoration of horses even in her twenties?

"Well" would toot some upper class equestrian. "I'll have nothing to do with Freud's theory." And surely she would not. But the horse to a certain branch of society certainly does not have any masculine connotations. Instead the animal has a totally instrumental purpose in the upper-crusts of today's society. The fox hunt and decorative horse pictures are important aspects of the Preppies life according to "The Preppy Handbook."

Mary Katherine Redman has grown up around horses in all of her 21 years. She has been riding since age 4. When she was 9 she started showing horses. She shows a style that is referred to as English (Hunter). When she was 11 years old she was already placing second in state competition. Aside from that honor she had placed in several championships and won herself an array of assorted ribbons.

She now has her own horses at home which she practices on during the summer. In her spare time here she likes to ride Mary Whitlock's horses out at her farm in Cumberland. Mary Whitlock is the coach of the Longwood Riding Team. Longwood, unlike those "elite" schools such as Sweetbriar and Hollins, does not own its own facilities for horses. Longwood uses the resources of Mary Whitlock. Regardless of this inconvenience, Longwood is among the top three teams in its region.

"This is a rather snobby sport," tells Kathy. "It really depends on who you are." She explained that when she goes to a horse show she has no idea of the horse she is going to ride. For instance: if the show was at U. Va. she would have to draw out of a hat to ride one of U. Va.'s horses. This can make for a lot of problems also. She told this story about a really snobby girl who we will call "Suzie" for all practical purposes. Well Suzie just thinks she is the hottest thing that ever stepped in riding boots. It just so happens that the horse she drew messed up while she was riding. According to the rules of horsemanship that is just tough luck. But Suzie didn't think it was fair. She stopped the whole thing for an hour to complain. Unfortunately, hot stuff got to go again. She consequently placed first. Consequently, because before she went again, Kathy was in first place. That just goes to show who's who in the world of horse print belts and silver tea cups.

Anyway Kathy has made it to Regionals three times in three years at Longwood. She has also been the team captain three times. She was also Miss Longwood 1980, and was in the Miss Virginia Pageant. She comes from Hartfield which gives her room to ride in her spare time at home. She is a Home Economics Major and now lives in the Crafts Home Management House just across the street from the Rotunda and Library.

Next year after this springs graduation she plans to go to Florida where she will be married. Her fiancé will be working for a Brokerage firm there. If she ever has to teach anything she wants to teach riding. And with the gas crisis the way it is I just might take a lesson or two on one of those fuelless creatures.

From Sports Info

Two weeks ago Longwood stood 14-9 with its hopes for making the NCAA Division II playoffs fading fast. But, things have changed since then. Saturday night the now 18-9 Lancers capped off a four-game win streak with a 95-77 upset win over visiting Division I Howard University.

Longwood coach Ron Bash, whose team ended the regular season Monday night at home against North Carolina Central, feels his club has put itself back in the race for post-season play.

"We're playing our best basketball of the season now," said the coach. "I would be extremely disappointed if we finish 19-9 and don't get a bid to go somewhere. We have played a rugged schedule with 18 games on the road. I think our schedule compares with anybody's."

Bash, who turned in a masterful coaching job in Saturday's triumph, says the Lancers have gotten back to doing what they do best—dictating the tempo and using their quickness. The play of two veterans from last year's 28-3 season, guard Joe Remar and forward Kenny Ford, has also been a big part of Longwood's recent success. The Lancers have beaten Liberty Baptist 92-79, Pembroke State 62-61 (road games), Radford 64-47 and Howard.

In Saturday's win over Howard, a team with a big size edge, Bash had his team sag back in a zone on defense and spread things out on offense. The strategy worked to perfection as Longwood got an early lead and made the physically stronger Bison plays its game.

Frustrated that what he felt was one-sided officiating, Howard coach A.B. Williamson drew three technical fouls and was ejected late in the game. Longwood made good on all six technical free throws and canned an amazing 45 of 47 for the game.

Bash agreed that the officiating was poor, but said that the performance of the officials shouldn't detract from a great showing by his team.

"This has to be our biggest win ever," said Bash. "It was our first game with a Division I team and we came out on top. Our kids

February 23. This year there are 17 women's pairs and 20 men's pairs. Co-ed Volleyball is also starting with 13 teams participating. There is a need for volunteers to officiate. Any interested students should contact Ms. Callaway in Lancer Hall.

Entry Blanks are now available for Spades. The Entry Blanks are due March 2, the mandatory participants meeting will be on March 3. No All Sports Trophy Points will be given for this event.

could have pulled an "el-foldo" at the end of the season, but instead they're showing a lot of class and determination."

Junior Kenny Ford has had his ups and downs since rejoining the team in December, but recently it's been all ups. Friday night against Radford he scored 11 points giving him 1,001 for his three-year career and making him the first male basketball player at Longwood to score more than 1,000 points.

He put on a phenomenal display of foul-shooting against Howard Saturday. Ford tossed in 16 of 17 foul shots and scored 28 points to pace the win. The 6-2 forward is fast approaching the form that made him an All-American in Division III a year ago. His free throw total was a new school record for one game.

Ford was also the victim of a punch thrown by a frustrated Howard cager late in the contest. The tri-captain received a cut over his eye but should be back in action for the season finale against N.C. Central.

Longwood's Jerome (The Cobra) Kersey showed Howard's "Dunk Patrol" how it's done Saturday night with an awesome first half slam off a feed from Joe Remar. Kersey scored 21 points, mostly on power moves inside. Further cementing his reputation as one of the top freshmen in the area, he helped get Howard's 3 big men in early foul trouble.

Another big contributor in the victory was senior Thomas (Tee) Alston, who scored 11 points and hit seven of eight free throws. Remar scored 13 points and handed out five assists while controlling the offense against intense pressure.

1981 Chi Symposium

Stress, Suicide, and Sexuality are the topics of this year's CHI Symposium, March 9, 10, and 11 in Jeffers Auditorium. The symposium offers an opportunity for students to hear about the three subjects that affect college campuses. They will also be given an opportunity to ask questions of the speakers.

Dr. Jennings Cox, Director of Counseling Services, will speak on Stress, Monday, March 9, at 7 p.m. Dr. Cox has held seminars on the subject several times on campus.

Tuesday, March 10, at 12:45 p.m., Dr. Mary Cristo, Associate Professor of Sociology and Anthropology, will speak on Suicide. Dr. Cristo has done a lot of research on adolescent suicide and has been the feature of a recent Richmond newspaper article.

Dr. Joseph Horvat will close the symposium when he speaks on Sexuality, March 11 at 7 p.m. Dr. Horvat is an Instructor of Psychology.

All three of the speakers this year are members of the Longwood faculty or staff.

The sessions are free and open to the public. Come and bring a friend to the CHI Symposium.

NTE Given

By JACQUILINE BURTON
The Standardized Achievement Test (SAT) which all students must take before being accepted for admission by a college or university is not the last of all such examinations those seeking teacher certification are to encounter. In accordance with a regulation passed by the Virginia General Assembly and the Board of Education, all prospective teachers are now required to take the National Teacher Examinations (NTE) before being eligible for initial teacher certification. The new ruling went into effect as of July 1, 1980.

On Saturday, February 21, approximately 200 applicants—mostly senior education majors—took the NTE in Jeffers and Bedford Auditoriums. This was the third test date offered since the NTE became mandatory. The NTE was previously taken only on a voluntary basis in Virginia or by those wishing to be able to teach in other states requiring the NTE. Longwood is one of the nineteen testing centers for the NTE around the state.

The purpose of the NTE, which is conducted by the Educational Testing Service (ETS) of Princeton, New Jersey, is to measure the academic achievement of senior education majors and those who have majored in other specific areas of instruction. The first part of the testing is called the Common Examinations. This part of the examination lasts for a period of three hours and fifteen minutes, and is composed of four individual tests which can be grouped in two categories: Professional and General education. The Professional examination, which is given first, tests the student's knowledge of social and cultural forces influencing the teaching curriculum, as well as learning the instructional principles. The other three tests given during the Common Examinations fall under the category of General education. These tests are: Written English Expression; Social Studies, Literature, and the Fine Arts; and Science and Mathematics.

Area examinations, each of which requires a period of two hours, are offered in twenty-five fields. This testing measures the student's comprehension of the methods and content in the specific field in which he wishes to become certified.

The results of the NTE will be processed by the Educational Testing Service and reported to those who took the tests in a few weeks. Although the NTE is a pre-requisite for those wishing to become certified to teach and may cost those taking it 20-35 dollars to register, it is still in the experimental stages concerning its large scale use in Virginia. At the present time, no minimum score for performance has been established. This may not occur for several more years. However, the NTE may someday become an important means of evaluating the quality and competence of all those seeking a professional teaching career.

Successful Bloodmobile

The American Red Cross Bloodmobile Drive that was held February 25-26 in Lankford and sponsored by Geist, Longwood's leadership honorary, proved to be a success. The quota of 250 units of blood was met and exceeded by the efforts and donations of Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students, faculty, staff, and Farnville area residents.

Jenny Nash, coordinator of Red Cross volunteers and operations from the Roanoke Chapter of the American Red Cross, was ecstatic with the Bloodmobile's results. "We were very impressed with how smoothly everything here was run. The donors and volunteer workers were great. I would especially like to commend Geist on their top-shape organization and planning. They worked hard to pull this drive off."

In all, 336 units of blood were collected over the two day event. Winners in the Geist competition were first place ($25.00)—the Junior class and second place ($15.00)—the Sophomore Class. The Chi banner and $10.00 prize will be awarded to the sorority or fraternity with the highest participant percentage that will be determined at a later date.

Helms Discusses Political Scene

By CHERYL WILCOX

"Government controls the people, but only the people can control government," Dr. James Helms, a professor of Government and History, made this point in a lecture on the "Virginia Political Scene" at the Wesley Foundation last Wednesday night.

Dr. Helms explained that to understand Virginia politics you must know who controls the state system. In the upcoming 1981 election, the political power in the state for the next ten or twelve years is on the line, according to Dr. Helms.

The men that will run in the next election for our three highest state offices was also a topic of Dr. Helms' lecture. The candidates in the upcoming gubernatorial election will be Marshall Coleman and Chuck Robb. Neither man is a newcomer to the Virginia political scene as they both hold major state offices at the present time. Helms pointed out that it should be an interesting campaign with "Coleman taking a stand on the major issues and Robb trying to avoid the issues."

In the race for the Lieutenant Governorship, there is a wider field of candidates, said Helms. "At the present time there are three men interested in the Republican nomination: Guy

Albermarle Wins Tournament

Longwood College hosted its fourteenth annual debate tournament on Saturday, February 28, 1981. Over forty-eight teams from eighteen high schools attended and competed in switchman, varsity, and novice division.

Emerging as the first place winner overall was Albemarle High School. Finishing in second place was Meadowbrook High School. Third place was Prince Edward County High School; in fourth was Trinity High School of Richmond. Fifth place was won by Turner Ashby High School, near Harrisonburg and Prince Edward Academy. In sixth place was Miles Godwin High School of Richmond.

The switchman division was won by Meadowbrook High School with Prince Edward County High School winning the varsity division. Albemarle High School was the novice division.

Over 175 students participated in this day long tournament. All students in competition debated on consumer safety. Forensic and debate class members running the tournament were: Carolyn McIVER, Teresa Moore, Diane Bottoms, Patia Trutt, Kari McKinnon, Karen Nettemeyer, Alice Bartlett, Karen Eckstein, Llew Childress, Barbara Mooney, and Melissa Sager. Mr. I. B. Dent was in charge of the tournament with Mrs. Nancy Anderson of the Speech and Drama Department, and Mrs. Jean Doss of the S-UN office.

Persons working at Longwood College are invited to view The Virginia Museum Artmobile Exhibition "Secrets" at a special lunch hour opening on Monday, March 9 in the Farnville Shopping Center. For that day the Artmobile will be open to the public from 12 to 1:30.

All are invited to bring a bag lunch, view the exhibition, and eat in the basement of The First Baptist Church, adjacent to the Artmobile's location. The church will be open from 12 to 2, filled with Spring plants for the occasion, and coffee will be served at no charge.

The Artmobile's visit is sponsored by the Central Virginia Chapter of the Virginia Museum.

Good Job

By TAMARA NASH

Sophomore week is over but the glow should go on and on. Despite a slow start, the dedication of those willing to work managed to complete a most successful Sophomore Week.

The auction, although small, raised a fair amount to go towards the Sophomore class treasury. A big thanks goes out to all those who donated items and those who attended the auction. Dr. Bob Webber, as always, was an excellent auctioneer.

For the benefit of the community, the Sophomore Road Show took their act to Holly Manor. The audience was fully receptive and the actors did an excellent job in spreading a little sunshine in the name of the Sophomores.

Traveling to Richmond on Wednesday, the Road Show brought smiles to the faces of the young as well as the old. The Sophomores graced the halls of the Richmond Memorial Hospital and the Crippled Children's Home and managed to share and spread a lot of laughter. What an accomplishment!

Thursday night the Gold Room was the setting for Sophomore Open Mike. Hosted by Ross and Chris Conner, the abundance of sophomore talent was overwhelming. From country to easy-listening rock to the good ole '40's, Sophomore Open Mike was full of entertainment and fun.

CHESS proved to be an excellent band selection for Friday night's mixer. The crowd enjoyed the music, the company and the dancing and it proved an ideal way to end an enjoyable week.

There are many people who deserve a lot of credit for the outstanding job done with Sophomore Week. All the chairmen, actors, and talent are what put this week together but all the support from the other Longwood students is what held it together. Thanks and good job!

New Art Course Offered

By JOE JOHNSON

Next fall the Art Department will be offering a one credit course in Art 401. The course is entitled Great Art Museums and Their Collections and will cover such museums as The Louvre (Paris), the Vatican (Rome), the Prado (Madrid), and many other famous museums.

Dr. Elisabeth L. Flynn, Associate Professor of Art History, will be teaching this course which will be held in Bedford Auditorium from 7:00 to 8:45 every Tuesday evening. The course will start October 13 and last until December 8, for a total of eight to nine meetings.

Dr. Flynn said that she will be using a combination of slides and lectures in her class presentation with a final examination given at the last meeting. There are no prerequisites for the course and Dr. Flynn welcomes anyone, Longwood student or not.

The course will cover what a museum is, and the role it plays in society. "A museum is more than a building that houses artwork, it serves other functions. Aesthetically and architecturally the museum complements its outer environment. It also inspires one to study the artwork contained inside. Dr. Flynn added, "I am hoping for a large turnout — the faculty and I are very enthusiastic about the new course."

Sparse Crowd Enjoys Silent Partner

By CONNIE FALLON

At the end of last Tuesday night's Sound Gallery, activities coordinator, I.B. Dent, admonished the sparse crowd to go home and "kick your friends in the ass" for missing an excellent show. Indeed, I would have kicked myself too, if I had missed the super sound of Silent Partner.

This original rock duo, consisting of Kemp Jones and Don Porterfield, surprised those who attended last week's Sound Gallery. One would question, how much music can two guys make? Well, after hearing Silent Partner, the answer is a lot.

Jones and Porterfield have been playing together since high school and through the years they have mastered a good variety of instruments. Kemp Jones plays keyboards, guitar and harmonica while Don Porterfield plays bass guitar, lead guitar and acoustic guitar and keyboards. Together they produce a beautiful rock sound. With the absence of a drummer, Porterfield claims "an intuitive feel" helps them keep the beat.

The duo opened their show with a joke about Longwood liking disco, then played a very early rock tune by the Bee Gees. It was entitled "Mr. Jones." Throughout, they played many original songs and also some well known songs by such artists as the Beatles and Neil Young.

But these groups are not the only influencing factors in the music of Silent Partner. After the show I managed to find out that much influence has also come from the music of Todd Rundgren, Genesis, and especially Genesis keyboard player Peter Gabriel. This was clearly evident in many songs, like their one instrumental piece called "Sometime." In this piece they achieved the effects of many instruments such as a flute, french horn and harpsichord, by the use of a Crumar Orchestrator. They also used a Moog synthesizer to create other varied musical effects.

Aside from the playing of instruments, Jones and Porterfield are masters of voice. Their harmonies were full and rich, sung in clear tones much in the style of Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young. In fact Silent Partners rendition of C.S.M.&Y.'s "Guenivere" proved better than the original.

All in all, Silent Partner, produced an evening of finely crafted music, and those of us that were there to enjoy it did just that.

Mixed-Up Friday

By LISA BOWERS

The Sophomore Class ended their week of activities in high style with a mixer on Friday night featuring "Chess". A four-member band from Richmond, "Chess" plays a variety of dance music, such as beach, soul, top forty, and rock.

The band played such tunes as "Overnight Sensation," "Got My Mind Made Up," "Celebration," "Tush," "Backstroke," "I'm Easy," and a Motown medley with "Sugar Pie Honey Bunch." "I'll Be There," "Same Old Song," and "Baby I Need Your Loving."

Several variations on a night of dancing included a "Backstroke" dance exhibition by members of the crowd, a duet featuring Lisa Bowers on the song "Reunited," and the song "Buttercup" performed by Michelle Lewis, Suzanne Fraillie, Gretchen Rowland, and Kelly Jones.

This mixer, with its good music and partying crowd, helped to crown Sophomore week as a success for all concerned.

Back By Popular Demand

By SHEILA GOLLHARDT

This Thursday night Sound Gallery kicks off the weekend with the Legendary JON IMS. Jon is from Denver, Colorado.

Some of you might remember him from when he performed in the Snack Bar. Some of his songs were "Smoke Out the Memories," "Good Old What's Her Name," "Tinkle, Tinkle Little Star, How I Wonder Why We Were," and, of course, "Uncle Willard," and Longwood's special line "When She Saw My Tuna Coming, She Knew It Was no Chicken of the Sea."

Of course, he does quieter songs, too, and has lots of new songs to share with our Longwood audience. He writes most of his own songs, keeping in mind the kind of people who will be hearing them. The concert is at 8:30 p.m. in the R-W-G rooms, March 5, 1981. L.C. $1 with ID and guests, $1.50. He'll delight you with his facial expressions and voice tones.

Bedford Gallery Art Exhibit

By JOE JOHNSON

The works of Warrington Colescott and Robert Indiana are being displayed in the Bedford Building Art Gallery from February 20 until March 16. The Virginia Museum of Art has purchased the Colescott and Indiana and is allowing college galleries around the state to display them as part of its State Services Traveling Exhibition.

Warrington Colescott has done a series of ten color etchings depicting scenes from Thomas Mann's novel, "A Death in Venice." Colescott's etchings concentrate on the hero's stay within the decadent society in a Venetian hotel. As a visual interpretation of the novel, Colescott's etchings combine an artistic attention to narrative and atmosphere while continuously illustrating the inner turmoil that the hero is undergoing.

Each etching refers to a specific passage in the Thomas Mann novel, but can also stand on its own as a work of art. The etchings were executed in a vivid contemporary style by using bold strokes of color which helped accentuate the characters and places of the novel.

The scenes are self-contained comments on the images they represent and the mood changes rapidly from happy to sinister. Some of the more provocative titles are "Pursuit," "Dark Gondola," "A Frightful Dream," and "Death in Lido."

Colescott is an active printmaker and educator. He teaches at the University of Wisconsin in Madison and is the founder and director of Montezoa Press. His work has been exhibited at the British Print Biennial in 1974, the Brooklyn Museum 9th Biennial in the same year and the Library of Congress 24th national exhibition in 1975.

Robert Indiana is displaying "Decade," a portfolio of ten silkscreen prints of the most important images he has created during the years 1960-1969. These images represent the artist's major themes, one for each year of the '60-'70 decade.

Many of the works have histories behind them which serve to remind one of the turbulent decade and what it stood for. Mississippi is one of his eleven intended Confederacy paintings. It represents a social protest against the racial attitude and injustices of the South, with the words, "Just as in Anatomy of Man, every nation must have its hindparts" boldly printed on it. Mississippi was the artist's major gift to the Congress of Racial Equality.

Another Indiana print oriented toward a similar theme of racial brotherhood is Black and White Love. It is one of the largest paintings of his entire body of work and was dedicated to Martin Luther King, Jr., after his assassination. Black and White Love was shown publicly for the first time in a Black benefit exhibition at New York Museum of Modern Art.

One of his simplest but perhaps most beautiful themes is represented in the work entitled "Yield Brother." It is a series of yield signs diametrically opposed to each other with the middle line extended to form the universal peace symbol. A symbol, which for many people represented the entire range of ideals encompassed by the rebellious '60's era.

Robert Indiana has lived in New York since 1954 and is a highly acclaimed "Pop" artist. His style, a reflection of the society in which he lives, is the neon polyphony of the "New America."

Miss Bishop, Chairman of the Art Department, hung the show with the help of several art students. The gallery is semi-divided by two movable platforms with the different works lining each side of the room. Various plants are well placed throughout the gallery to make it even more aesthetically appealing. "The result," said Miss Bishop, "is the room and the artwork enhancing each other beautifully." She also said, "I am delighted by the response that the exhibit has received thus far."

Editor's Turn

Editor's Note: This week's editorial space is being used in defense of the student newspaper.

To the Editor:

The 1981 Art Department Faculty Exhibit was on display in the Lancaster Library Gallery from January 16 to February 22. During that time, no announcement or review of it appeared in The Rotunda. If it had not been for the unfortunate theft of jewelry from the gallery, the show would have been ignored by this newspaper. Now, two days after the exhibition has closed, an "obituary" announcement of this fact has appeared in your February 24 issue. The show is over. It is yesterday's news.

It is a shame The Rotunda failed to fulfill its responsibility to report this important campus event. The Longwood art department faculty is composed of professional artists who regularly exhibit their work in local, regional, and national exhibitions. The annual faculty show provides a unique opportunity for the Longwood community to experience a wide variety of artistic thought and expression.

When the show finally was mentioned in your columns, names of exhibitors were mutilated and simple words were misspelled. This may have been the result of sloppy typesetting by the printer. Nevertheless, it reflects the consistently poor journalistic standards employed by The Rotunda staff. Reading The Rotunda is an excruciating exercise. From the fuzzy, off-centered photographs to the butchering of the English language found in any article on any page, The Rotunda offers an amazing array of journalistic bumbling bordering on illiteracy. The Rotunda is a college newspaper, yet its staff apparently lacks even rudimentary writing skills.

Surely you can do better.

Sincerely,

Randall Edmonson
Instructor, Department of Art

Mr. Edmonson:

I never intended to ignore the Faculty Art Show. When the theft occurred, the coverage of it took precedence. I felt by publishing the two theft articles, The Rotunda staff expressed its concern and disgust that anyone would tamper with an art exhibition. The return of the jewelry became the main concern, and I felt rightly so. The theft became the real "news" at the time. This was my decision to make and I did.

The obituary announcement, which is not a usual journalistic technique, was requested by a member of your department. That is the reason it was included in the paper late. If anything, I feel that the theft article increased public interest in the exhibition and the quality that was available there. Perhaps the article even spurred the thief to return the jewels. If it did, I will never regret not covering the faculty show on the whole.

You feel The Rotunda failed to include an important campus event — which is your opinion. As editor, I believe it is my decision to decide what is our responsibility now and in the future. Otherwise, the freedom of journalistic endeavors will be completely governed by the college.

The art department receives extensive coverage when compared to other departments which rarely receive mention. If you examine previous papers, you should find this fact evident. A professional artist should not be devastated by lack of mention in a college newspaper if their work is exhibited regionally and nationally where there is greater recognition.

Concerning the mistakes in the published box, they were proofreading oversights which I take full responsibility for. To err is human. If you've ever noticed, typographical errors are a common problem to all newspapers — small or large.

I truly resent the fact that you said The Rotunda reflects poor journalistic standards. We do not profess to be professional journalists without imperfection.

The paper is used as a learning instrument for those who are interested in journalism as well as an informative paper for the college. I would be the first to admit The Rotunda needs improvement in areas. Nevertheless, generalization about the total paper being poor does not reflect much consideration on your part.

By the way, promo material was not sent concerning the show. We try to cover every department's activities. However, if specific coverage is desired, information could be sent to us.

Your totally uncalled-for accusation of illiteracy was another impulsive generalization. I would like to take this opportunity to defend those just beginning with journalistic writing, as all of us students involved are. Your apparent lack of tolerance for another's mistakes is ironic since you are a teacher. As editor, I appreciate any student who would spend voluntary time to write a story for everyone else's benefit.

Lastly, Mr. Edmonson, if reading The Rotunda is an excruciating exercise, please do not consider it as a personal burden — do not bother. If finding the misspelled words and detecting all the English flaws is your main interest, you missed the point to begin with. The art department is a respected, contributing department on campus, yet some of its staff apparently lacks even rudimentary understanding of the purpose of an independent Student paper.

As far as your last statement "Surely you can do better," that is something the staff considers and strives for every week. As a teacher on Longwood Campus, I would have expected better from you. If you felt we did not cover a story that you thought was important, that is your right and you are encouraged to let us know. However, a direct attack on the paper and all those involved, students as well as teachers, was despicable. Someday, after studying journalism, we "illiterate" students may make you eat your words.

Sincerely,

Jodi A. Kersey, Editor

Senior Spotlight

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"Who knows what I'll do with my future? I'll probably teach history or work for the government. I really haven't decided yet—they are bound to hire me somewhere. When it comes, I'll find it—whatever it is."

This statement sounds pretty nonchalant, but for anyone that knows senior Sherry Gallop, they know she is everything but nonchalant. Sherry is well-known for her active participation, both physically and verbally, in many groups and activities.

"I like the role Student Government has been taking, especially this year. They are more active in the affairs that take place here at school. They have gone from a group dictated to a more active group in student concerns."

Sherry has been pretty active herself during the past four years. She was the chairman of Freshman Production her first year here, as well as a member of the yearbook staff. She has been involved in Oktoberfest and orientation and was a resident assistant for two years. She currently serves on the Dining Hall Committee, is IAA Secretary, and is playing lacrosse for the second year.

"The main reason I came to Longwood was because this was the only school in the state of Virginia I applied to. My family had just moved to Virginia Beach and I had my heart set on going to a school in New England. However, because of personal reasons, I decided to stay in the state. Longwood offered a degree in history education and that's what I needed."

With a history major and geography minor, Sherry, as she said before, doesn't know about her future yet. "I could stay in school forever. We have no really big worries here—it's all one big sheltered life. I tried to live on my own one summer—I nearly died. Cooking is not my specialty—paying rent is not too hot either."

"People should take advantage of the time they stay in college. I've noticed a big change in the kind of students that are coming in now. That shows a big difference in the attitudes college students have now. The males coming in now are quite different from the ones that came in my freshman year. They are much more considerate. I know that 75 per cent of the guys that came in with me aren't here any more because they got kicked out or didn't make the grades. However, the ones that stayed are pretty good ones!"

WUTA Survey Results

THE ROTUNDA

Tuesday, March 3, 1981

By JODI KERSEY

The Great WUTA survey is over. The survey was distributed during lunch last Thursday, February 26, 1981 to poll the likes and dislikes of the college campus.

Surveys were filled out by 319 students out of the estimated 1200 students that eat lunch. Dr. Patton Lockwood, advisor for the broadcasting station, was disappointed with the number of surveys returned even though the analysis concluded being statistically accurate. Dr. Lockwood said "the limited response was probably due to inadequate publicity and the lack of experience of the students in the class to deal with unforeseen complications."

This survey is one type of survey that is necessary before a station finalizes program scheduling. Conclusions can be made from the survey outcome concerning how much of any program is broadcast and when it should be used.

Dr. Lockwood also added that this survey is only one factor in determining programming and the results of the survey will not eliminate any category. The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) requires programming to be responsive to the needs of the entire listening audience which includes the town of Farmville. Therefore, WUTA is not just a college station, but a public station. A similar survey will be distributed soon in the community. Another survey will be distributed on the college campus next fall.

Rimers Review

BY NEIL SAWYER

February 25-26, the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts presented The Rimers of Eldritch, a two-act play by Lanford Wilson.

The play was an attempt to deal with "appearance versus reality" — a particular society's inability to deal with the reality of right and wrong.

Visually, the play was visually segmented into numerous scenes past and present allowing the viewer to see effect before cause which, although often confusing to the audience, added a certain element of suspense.

Although the audience may have been a bit confused, they were never left bored. The acting in general was stimulating with particularly shining performances given by several actors. Veteran actor Frank Creasy, who played Skelly the town scape-goat, met the challenges of a tough characterization with great skill. Kerry McCarthy who portrayed Cora, another out cast, acted with a sharp-edged confidence which transcended any of Kerry's past work seen on Jarman stage. Freshman Myra Pierson continued to show great potential in her role of Eva. What Myra lacks in control should be easily conquered through the acting experience of (hopefully) many future Player Productions.

Also worth noting was Karla Wilson, a veteran actress with phenomenal stage presence and Doug Blevins who has shown remarkable improvement.

Several actors, however, did not contribute to the overall unity of the play but stiffness and characterization problems could have been overcome with tighter castings.

Aside from the actors, one of the real work horses in Rimers was the technical crew and particularly the light crew headed by Jeff Sledjeski and Nina Leffue. With constant light changes throughout the play the light crew held enormous responsibility. A wrong cue could not have been disguised. Mr. Sledjeski and Ms. Leffue controlled their operation extremely well leaving the actors to make or break the play.

Rimers of Eldritch also owes much of its success to Richard Gamble, lighting and set design and to Kathy Gamble, who worked costuming.

Altogether, Rimers of Eldritch was a refreshing production and one of the best plays presented in the past few years.

Campus School Students Display Art

Ten children have been selected from the Wynne Campus School to enter their art work in the annual Youth Art Month Exhibit at the F & M Center in Richmond. The children are from grades 4-7 and were chosen by Mrs. Jacqueline Wall, Art Director for the Campus School to enter this exhibit.

The exhibit will open March 5 with a ceremony and reception beginning at 4 p.m. for participants. Each student whose work is chosen will receive a certificate from the Virginia Art Education Association.

Movie Review

By JOE JOHNSON

Oh, alas, unrequited love, the scourge of mankind since John Donne took pen in hand, has struck my heart. And the object of my outrageously unattainable affections? Well, she is none other than Goldie Hawn, that blonde haired, baby blue-eyed, bubble headed star and executive-producer of "Private Benjamin".

You remember Goldie, she's that dumb blonde who used to get painted up, slip into a bikini and giggle a lot on "Laugh-In". She is also the dizzy delight that Chevy Chase tries to win over in "Foul Play." Right now Mrs. Hawn is busy helping Warner Brothers collect a little over 61 million dollars for "Private Benjamin". (Not bad for a dumb blonde).

In the movie Judy Benjamin (Goldie Hawn) is an overprotected Jewish girl who desires nothing more from life than 1) Husband 2) house 3) clothes 4) closet space (not necessarily in that order). She manages to find something close to that, but on her honeymoon night her newlywed croaks in her arms amidst passionate groans.

Overcome by grief, she does the only sensible thing and joins the Army. Once she realizes that this particular Army doesn't have private rooms and condos, she politely tells her captain that there's been a mistake. Needless to say there has been a mistake and Private Benjamin is the one who has made it.

Boot camp is a naturally funny subject but Goldie adds a touch of special humour to it. How many people can find the lighter side to cleaning latrines with a toothbrush or doing push-ups in an evening gown. Her dainty

Alpha Phi Omega Rush Soon

By STEPHEN MOYERS

What is Alpha Phi Omega?

Alpha Phi Omega is a National Service Fraternity; college students gathered together in an organization based on fraternalism and founded on the principles of the Boy Scouts of America. It's purpose is to develop leadership, promote friendship, and provide service to humanity. By doing so, its aim is to further the freedom which is our national, educational, and intellectual heritage.

Who Can Join?

Any student duly enrolled on the campus where a chapter exists, who joins with the chapter's members in their service projects, accepts the principles of Scouting on which the fraternity's ideals are based, and meets the standards of the chapter concerns.

Service: Our Middle Name

As a national service fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega is the only national fraternity with service as its primary mission. While there is a great diversity in the types of service programs conducted from chapter to chapter, they all serve to make up a great national ministry to human need, conducted exclusively by college students.

All chapters are encouraged to develop service projects which will be beneficial to youth, with a special emphasis on leadership development, physical development, and aid to youth with special needs, including the handicapped. Alpha Phi Omega's program is directed to 4 areas: campus, community, youth, nation, and members.

With all of the information thus far concerning service, don't get us wrong and take us to be work-a-holics. We have our share of social "let your hair down" activities.

Does this sound too good to be true? Well, you can have all of this for only $20 initiation fee plus reasonable chapter dues. Through our emphasis on service, we stress involvement with people. Through our open-membership policy, we accept all people as they are. Through our strict no hazing policy, we emphasize human dignity.

Training For The Minithon

By DR. GERALD P. GRAHAM

Time is running short to get in shape for the Fourth Annual Longwood Minithon. The 6.2 (10 KM) mile race from Hampden-Sydney to Longwood will be held on April 11th starting at 10:00 a.m. Registration forms will be ready in a couple of weeks.

Here is some general advice for the beginning runner or anyone who has not been very active for the past few months. If you have any doubts at all about your health then first get a good physical examination. Before you start running do some easy stretching, especially the back of the legs. It's less of a shock on your tendons and muscles to slowly stretch them before you start jarring them. You should also repeat the stretching at the end of the run.

Start jogging slowly for a few hundred yards, then walk a while. Repeat this until you've gone a half a mile or so. Get a friend to join you because the first few weeks of getting back into shape can be the most difficult and a friend can share your misery. If you can carry on a conversation while jogging then you know you're supplying enough oxygen to meet the body demands. If you can't talk and you start to become breathless, they you are building up an oxygen debt that you will have to repay by slowing down or stopping. You'll find that hills will put you into oxygen debt if you ascend them too fast. After a few weeks you can gradually overload your system (run harder) to increase your ability to supply oxygen to your muscles and to tolerate higher oxygen debts. Don't run more than four days a week at first. The in-between days will give your body tissues a chance to repair from the unusual activity you have exposed them to. After the healing, the tissue will be stronger than before.

You are better off working on distance at first rather than speed. Try and increase at least a half a mile per week. This may not put you at six miles by April 11th, but if you can make four or five miles by the week before the race the spectators will inspire you to make six the day of the race.

The Route from Hampden-Sydney to Longwood is actually an easy route. The elevation of Hampden-Sydney is higher than that of Longwood; therefore, the route is mostly downhill. The hardest part of the run comes about a mile from the finish with a long uphill grade, then downhill to the finish line in front of Lancaster Library. So get in shape and join the fun. The only thing you have to lose is fat.

Player Of The Week

From SPORTS INFO

Standout junior forward Kenny Ford, who was named an All-American last season in NCAA Div. III, has added his name to the Longwood record book one more time. Friday, Feb. 20, the 6-2 cager scored 11 points in a 64-47 triumph over Radford, giving him 1,001 career points.

Ford, the first male cager in Longwood history to score 1,000 points, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week and McDonald's Player of the Week for the period February 20-27. The Longwood player of the week award is selected by the Sports Information Office while the McDonald's award is chosen by the Lancer basketball coaches.

A key factor in Longwood winning its last five regular season contests, Ford scored 28 points and made 16 of 17 free throws in a 95-77 win over Div. I Howard February 21 and scored 11 points in a 99-71 triumph over North Carolina Central last Monday. The Lancers finished the regular season 19-9.

"Kenny is a great competitor," said Longwood assistant coach Martin Schoepfer in nominating Ford for the award. "We had to win those last two games and he led us. He played practically flawless against Howard."

Ford, who holds several school records, both season, game and career, has added new life to the Longwood attack with his scoring, free throw shooting, rebounding and cool play under pressure. Voted Longwood Male Athlete of the Year for 1979-80, Ford set a record for free throw percentage for a season this year with an 81.7 mark.

Kenny is the son of Mr. James Ford of Blacksburg, S. C.

Lady Lancers Ready For State

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's women's basketball team (12-15) which has won its past two games against Richmond and Randolph-Macon at Ashland, will travel to Virginia Commonwealth Tuesday in the first round of the VAAW Division II State Tournament.

The Lady Lancers must defeat the Rams, 11-11, to advance to the tournament semi-finals which will be held at Longwood Friday night. Three other tournament games played Tuesday will help determine who will meet in the tournament semi-finals.

The Lady Lancers defeated Richmond, 85-53 last Tuesday for a sixth place finish (6-8) in conference play. Longwood, who shot 58.5 per cent from the floor, led the Lady Spiders 50-31 at halftime. The Lady Lancers were led by Brenda Fettrow with 19 points, Cindy Eckel with 18 and Robin Hungate with 17.

Thursday Longwood ended its regular season with a 65-50 victory over Randolph-Macon. Cindy Eckel was high scorer with 16 points, while Robin Hungate added 12. Hungate, who was 4-4 from the line, now holds the school record for most consecutive free throws made (24). She has not missed from the free throw line in seven consecutive games.

In VAAW conference standings, Longwood leads in team defense, holding opponents to only 65.2 points per game. The Lady Lancers also stand third in free throw percentage (62.4). In individual statistics Cindy Eckel ranks fifth in scoring (15.6 ppg), Hungate seventh in free throw percentage (74.5) and Fettrow ninth in assists (2.4).

Lancers Open Baseball Season

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood's 1981 baseball season kicked off Friday for two games at Guilford (NC), will continue at NC Wesleyan Saturday and opens at home Monday (Va. Wesleyan).

Despite a rugged 41-game schedule which includes 10 contests with Division I foes, Longwood's baseball outlook for 1981 is bright with the main ingredients from last year's 19-11 squad returning. The Lancers ranked eighth among NCAA Division III teams in batting (.334), third in runs scored per game (9.1) and stole a whopping 163 bases a year ago. Longwood is competing in NCAA Division II this season.

Longwood coach Buddy Bolding predicts another winning season even with Virginia Tech, Virginia, Duke, Georgetown, Colgate and Virginia Military Institute on the slate. The Lancers proved a year ago with a 13-12 win over Virginia and narrow losses to other Division I foes that they can compete with the "big boys."

"This year's schedule both excites and scares me," said Bolding. "I feel confident in our potential to become one of the stronger Division II teams in the Mid-Atlantic Region. This squad is the most dedicated group I've ever led, and playing our 'sure out defense' and 'pressure offense,' I expect us to win 20-plus games as well as collect some wins over our Division I foes."

Bolding, who guided Longwood to its second consecutive winning season last year after the team had gone 0-13 the year before his arrival, has six starters plus his top three pitchers coming back from 1980. Reinforced by the addition of several talented newcomers and a successful fall exhibition season, Longwood should be ready for another productive campaign.

Heading up the 1981 Lancer squad will be the returning starting outfield: Jim Thacker (right field), John Crosby (center) and Bruce Morgan (left), who stole 100 bases between them last season. Returning in the infield are:

Chuck Hagar (third base), David Rumburg (second base) and 1980 All-American catcher Doug Toombs. Returning hurlers David Mitchell, Mickey Roberts and Richard Vaught, who won 15 games between them in 1980, will comprise the nucleus of an improved pitching staff.

Among the promising newcomers expected to battle for starting roles are: freshmen Sonny Bolton (shortstop) and John Sullivan (second base) and juniors Ron Jones (first base), Donnie Mowbray (pitcher) and Don Cahoon (pitcher).

Toombs and Crosby had sensational seasons a year ago, leading the nation on all levels in batting and base-stealing. Toombs racked opposing pitching for a tops-in-the nation .565 average while Crosby stole 62 bases in 68 attempts, averaging 2.14 steals per game, the second best figure in NCAA baseball history on any level.

Thacker also had a big year in 1980, batting .360 and stealing 15 bases while batting behind Crosby in the lineup. The Lancer rightfielder's skills at the plate were of considerable help to Crosby in his base-stealing efforts.

Senior Barry Gordon, who drove in 32 runs and clouted five homers last season, is back to give Longwood a potent bat in the designated hitter position.

Coach Bolding expects his main starting pitchers to be Mitchell, Vaught, Roberts and Mowbray. Leading the relief corps should be junior newcomers Cahoon, Bill Catron and senior Tim Lowery, who played infield last season. Other Lancers who are expected to make important contributions in 1981 are veterans Tim Kendrick (pitcher), Denny Ulrey (infield), Eddie Brunette (outfield), Rusty Bowlin (outfield) and Duayne Kendrick (outfield).

Bolding's team should be more seasoned for the 1981 campaign and with the addition of a new baseball park complete with dugouts, stands and electric scoreboard plus an attractive schedule, Longwood could be in for its most successful and exciting season ever.

Cindy Eckel, the 5th leading scorer in VAAW Div. II, shoots in earlier action.

Lancer Gymnasts 2nd In State

From Sports Info

Paced by a third place all-around finish from freshman Monica Chandler, Longwood's gymnastics team placed second in the VAAW State Gymnastics Meet at James Madison Sunday. JMU took first with a 129.65 while Longwood compiled a 125.80.

Chandler scored a 32.3 in all-around on the strength of third place finishes in bars (8.2) and floor exercise (7.9) and a tie for fifth in vaulting (8.45). Junior Kathy Idelson was fourth in all-around with a 32.05 and sophomore Sharon Pillow was fifth with a 31.65.

Idelson gained a sixth in beam (8.1) and a fourth in floor exercise (7.85) while Pillow had a tie for second in vaulting (8.6), a second place in bars (8.4) and a sixth place in floor exercise (7.7).

Longwood coach Ruth Budd pointed out that her team topped the other Div. II competitors, Radford and William & Mary, losing only to Div. I James Madison.

"We are more concerned with how we do in the regional meet at Western Carolina," said Budd. "If we win the regional, we'll qualify for nationals in Div. II."

AIAW Region 2 regional competition will be held March 13-14 at Western Carolina University in Cullowhee, North Carolina. The AIAW Div. II Gymnastics Nationals are set for April 3-4 at William & Mary.

Men's Basketball Finishes 19-9

From Sports Info

Longwood's men's basketball team closed out its season with a 99-71 triumph over North Carolina Central last Monday, ringing up five straight wins at the end and a 19-9 record in its first season in NCAA Division II.

"We had an outstanding year, considering how tough our schedule was," said head coach Ron Bash. "Playing 18 games on the road with some extensive travel took its toll on us, but we came on strong at the end and that bodes well for next season."

Longwood will have its entire starting lineup and seven of its top eight cagers back next season. Bash who had hoped his team might receive a bid to this year's NCAA playoffs, flatly predicts the Lancers will be a tournament team next season, barring unforeseen circumstances.

"Providing we get some help from our recruiting, we should have a very strong team next season," continued the coach. "Our players got a taste of how good they can be the past few weeks. They know now how far hard work can take them."

Longwood will be upgrading its schedule once again with the addition of Div. I foes Virginia Tech, Navy and Rider to next year's slate.

RECORDS, RECORDS, RECORDS

Jerome Kersey, Kenny Ford (SHELBY, NC), Mike McCroey (MD) and Joe Remar all set new school records during the past campaign. Kersey established marks for rebounds in a game (19) and season (249), field goals attempted (313) and made (197) and blocked shots (32); Ford set records for career points (1,040) and free throw percentage in a season (81.7) while McCroey had a record 89 steals and Remar a season mark for assists (145).

Lacrosse Season Begins

By CINDY DROPSKI

The 1981 Women's lacrosse team has been in training for their season since January. The team is anxiously awaiting their first game on March 14 against Piedmont Club.

Many people are unfamiliar with the sport lacrosse. There are twelve people on the field. The strategy is similar to basketball with the offense using pivots, rolls and "give and goes." The individuals playing must be in top condition because there are no boundaries therefore it demands a lot of running. First Ave. field provides an excellent playing field for the Lady Lancers. The equipment consists of a stick (cross), ball (which is similar to a "super-ball"), and a mouthguard. Even though the mouthguard is disliked by all the players it is needed because of the danger involved of being hit in the mouth with the cross. The game is played mostly in the air which makes it a very fast moving sport. The skill of the player in catching and throwing the ball also determines the speed of the game.

The team is looking good despite the loss of Teri Davis, Julie Dayton, Kim Garber and Sherry Will because of student teaching this semester. The team is also missing other experienced players due to schedule conflicts. The returning players are: M. Milne, C. Dropski, M. King, S. Payne, K. Schmidt, D. Cosby, K. Fuhr, P. Putney, M. Allmen, B. Casey, D. Snader, C. Mayer, J. Jacobs, K. Wood, J. Johnson, S. Gallop, L. Rice, J. Wakelyn, K. Klebert, S. Melvin, and L. Garber. The first year players are showing much improvement in the short period of time they have been practicing. The confidence and potential of the players while practicing promises to produce a successful season.

Since the experience of many players is only that of one year, Coach Jane Miller believes the change in divisions will provide a more successful season. The lacrosse schedule has been reorganized to Division III play. The change in divisions doesn't reflect the previous years play because the lacrosse team has gone to Nationals for the last two years. Coach Miller's enthusiasm has enhanced the spirit of the team for their coming season. Ms. Miller, once a player of the U.S. Lacrosse Team, has many new ideas which makes practice fun and interesting.

If you are a person who likes excitement, attend the lacrosse team's first game on First Ave. field at 1 p.m. on March 14. Support your Lady Lancers!!!

Apology Wanted

Dear Editor:

In regards to the article on the "Jewel Heist," Feb. 17 issue of the Rotunda, Sigma Phi Epsilon would like to emphasize that they were not involved in the jewel theft. The envelope containing the jewels was mistakenly placed in Jeff Houser's box. Jeff acted in full accordance with the Honor Code the entire time he had possession of the jewels.

We feel the Rotunda owes Jeff, and Sigma Phi Epsilon, an apology for this incriminating article.

Sincerely,
John H. Murry, III

EDITOR'S NOTE

Dear Mr. Murray:

The Rotunda stated the facts concerning the final return of the jewelry. We did not imply that Jeff Houser or Sigma Phi Epsilon was involved in any way in the theft. We did, however, accurately report the confusion surrounding the jewelry return. Therefore, I do not feel an apology is necessary or in order.

Sincerely
Jodi Kersey

Erosion

and Bulb Company of Julian, N.C. Gilmore has been back to patch up the hill four or five times since October. None of the patching has done any good and Gilmore is supposed to come back to sod the hill sometime around the first of March. By the time of this publication we will know if this is done.

Until Finney, in his capacity, reports to the contractor (Guest) that the hill is completely seeded and germinated without erosion can the contractor be released as liable.

If the courts were to crack, Guest would be incurred for any damages resulting. But the chances of the courts actually cracking are slim. Finney thinks it is impossible. Bauckley Courts of Winston-Salem, N.C. constructed the courts, such as indicated in the diagram, to prevent any movement or settling to promote cracking. A layer of compressed gravel is first put down into a concrete beam encasing the underground foundation. Then a layer of asphalt is placed and on top of that another compressed layer of asphalt. Then a layold playing surface is placed on top.

In order for the courts to crack at least 16 inches of erosion would have to take place. The concrete beam is 16 inches. If the gravel were to give way to the erosion then the courts could crack, stated Karl Noerre of Romeo Guest.

But the Longwood Physical Plant wouldn't allow that much erosion to take place before they would directly intervene. Ike Finney does not know if Gilmore is going to definitely put sod on the embankment but he believes if they do there won't be any problem. The tennis courts above the hockey field are constructed similarly, and, "Look at those, the hill is steeper than the one over there (at Lancer Hall) and we don't have any problem," said Finney.

The spring rains will tell us for sure. Only time can tell.

"Furthermore, they try to tell an organization, specifically the IAA, how they should spend their money. The IAA now cannot buy our T-shirts. We have been told that in order to give T-shirts, we have to charge students to participate in IAA events that have already been technically paid for through their student activity fees. Confusing, isn't it?"

"We have more participation in IAA than any other group on campus; yet we get less money than all other state schools in this area—less than one dollar per student is given to IAA. It is something to think about."

Board Of Visitors Pass Resolutions

The Board of Visitors met Thursday and Friday, March 5 and 6 to discuss college affairs and vote on presented resolutions. There were three resolutions passed during the two day meeting. The first recommendation passed was to increase FTE enrollment by approximately 60 students. This plan would give student teachers the option of living off-campus during the weeks before and after student teaching. By enrolling 60 more students, there probably would be a need for tripling of student teachers. This would not set a precedent in that student teachers have been tripled in the past although this has not been the case for the last several years.

Secondly, the fee structure for 1981-82 submitted by the Administrative Council was approved by the Finance Committee and the full Board. (The tuition and fees structure is outlined in the box).

Lastly, the Board accepted the by-laws of the Organization of the Teaching Faculty, prohibiting collective bargaining in any way and funding of the organization by Longwood. These three decisions concluded the voting by the Board.

Drivers Presents Proposals

By JODI KERSEY

Barry Driver, president of the Inter-Fraternity Council, addressed the Board of Visitors on Thursday, March 5th concerning fraternity housing. About 5:20 p.m., Driver presented the Board with carefully investigated proposals for fraternity housing. The IFC is very concerned because Main Cunningham could never house the eight fraternities which are expected to be on campus by 1983. "The fraternities have never agreed to the Main Cunningham proposal by the Administration" said Driver. "Chapter room facilities would not be adequate for the fraternities in Main Cunningham. Also, renovation, which has not even been approved by state legislation, would not begin for two more years." One Board member had this reply during the Friday morning open session. "The guys in Main don't want to move out and the fraternities don't want to move in—why make everyone unhappy?"

These are the four proposals presented by the IFC from their top priority to the lesser proposals:

1. Make Curry co-ed because there would be two extra rooms available for chapter rooms, and make Frazer all-female.

2. Leave the fraternities in Frazer and use the ground floor rooms in Frazer. The ground floor rooms are 55x22 feet and a wall petition could make two more chapter rooms.

3. Keep the fraternities in Frazer and make chapter rooms out of suites.

And 4. Keep the fraternities in Frazer and use the Curry ground floor rooms for chapter rooms.

Driver said that Frazer and Curry have the possibility for eight chapter rooms by using some of the student lounges. The fraternities could use the same three floors in Frazer with twelve spaces left on each for independent students.

The administration has to decide about housing by the end of this week. No formal stand was taken by the Board, but their general action indicated favor in the IFC proposals. Driver concluded by saying that the Board was very cooperative and interested in the student needs. The IFC wished to give credit to two helpful advisors, Dr. Anthony Cristo and Dr. James Crowl. The fraternities also want to thank Sharon Harrup for her participation during the meeting. "We are all proud of Sharon," said Driver, "for giving us the chance to speak and to represent the students."

Colbert Named Miss Longwood 1981

By CHERYL WILCOX

The minute the crowd had been waiting for the naming of the three finalists in the 1981 Miss Longwood Pageant. There was a hush in the auditorium as Chris Connors announced the winners: second runner up Marsha Booth, first runner up Joanne Mosca and Miss Longwood 1981, Debra Colbert.

The crown was placed on her head and Debra took her first walk down the runway as Miss Longwood. Debra will receive a $300 scholarship and lots of nice gifts from various patrons in the Farmville area. Joanne will be given a $75 scholarship and Marsha a $50 scholarship. Both will also receive numerous presents.

The most talented non-finalist in the pageant was Rebecca Johnson. Rebecca's talent was a dance she choreographed herself to the theme from "The Summer of '42." The contestants themselves voted and chose Melanie Moss as Miss Congeniality. The pageant was the conclusion to long weeks of hard work by the contestants, the talented special guest performers and the pageant committee.

Everyone wishes the best of luck to Debra in her coming year as Miss Longwood 1981.

Rebecca Johnson, Marsha Booth, Debra Colbert, Joanne Mosca and Melanie Moss.

Harrup Represents Students

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"Both days went extremely well. I was very impressed with the Student Liaison meeting. It was the first time Board of Visitors members let the students do most of the talking and running of the meeting. I think that reflects a college-wide attitude change in board members and students. Our voice can be heard if we go through the proper channels.

Sharon Harrup, president of the student body, voiced her ideals concerning her newest responsibility as a non-voting member of the Board of Visitors. She was present at the board's table at all open sessions during the meetings on March 5 and 6 and had to remain nearby during the executive sessions so that she could join the board at the open meetings. "I also received all the handouts the Board members received—that was neat!"

"The Board asked me about the new separation of Student Activities Fees and IAA. I told them I was behind it 100 per cent because I felt it reflected the attitude of the entire campus toward the IAA. There is so much more participation and now it will be adequately funded."

Concerning fraternity housing—the IFC (Inter-Fraternity Council) accomplished a lot more than people thought. Students should commend Barry Driver and the IFC for their efforts. They gathered the information, worked hard, they really looked into the future. They projected that by 1983, 900 males will be on campus, showing a need for eight fraternities."

"Barry pushed for all the males on campus—independents as well as fraternities. He showed a great deal of perseverance. He attended all open sessions and gave his speech to the board without notes. Because of his work, I hope the housing situation will be resolved according to what the students want."

Fire Prevention Clinic Planned

By MARK KARL SEGAL
The Physical Plant, under the supervision of Melvin Moore, is planning a film on highrise fires and evacuation. The combination film and open seminar is slated for Wednesday, March 11 at 7:30 p.m. in the Commons room between Frazer and Curry dormitories. Fire officials from Farmville will be present to ask questions before and after the film.

One February 18th a clinic of the same nature was offered. Only two dozen students appeared. "I am hoping we can get a whole lot better turnout," stated Moore in a telephone interview last Friday. "We are also planning on showing the film in other dorms over the next two weeks," he stated in reference to the movie that pictures an entire high rise being engulfed in flames.

Student Fire Warden Donna Dix has also planned fire drills for dormitories this week. Fire drills in the academic buildings are also planned this semester.

But the clinics, seminars, fire drills and films can not have any practical purpose without the total cooperation of the students. Director of the physical plant Roy Hill, Jr. places fire prevention in the number one slot on his list of priorities. Two weeks ago he displayed his concern. "Every night I go home and worry about those students safety in the dormitories." But this safety can be whipped by panic in a case of uneducated students.

New Majors Available

By JACQUILINE BURTON
The interest of Longwood students in the study of philosophy is on the rise. Beginning August 1, 1981, the College—as one means of meeting the growing and changing needs of its students—will add philosophy to the list of those major disciplines currently offered.

The Department of English and Philosophy applied to the State Council of Higher Education in November of 1978 for authorization to offer an undergraduate degree program in philosophy. In January of 1981, a statement of readiness to begin a major's program was submitted; and on Wednesday, March 4, the Council convened to give final approval to the College's request. The new major is the result of the combined efforts of Dr. William Frank, Professor of English; Dr. John Peale, Associate Professor of Philosophy; Dr. Helen B. Savage, Associate Professor of

Longwood has offered a minor in philosophy since the spring semester of 1978. A minor in philosophy requires the completion of twenty-one hours of course work.

Of the twenty-eight students presently pursuing a minor in philosophy, ten have expressed an interest in continuing in the major's program. The major requirements for a Bachelor of Arts degree will bring about the addition of a number of new courses which will be listed in the 1981-82 college catalogue. These will include: Ancient History of Western Philosophy 210, Medieval and Renaissance History of Western Philosophy 211, Early Modern History of Western History 212, and Philosophy 213-History of Western Philosophy: Kant and the Nineteenth Century. These four courses will replace

Archeology Field School

From Public Affairs
"Anna's Ridge" in the Cumberland State Forest, where traces of human activity have lain undisturbed for thousands of years, was the site last summer of Longwood College's first Field School in Archeology.

The 13 members of that Field School, under the direction of Dr. James W. Jordan, uncovered projectile points, cutting blades, drills, awls, and pieces of pottery, as well as evidence of post holes and hard-packed earthen floors.

These discoveries, all carefully examined and catalogued, led to Dr. Jordan's theory that the area was used as an animal killing and butchering camp by archaic Indians on their seasonal journeys from the mountains to the coast.

The Archeology Field School at the Anna's Ridge site will be offered by Longwood College again this summer, with two major additions. There will be two sessions, running from June 1-July 3 and July 6-August 7, and students may enroll on either the undergraduate or graduate level.

The undergraduate course (Anthropology 495—Field Methods in Archeology) will develop in the student the skills necessary to excavate a prehistoric Indian site and to recognize and recover archeological artifacts. The site work consists of learning the techniques of excavation, mapping, soil analysis, the recovery, washing and analysis of prehistoric stone tools, and the interpretation of stratigraphy.

Special attention will be given to the integration of finds from the site into the present understanding of Virginia prehistory.

The graduate level course (Anthropology 595 — The Organization and Execution of Archeological Fieldwork) provides an opportunity for advanced students to serve as assistants to the Director of an ongoing excavation and to aid in the design of field strategy, intra-site sampling techniques, site mapping, and artifact and feature plotting and recording.

Each session of the field School carries six credits, graduate or undergraduate. The school meets Monday through Friday, from 7:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. during each five-week session. Transportation will be provided from Longwood to the dig site.

Students may register for the Summer Field School in Archeology during the period from March 2 to May 27. For additional information, visit or call Dr. Robert Lehman, director of the summer session, telephone 392-9256, or Dr. James W. Jordan, department of sociology and anthropology, telephone 392-9277.

Music Symposium

Features Nelhybel

From Public Affairs

This year's Contemporary Music Symposium at Longwood College, scheduled for March 10-12, will feature the accomplished musician and composer Václav Nelhybel.

During the three-day symposium, Nelhybel will give a lecture and conduct master classes and rehearsal session with Longwood's concert choir, Camerata Singers, and concert band.

The symposium will include with a concert of Nelhybel's music, including the premier performance of a new composition, as yet unnamed, for SSA choir, two flutes, two clarinets, horn oboe, bassoon, and percussion.

The concert is scheduled for 8 o'clock on Thursday evening, March 12, in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building. Performing will be the Longwood concert choir, concert band, Camerata Singers, and selected soloists. Nelhybel himself will be conducting. The public is cordially invited to attend the concert at no charge.

Nelhybel will lecture on Tuesday, March 10, at 1 p.m. The master classes (performers selected by audition) are scheduled for 9 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. on Wednesday, March 11.

Visitors are welcome at all symposium events, including the rehearsal sessions scheduled for 4:50 p.m. on Tuesday, 4 p.m. on Wednesday, and 1 p.m. on Thursday.

Nelhybel was born in Polanka, Czechoslovakia. He studied musicology at universities in Prague and in Fribourg, Switzerland, and composition and conducting at the Conservatory of Music in Prague.

Before coming to the U.S. in 1957, Nelhybel held several prestigious positions in Europe, including serving as musical director of Radio Free Europe in Munich, Germany. In this country, he has been active as composer, conductor, and lecturer at universities throughout the U.S. and Canada.

His first composition, String Quartet No. 1, was published in 1950. The list of his published works now totals some 200 compositions. Among the more recent works are the operas Everyman and The Station, premiered in 1977 and 1979 respectively, and Fables for All Time for Solos, Chorus and Orchestra, commissioned by the U.N. Celebration Committee for the 35th anniversary of the United Nations and premiered in October 1980.

Longwood's Contemporary Music Symposium is an annual event which brings well-known composers to the campus for working sessions with students. Visiting composers have included Daniel Pinkham, Samuel Adler, Ned Rorem, Vincent Persichetti, Norman Dello Joio, and Ross Lee Finney.

Atell As Toad The Mime

By SUSAN BUTLIN

Antoinette Atell, better known as "Toad the Mime" is presenting a free performance tonight in Jarnan Auditorium. Atell is more than just Toad and the Mime; she is a lecturer, teacher, choreographer, dancer, actress, writer, and musician.

She is definitely a professional. Toad was a regular on NBC-TV's Laugh-In and The Great American Laugh-Off in 1977. She has appeared in Funny Face with Red Skelton and has also worked with such comedians as Steve Martin and Chevy Chase. More recently, she has taught clowns of the Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey Circus in the artistry of mime.

Atell is known very well on the college circuit, with over 200 performances on college campuses across the country. She has an incredible ability to interact with her audience making them become part of her improvisations. This un-mime-like characteristic of interacting physically and verbally with the audience intensifies her customary routines of "trapped behind glass," robot man and marionette.

Atell first became interested in mime while attending Chapman College. She wanted an art form which could be understood no matter what nationality or language anyone spoke. Her career began on the streets of San Francisco, where you learn fast whether people like you or not.

Atell takes her routine from everyday life and particularly likes the college circuit because she can experiment with new material.

Antoinette Atell lets you escape from this reality and step into the reality of Toad the Mime.

IRC Presents AmasonTwins

By RONNIE BROWN

On March 12 the Amason Twins will be performing in the Gold Room. You probably have never heard of Floyd and Boyd Amason, but their musical talent and especially their humorous lyrics have labeled them as the "Smothers Brothers" of gospel music.

Floyd, who sings and plays bass fiddle, and Boyd, who sings and plays guitar, have been in the music scene since performing with "Sing Out South", which is an affiliate of "Up With People". After that they individually played in night clubs and coffeehouses on the East coast.

Boyd writes most of the songs and their individual musical backgrounds lend a versatile and unique approach to spread the Good News.

The Twins have played in numerous crusades and churches. They have been seen by over 40,000 servicemen and college students. Floyd and Boyd have not only appeared in eight countries, but they performed for 25,000 people at the Tennessee Baptist Youth Evangelism Conference at Vanderbilt University.

Now that you know who the Amason Twins are, I hope to see you at 8:00 p.m., admission is free.

Jim And Be Jae Captured Crowd

By LISA KOWALIK

Saturday night, Jim Ritchey and Bejae Fleming delighted an enthusiastic crowd in the coffeehouse with a three-hour folk concert.

The duo captured the crowd with their crafty, sharp guitar work and laidback style and performed a variety of music — from bluegrass reggae, to top 40 banjo tunes, to plaintive blues songs. They also performed bluegrass, which they described as "I wish I had not been born and I wish you had never either songs."

Jim and Bejae loosened up the crowd with jokes in between songs, many of which were directed toward the Dukesman of Yale in the audience. One Dukesman provided additional entertainment with a little dance, while the crowd enthusiastically cheered him on. Throughout the show, the crowd snapped their fingers and clapped their hands in tune to the songs.

Among the many original songs they sang were "Church Street Blues," which describes the sleazy, seamy side of Nashville and "Hardship Drag," — a song about the economy which "used to be funny but isn't any more."

In the latter part of the show, they sang the song which is their claim to fame "Tennessee Bottle", which was recorded by Kenny Rogers.

By JOE JOHNSON

Upon entering the passageway, your senses are stimulated by a vast array of objects — giant spiders crawling slowly toward a trail which is lined by papier-mache' rocks and overhanging vines. Lights filter through the surrounding rain forest mural while empty masks stare you into an awe-struck silence. Scenes from a Tarzan movie? No — the scene is straight from the Lancaster Library Art Gallery, where the Campus School is holding its Art Month Art Exhibit from March ninth through thirty-first.

The Art Exhibit, which was hung and arranged by six junior art education majors enrolled in the art education practicum at Longwood, is the sixth annual exhibit of its kind. The art education majors are being supervised and aided by Mrs. Jackie Wall, Art Director of the Campus School.

The show will display selected works from more than one-half of the 200 Campus School students, grades kindergarten through seven. It will feature a walk-in environment whose theme will be the fantastic rain forest. This is the first time such a perception-changing environment has been undertaken.

The junior art education majors who worked on the show are Crickett Cordes, Barbara Stent, Ann Maxey, Ellen Elinsky, Toni Smith, Debbie Gordon and Cindee Progar. Some of the art work being displayed resulted from classes taught by the art education majors. Mrs. Wall commented that the Campus School art program allows the soon-to-be teachers an exceptionally excellent opportunity to work with the children.

The Campus School students have created a diverse array of art work. Some of the more spectacular examples are the architectural designs for the 1990's, nature masks, papier-mache' rocks and boulders, spontaneous weaving on tree branches, box sculpture and plastic carving. Mrs. Wall said that she is trying to develop their five senses and how they can be related to an artistic medium. "You have to make them experience what they already know; then motivate them to re-visualize it in an artistic medium . . . visual awareness is what it's all about."

The exhibit is closed (locked), so anyone desiring to view it needs to stop at the front desk at the Library and request the key. Mrs. Wall is also planning a mini-exhibit at the First National Bank in Farmville some time in March.

$11,305.05 For Muscular Dystrophy

Dear Blue 'N' Whites,

This weekend Longwood College raised $11,305.05 for Muscular Dystrophy through the Superdance. I would like to thank the entire Longwood Community for working together to far surpass our goal of $6,100. I would especially like to thank the many dancers who hung in there, despite much pain, to complete the twenty hours. They did a fantastic job at gathering pledges which made their dancing especially worthwhile. The Steering Committee worked very hard both prior to and during the dance to make sure things ran smoothly. I can honestly say that every person who participated in the Superdance gave 110 per cent. I am excited to see that Longwood is composed of super people who are willing to give their all towards a single cause especially one as vital as the fight against M.D. We have much to be proud of! Thank you all for caring!

problems, stopping personality crashes, keeping the building straight, etc.—the list is infinite."

"I don't know if I could wholeheartedly recommend this job to others. The decision was and is tough—you have to be dedicated to others as well as to yourself. Being resident supervisor is not a great job, but it's not awful either. It's primarily up to the individual person to decide."

Even with all the responsibility the job of resident supervisor entails, Neil has remained active on campus. However, he says that he has not had the time to be as involved as he was before he became Resident Supervisor. He was the photographer for the Rotunda his freshman year and a member of Legislative Board. Neil was vice-chairman of the Student Government before he had to resign because of his job. He has been a resident assistant, a member of the Academics Policies Committee, and an active member of Judicial Board's restructuring committee.

"I like the changes I've seen on campus since my freshman year. There has been a definite improvement in the quality of the students being admitted now. Dorm life has greatly improved. I think a lot of people have very short memories. Sign in—sign out is a big thing now—but compared to my freshman year, it's nothing. We had very short visitation hours. Things aren't perfect, but they are improving."

Rotunda Supported

Mr. Edmonson:

I feel your comments to The Rotunda staff in last week's edition were out of order and completely uncalled for. I have seen The Rotunda grow and mature the last four years that I have attended Longwood College. The quality of the articles has improved tremendously during this time span. The Rotunda, as well as all other student organized activities on this campus, is designed to teach us many skills that will enhance our future careers through what is so often referred to as The Learning Process.

What kind of miraculous mental metamorphosis took place in your career that changed you from a student to a "professional artist?" You obviously have never heard of, or have any conception of what the learning process is. People, especially students, learn from making mistakes...even professionals. The attitude you conveyed to the students of this institution shows me that you really ought to consider re-evaluating your priorities. Your position here at Longwood is that of teacher first, and professional artist second. If you find that you strongly disagree with this point of view, you can take your professional exhibit and...well...take a professional tour; away from this institute of higher learning.

Most Sincerely,
Steve Miller

"The major thing I try to do with my job is to get people to respect one another. You can do anything you want as long as you don't infringe upon the rights of those around you."

This quote sums up for senior Neil Sullivan his attitude toward his work. The job he is referring to is Resident Supervisor of Main Cunningham, a position Neil has held for two years.

"If I didn't like what I was doing, I couldn't have done it. Money is secondary in this job—I do it for the satisfaction of helping people. Many people view the supervisor as an enforcer of rules and regulations. That is a small part of the overall job. The big part comes with solving Longwood Campus was the scene of student participation this week. The fraternity proposals presented to the Board of Visitors verified the interest and concern that the Board has for student's wishes. Even though no formal action has been taken concerning housing, the students involved can be proud of a position well stated. It is good to know that the student voice is not completely ignored on campus. By careful articulation, the students defended their rights for their organization with maturity. It is only reasonable that a situation can be best understood by the people most affected by it.

The other major accomplishment by campus participation was the Superdance. Longwood collected more money for Muscular Dystrophy than VCU or Tech percentage-wise. This success proves that the student body can be a very productive force on campus through such a constructive activity. Hopefully, this surge of student interest will grow to give the student body a more noticeable position on the campus.

"My biggest complaint is that everything is changing now that I'm graduating. I guess that is just the way it is working out. It has been a slow, gradual change with lots of people helping along the way. Things add up over the years and improvements occur."

A business administration major from Arlington, Neil is prepared for the job market jungle he faces after graduation in May. "Maybe I'll be a househusband—that would be nice, you know. JUST KIDDING! Seriously, I'm getting married in May. I had interviews with the telephone company and a couple of businesses. I also have letters and resumes everywhere—something will turn up. I'm the type of person who would like to run my own business some day. I've got experience at Radio Shack and the telephone company—and how do you know what you would like to do until you experience it?"

"I came to Longwood because my father recommended it to me—I wanted a small college. All schools have advantages and disadvantages. One of the advantages Longwood has is that we are small. We don't have the big-name faculty and equipment of large schools. HOWEVER—how many faculty at UVA know the names of their students? Profound, huh?"

"Also, the administration is slowly coming to realize that if students are given the responsibility, they will handle it. Students will act more like adults if they are treated like adults. However, the students must be willing to take the punishments and rewards of those responsibilities."

"Things here at Longwood, everything in life is what you make it. If you want it, you can get it—if you work for it."

Honor Projects Near Completion

By JOE JOHNSON

"It takes a tremendous amount of student initiative and an intense interest in independent research — maybe that's why nobody graduated from Longwood with honors last year," said Dr. Webber, speaking of the Longwood College Honors Program.

The Honors Program, a six credit course, was inaugurated by the College in 1930 to enable students to study intensively a subject of their choice. Under this plan, the student is directed in creative research by an instructor who has specialized in the field and who acts as his sponsor.

Dr. Flynn, Associate Professor of Art History and Chairman of the Honors committee, explained that there are numerous stages a paper must go through before it is finally accepted for Honors.

First, the student who should be a junior or senior with at least a 3.0 GPA in his major and a 2.7 overall GPA, must choose a subject area and a faculty sponsor. With the sponsor's help, the student then decides on a topic for research. Once this decision is made, the Honors proposal, a two- or three-page document briefly outlining the research and giving a list of basic references, must be written and submitted to the Honors Committee for approval. Upon approval of the paper, the student enrolls in Honors 498 (Honors Program) and begins the actual work on the paper.

The time spent on research usually lasts from one to two semesters with another semester devoted to completing the rough and final drafts of the paper and preparing for an oral examination on the work which is given by the Examining Committee. The Examining Committee consists of three persons who are specialists in the student's field or research. They administer an oral examination which is every bit as thorough as one given for a doctorate or masters degree. Or, as Dr. Webber put it, "They really grill you."

The final stage is the official approval of the paper by the Honors Committee and making copies of the paper which will be available in Lancaster Library.

This year there are four students working on Honors papers. They are all seniors and have chosen such subjects as varying as chickens and acrylic paints. They are all preparing for an oral examination which will be given some time this month or in April.

Cheryl Adkins, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Adkins, is doing her paper on The Survival of Salmonella Typhimurium in Whole Chickens Cooked in a Slow Cooker. Her adviser is Professor E. J. McCreary from the Home Economics Department and her Honors representative is Dr. P. Barber.

Cheryl, a native of Salisbury, Maryland, is majoring in home economics in which she hopes to earn a masters degree or possibly her doctoral degree. Cheryl is currently in the experimental stage of her research. She is spreading the culture of salmonella over an uncooked chicken, cooking the chicken (with thermometer to accurately gauge temperature) and taking samples of it to check for growth of the organism. So far there has been no growth.

Cheryl has her oral examination date set on April 24, 1981. She is anxious to "get it over with" but said that overall it was a "good experience." "A lot of problems pop up along the way, but I've learned a lot about general experimental and research techniques," she concluded.

Kim Hannon, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hannon, is doing her paper on Advertising Within the Accounting Profession. Her adviser is Mr. Irby from the Business Department, and her Honors representative is Dr. R. Webber.

Kim, a native of McLean, Virginia, is majoring in business and has a minor in economics. Her proposal was approved May 11, 1980, and she has been researching the advertising (or lack of advertising) in the accounting profession ever since. She began by sending out 150 questionnaires to certified public accountants (CPA's) around Virginia. Ninety questionnaires were returned, which she assures is a good return percentage. Out of these ninety, only five accountants advertised. Kim is currently looking into the reasons behind this lack of advertising. She feels that there are two basic factors behind the phenomenon. One is that many accountants simply feel it is unprofessional. Second, is the fact that accountants already have enough business and they do not need to waste overhead on useless advertising.

Kim plans to have her oral examination some time near the end of March or the beginning of April. Speaking of the Honors Program, she said, "It's one thing to do a term paper and another thing altogether to do an Honors paper because you can't go to a book — it's real research."

Kelly Sanderson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Keith Sanderson, is doing her paper on the Diffusion Rates of Molecules Across the Gel. Her adviser is Dr. P. Barber from the Science Department and her Honors representative is Dr. R. Webber. Kelly, a resident of Winchester, Virginia, is majoring in chemistry and minoring in math. She plans to attend Iowa State University for graduate work and a doctorate in chemistry.

Kelly is currently measuring the rate of diffusion of ions through a gel using various instruments supplied by the Science Department. Kelly pointed out that this research has never been attempted before. She said she got her idea from Robin Young who has done work with gel and crystal diffusion rates. "Originally," Kelly said, "this was just going to be a special project... but this paper gives me an opportunity to do research and gain valuable experience recording it in a documentary form." Kelly has her oral examination on April 24, 1981.

Pamela, a resident of Richmond, Virginia, is an art history major. She plans to do her graduate work at Hofstra University in Long Island. She has won two scholarships (History Department Scholarship and the Hargrett Scholarship) in this field already.

Pamela is researching the rise of acrylic paints in America by studying the lines and works of Lue Osborne and Cordray Simmons. She explained that they worked primarily in the 1930's and recorded scenes and life in America as they saw it. Questioning the use of oils, which was the "artistic" medium at that time, they developed a unique style which would not limit them as oils did. They started experimenting with synthetic resins such as Vinylite and Lucite, which laid the groundwork for the development of acrylics.

Pamela has given a presentation at the South Eastern College Art Conference in Alabama and has also given a paper at the Sully Dinner at Longwood College this fall. Her oral examination will be held on March 16, 1981.

The Thrill Of Victory

By TAMARA NASH

Without a doubt, 1981 Superdance for Muscular Dystrophy was a tremendous success due to all the support of Longwood College.

At 7:00 Friday evening 141 dancers hit the floor of the lower dining hall with every step of dance ever done on a dance floor. Every hour, the dancers had a 10 minute break which provided them with snacks, drinks, and a minute to catch their breath. At 1 a.m., they got their first meal break — a half hour to enjoy a pizza and a beer. Breakfast was served at 8 a.m. as the dancers feasted on cereal, doughnuts, and orange juice and their last meal was at 11:50 a.m. They enjoyed lunch compliments of Hardee's. Despite their fatigue, at least they didn't go hungry.

Music was provided by M&M Productions through 9 p.m. From 9-1 a.m. a mixer open to the student body was held with more music from Mike and Mitch and featuring the 7-14's. A dollar admission was charged and this money also went to the M.D. cause. Throughout the rest of the night, Pi Kappa Phi, SPE, AXP, Mike Lafoon, and Kurt Peters were responsible for providing the tunes for the dancers to move by. At 7:20 a.m. Saturday morning, Dr. Bobbitt gave a "disco break" and taught the dancers some group dances. The Dance Company also stopped by Saturday and provided the dancers with some dancing of another type. Dallas Bradbury was the announcer for the entire 20 hours.

Each dancer was there because they had gotten sponsors for each hour they danced with the money going to M.D. The top three money-raising couples were awarded prizes for their efforts and their efforts were highly commendable. Jane Covington and David Mitchell were the top money raisers, raising over $950. They received 10-speed bikes. Nancy Willard and Billy Greer were second place with over $650. Their prizes were portable AM-FM radios. Third place went to Randy Johnson and Valerie Turner who raised nearly $550 and received cameras. But no one's work is to be forgotten because all these dancers did themselves, and Longwood College, proud by raising $11,300. The amount is staggering as is the dedication and stamina of these dancers.

Besides the dancers and the music makers, you cannot neglect the people responsible for the organization of the Superdance. Sponsored by the Student Union, Debra Spencer served as chairman. Karen Heizer was Registration Chairman. Food Co-chairmen were Sherry Carmony and Joyce Anderson and Decorating Chairman was Jane Froemel. There is no way these ladies can be complimented more than the acknowledgement of the Superdance's huge success.

Because of this success, the Superdance will return next year but the lasting glow of this year's Superdance will last on and on.

Wheeler Exercises

By CARY BELL

Side...two...three...four... are the familiar chants coming from the Wheeler parlor on Tuesday and Thursday nights between 8:30 and 9:30. An exercise hour is going on to help students "tone-up" and "slim-down" for the coming spring and summertime months. "The girls are getting a chance to get to know one another better," says Mrs. Acers, head resident, "they get together to talk and exercise with an extra push behind them."

The exercise hour was started this semester with an overwhelming attendance. In January, 50 students signed up. Now about 40 participate every week. Not only are the Wheeler residents involved, but, by word-of-mouth, students from all over campus participate. So far, the attendance has been all female, anyone is welcome.

Lisa Polen, a resident of Wheeler, is the organizer of the exercise hour. She also keeps the morale high! During the hour anyone is free to make suggestions. Routine exercises such as jumping jacks, sit-ups and stretches are done to background music. The students add a variety with their own ideas. One different twist that has recently been tried is yoga.

A typical exercise session begins with warm ups and stretches. Lisa then begins a more structured routine. Here, the students are free to make their own suggestions. The group ends by running around campus for about seven minutes. Afterwards, unsweetened drinks are served.

So, if you are looking for a positive and motivating way to lose that winterworn flab, consider the exercise group in Wheeler dormitory. Not only will you feel better about yourself, but you'll look great in time for bikini weather that is rapidly approaching!!

Movie Review

By JOE JOHNSON

Who done it? The overzealous film producer who'd stop at nothing for success, the adulterous director husband who didn't need a mental patient hampering his love life, or maybe the buxom Hollywood babe whose epitaph will someday read, "Screw Scotland Yard"? Who knows? Miss Maple (Angela Lansbury) does and she leads to viewer on a merry chase to discover the murderer's identity in Guy Hamilton's filming of Agatha Christie's, "The Mirror Crack'd."

As all Agatha Christie fans know, Miss Maple is a top-notch sleuth residing in a quaint rustic village somewhere in England (preferably near a murder). Her tools of detection are her razor sharp senses and her knowledge of local gossip which she prefers to call "a hearty interest in human nature." These, along with her sidekick — nephew, Inspector Craddock (Edward Fox), allow her to solve problems which baffle other intellects.

The audience is given a chance to solve the puzzle along with Miss Maple. The clues are all there — the picture on the wall, the spilled drink, the fake notes and yes...the sinister phone calls to the producer and the arsenic in the coffee. Although the clues don't do much good, it's kind of fun matching wits with his super sleuth.

In "The Mirror Crack'd" Elizabeth Taylor makes her comeback debut as an actress making her comeback debut and she does it pretty darn good...for an actress making her comeback debut. Tony Curtis plays a go-get-'em Hollywood producer who manages to win the hatred of the local Vicar by announcing that the leading ladies are chosen by whomever they sleep with. Rock Hudson is the distraught director who is trying to film Mary, Queen of Scots, with two actresses who could give a shark an identity crisis.

As can be expected, the plot takes enough twists and turns to make even Charo look indecent. The final tally on bodies (dead ones, that is) runs to three, which is about average for an Agatha Christie mystery. The ending, however, dwindles into sickening sentiment. Elizabeth Taylor is laid out like some kind of latter day Socrates and Rock Hudson actually (you better sit down for this) cries. But, overall, the movie is highly enjoyable. I just wish I'd have figured it out before Miss Maple did.

Baseball: Best Start Ever; 4-0 Mark In One Week

From Sports Info

Longwood baseball coach Buddy Bolding predicted this year's team could be his best and after four wins in four games the Lancer baseball team is bearing out its coach's predictions.

Longwood swept Guilford Monday 6-2, 3-2, beat North Carolina Wesleyan 11-7 in 10 innings Friday and then battered St. Paul's 31-3 Sunday to run its record to 4-0, the best start in Longwood's four-year baseball history.

The Lancers opened their home slate Monday hosting Virginia Wesleyan for a pair of contests and will take a break until Saturday when University of District of Columbia visits. Sunday, West Virginia Tech pays a visit for two contests.

"We have made some mistakes so far, but we're learning," said Bolding. "We have come through in the clutch, getting the key hits and making the key plays. Several of the teams we have beaten had good seasons a year ago, so we feel good about things right now."

While Sunday's triumph over St. Paul's was a laugher Longwood had to play well to take tough wins in its first three games.

Outstanding pitching by veterans Davis Mitchell and Richard Vaught plus timely hitting and defense by leftfielder Bruce Morgan helped Longwood sweep a talented Guilford team. Mitchell and Vaught pitched complete games. In the opener Mitchell allowed eight hits, no walks and struck out five. Vaught came back with a seven-hitter in the nightcap, walking one and fanning seven.

Morgan had a two-run homer in the opener and two sensational diving catches in left field. One of Morgan's defensive gems came in the fifth inning when Guilford had runners on second and third. According to Bolding, Morgan's catch prevented a sure triple and two Guilford runs.

Sonny Bolton had two hits and three RBI's for the day with a triple.

Against NC Wesleyan, Longwood had to rally from a 7-4 deficit in the top of the ninth to send the game into extra innings. Four more Lancers crossed the plate in the top of the 10th to ice the victory.

Second baseman David Rumburg and rightfielder Jim Thacker were the big guns for Longwood. Rumburg had a two-run homer in the ninth and a two-run single in the 10th while Thacker had three RBI's with a double and a triple. Thacker also drove in two runs in the 10th.

Morgan, a junior, hit his second homer in three games and drove in two runs as Longwood pounded out 11 hits off five Wesleyan pitchers. Donnie Mowbray pitched well in relief and David Mitchell came on in the ninth to pick up his second win of the season.

The Lancers got grand slam homers from Mitchell and Eddie Burnette while compiling 22 hits against St. Paul's Sunday. Bolton had three hits and four RBI's, Tim Lowery had a homer and two RBI's and John Crosby stole five bases. Longwood also benefitted from 13 St. Paul's errors.

Bill Catron and Don Cahoon combined to limit St. Paul's to five hits.

Eckel Named Co-player Of Year Lady Lancers End Season 12-16

From Sports Info

Longwood sophomore Cindy Eckel (S. PLAINFIELD, NJ), one of the leading scorers and rebounders in the conference, has been named co-Player of the Year along with Brenda Gunsallus of Liberty Baptist in VAAIAW Division II for 1980-81. Eckel, who was also voted to the 10-player All-State team for Div. II, received her awards Saturday night at the conclusion of the VAAIAW Div. II State Basketball Tournament.

Eckel averaged 15.4 points and 7.9 rebounds for Longwood and played some of her best basketball against league foes. The 5-10 forward had 24 points against George Mason, 33 ag. Richmond, 17 points and 11 rebounds ag. VCU, 23 points and 11 rebounds ag. William & Mary and 21 points in the Lady Lancers' second meeting with VCU.

Eckel tied the school record for field goals in a game (15) in her 33-point effort against Richmond.

"We're very proud of Cindy," said Longwood coach Carolyn Hodges. "She did so many things for us during the past season. It's quite an honor to be chosen Player of the Year when we had so many top notch players in the league."

Lady Lancers Set Records

Longwood dropped its last game of the season last Tuesday, a 65-50 defeat at the hands of eventual state champ VCU (72-70 winner over William & Mary Saturday night) ending the season at 12-16. Despite a disappointing second half of the season, Longwood players set several records along the way.

In addition to Eckel's field goal record, sophomore Robyn Goff (WARRENTON) set a new season record for field goal percentage (.520), senior Brenda Fettrow (INDIAN HARBOUR, FL.) joined the 1,000 point club (1,117 points) and the team set a new single game scoring mark in a 97-44 win over St. Mary's. Robin Hungate (VINTON) made a record 25 straight FT's.

Lady Lancer Golfers Open Season

From Sports Info

Longwood's women's golf team, which has already qualified for the AIAW Division II National Tournament, will open its spring season Friday and Saturday, hosting the Longwood Invitational.

Stated for Longwood Golf Course, the Invitational will include women's teams from Wake Forest, North Carolina State, William & Mary, James Madison, Mary Washington, and Meredith, in addition to Longwood.

Wake Forest, a powerful Division I team, is the reigning state champ in North Carolina, while William and Mary is the current Virginia champ. Longwood finished third in the VAAW State Tournament in October while James Madison was second.

The Longwood Invitational, which is held each fall and spring, includes 36 holes of play. Friday, the teams will tee off at 12:00 and Saturday at 9:00.

Based on its second place finish in the AIAW Region 2 Division II tournament in October, Longwood has already qualified for the AIAW Division II National Tournament, to be held June 17-20 at Beaver Hills Country Club in Cedar Falls, Iowa. Northern Iowa is host for the first-ever Division II national tournament. William & Mary, which won the Region 2 tournament, will also represent Virginia in the nationals.

Heading into the spring season, Longwood will be led by its top four golfers from the fall: sophomore Robin Andrews (Woodlawn), freshman Emily Fletcher (Prince George), senior Kay Smith (Covington) and sophomore Sharon Gilmore (Patchogue, N.Y.). Freshmen Cheryl Dufort (Waterford, N.Y.) and Susan Morgan (Massapequa, N.Y.) also return.

Smith won the one-day State Open Tournament with a 76 in the fall while Andrews and Fletcher also had some outstanding performances. Andrews tied for second place in the Duke Invitational with a 78 and beat Fletcher in a playoff to win the Mary Baldwin Invitational. Fletcher had a 73 (Longwood best for one round) in the third round of the Longwood Fall Invitational.

"I feel good about our prospects for the spring season," said Longwood coach Barbara Smith. "The players are excited about going to nationals and we should benefit from an organized weight training program that's been going on since fall."

Gymnasts Seeded First For Regional Competition

By LISA SPENCER

Seeded number one in a field of six teams, Longwood will travel to Western Carolina Friday for the AIAW Division II, Region II Gymnastics Championships. Aside from the host team Western Carolina, Longwood will be facing Radford, William & Mary, East Carolina, and Furman in a bid for its first regional title ever.

Expected to lead the Lady Lancers as they try for a national berth is freshman all-around Monica Chandler (Sterling). Monica finished ahead of all other Division II all-around competitors in the recent VAAW Championships, while placing in three of four events. She, along with sophomore Sharon Pillow (Richmond), was named to the State All-Championship team.

Longwood coach Ruth Budd expects a good showing from her team Friday and knows that they have the ability to take the title.

"We shouldn't have too much trouble in regionals if we keep doing as well as we have been all season," Budd commented. "Our biggest competitors will be Radford and defending regional champions William & Mary, but we can beat them if we have a good meet."

Coach Budd emphasized that a win at regionals will give the team an automatic berth in the upcoming national championships which will be held April 3-4 at William and Mary.

"I feel like we can have a good showing at nationals. We have a good team, and they keep getting better with every competition," complimented Budd.

Farrar Sets Record Named Player Of The Week

From Sports Info

Freshman Bryan Farrar (Newport News) finished first in two classes to claim Reserve High Point Rider honors in a recent intercollegiate horse show at Virginia, and for his efforts, Farrar has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period February 27-March 6.

The lone male on Longwood's equestrian team, Farrar turned in the top showing in Lancer history when he took first in novice over fences and novice on the flat. His performance led Longwood to a 23-point outing and a tie with Randolph-Macon Woman's College for Reserve High Point College.

"This is the first time a member of the riding team has won both classes," said coach Mary Whitlock. "It's quite an honor."

A graduate of Hampton Rhoads Academy, Bryan participated in football playing tailback and safety. He won numerous equitation honors including: 1979 Peninsula Horse Show Association champ in junior and equitation over fences classes, working hunter champ in Winter Schooling Shows and high point equitation rider in the Newport News-Hampton Association.

Bryan, who would like to train horses following graduation, is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Howard A. Farrar of Newport News.

Sports Profile

By MARK KARL SEGAL

There are two kinds of athletes in the eyes of the spectator: winners and losers. Sitting in the bleachers watching the Longwood wrestlers win only three matches this year didn't appear too appealing. What is not realized is that our wrestlers are not recruited, they are not given scholarships, and they are wrestling for an under-funded young program coached by junior college coach Steve Nelson. Nelson compiled nationally ranked teams while at Chowan.

But here he hasn't done so well. "He has changed the program, but he has to change his philosophy a little bit. This is a small program and he has to treat it as such," tells Daniel Joseph Richard. "Next year he is totally changing the program. It hit him that he wasn't at Chowan anymore with all of those monsters," said the 20-year-old wrestler.

Danny and the rest of Longwood's wrestlers really weren't ready for Nelson to come into the program. The wrestlers here represent a different class of athletics. They work real hard but have a difficult time putting together wins against teams of gladiators that are making a life out of wrestling.

Danny was born in the Ryukun Islands at Okinawa. His father works for the U.S. Government. He moved to Falls Church, Va., where he attended Falls Church High School. He wrestled and played football for four years. When he came to college he had no idea he would wrestle. But Longwood had a young team three years ago when he was a freshman. So young in fact they were still in the organizational phases of becoming a team. So Danny went out for the team and wrestled at 167 pounds. The team won one match that year and Danny had a 5-10 record. Not so bad for someone who had no idea he would ever wrestle collegiately. Last year he didn't wrestle at all. This year he returned under a new coach and completed a 4-4 record and the team won more matches than all previous teams combined.

Next year will be Danny's last. After graduation he will go into Health and Physical Education. But next year will be a real proving ground to him. Because Coach Nelson has been recruiting some excellent junior college prospects including a massive heavyweight, "next year Coach Nelson is planning on at least ten wins," he brags.

Ten wins and a big season should push Danny to his limits. This year he suffered a bruised shoulder and some ankle injuries but next year he plans on developing a winning personality under Nelson's regimentation.

"He (Nelson) has psyched me up a lot for next year. I'll be wrestling 167 again but I think I'll have a lot more incentive to work harder. There will be 24 guys going out. These junior college guys will want to wrestle. This is going to give us a really confident team."

Danny has developed himself into the sort of person that can compete in the Collegiate ranks. This is not easy if you had no idea you were going to compete past the high school level.

Not only did Danny help start the wrestling team here, but he is also a founding father of Alpha Chi Rho social fraternity.

His accomplishments at Longwood will benefit him for life but the confidence he has received through the wrestling program will not only benefit him, but the wrestling program in the future. "Coach Nelson's confidence flows into me — I could really feel that this year," he said. And this confidence is more than something that helps you stomp your mat mates' face in — it is something that can be applied to all aspects of life.

assassins. The game will start this Friday at 12:00. The rules of the game are as follows:

1. Each person must have rubber tip darts.
2. Each person must have a 3x5 index card with a photostatic copy of your ID stapled or taped to your card. The card must also have the following information: complete physical description, dorm, room, and phone number.
3. You can only shoot the person whose card you have or your assassin in self defense.
4. No more than one witness may be present at the shooting.
5. If your target lives in the same dorm as you, he cannot be liquidated in that dorm.
6. All victims must report their death to the secretaries.
7. If you shoot your assassin it must be immediately reported to the secretaries so a new one can be assigned.
8. All the victims must be shot in the upper torso, excluding the arms.

The first game of Killer lasted two weeks. There were 35 people still alive out of the 70 people that started playing the game. The game was stopped because of a slight complication. The complication was that everyone knew who was after who. In the next game it would be appreciated if everyone would be quiet about who their victim is. Keep in mind a true assassin surely would not let a number of people know who he was after, and this same principle should also be applied to the game Killer.

If anyone is interested in playing Killer and will not be able to attend the meeting on Thursday contact David Gott, Nancy Morton, or Sandy Northedge.

Service Awards Given

By JODI KERSEY

"The purpose of the Service Awards Program is to bring honor and respect to all employees," said Mr. Thomas Baynham. Baynham, Director of Employee Relations, explained the importance of a Service Awards Program like the one which was held Thursday, March 12, in Jarman Auditorium. "The Awards Service creates a common ground for all employees, faculty and staff, to receive recognition for their work," continued Baynham.

Mrs. Harriett Overstreet, a member of the Board of Visitors, presented 276 people with awards. Longwood certificates and pins were given according to the number of years an employee has worked for the college. State certificates and pins were given for a combination of service. Ten employees received both Longwood and state awards. Baynham announced the "queen" of the Service Awards Program as Eleanor White, who has been an employee at Evelyn Coleman, Secretary to the President, received a thirty year pin at the service.

Longwood for thirty-five years.

This Awards Program has been available with the state for about four years and this will now become an annual event at Longwood. Mr. Baynham said he felt that the greatest value of the program is that it is such an effective morale booster among the employees. Next year, there will be approximately 62 awards given.

Bash's "Alienation" Halted

By JOE JOHNSON

Longwood officials announced last Friday that the contract of Dr. Ron Bash, head basketball coach and Men's Athletic Director, will not be renewed for the coming year.

Ron Bash is the architect of the men's basketball program and recruiting genius who pulled the Longwood College men's basketball team out of obscurity and into the limelight of the Division III Final Four championship in less than three years. The team has advanced to Division III this past season and finished with a remarkable 19-9 record which gives Bash a final record of 66-20 at Longwood.

The reasons behind the firing are still unclear. "We have come a long way very quickly in our men's basketball program; however, Dr. Bash's continual alienations of others has been a problem that we have been unable to resolve," said Dr. T.C. Dalton, Administrative Assistant to the President on Friday in a news release. When asked what specific situation Bash's "alienation" referred to, officials at Longwood refused to comment.

Many of the Longwood basketball players feel that there is a definite clash between the male and female athletic programs concerning which one should get top priority. Another possibility is Bash's recruiting practices which have caused many colleges to label the Lancer ball club the "Outlaw team".

When Dr. Bash was asked to comment on his dismissal, he replied, "it was a shock to me." He would not elaborate on the details surrounding his firing, but said, "A significant statement will be coming in the near future."

"We intend to commence a national search for a head basketball coach immediately," said Dr. Dalton, "and hope to name the next basketball coach by the end of April. In the meanwhile, Assistant Coach Martin Schoepfer will serve as interim coach." Martin Schoepfer, a former professional basketball player was most valuable player in his senior year at Boston University, where he first met Ron Bash. Speaking of Bash's dismissal, Mr. Schoepfer said, "I feel very badly. We work very well together...what the effect will be on the team...only time will tell."

In an attempt to lessen the impact of Bash's firing, Mr. Schoepfer has met with a number of the Lancer ball players individually. "A lot of these guys are coming in here after hearing all kinds of wild rumors...they just don't know what to think...It's an unfortunate circumstance, but as a group we'll improve over the rough spots."

However, Ron Bash does not hold to the same view. "It's a setback for the program," he said. "The general thought around here is that the program will be de-emphasized. Over 60 per cent of the players on the team have requested to transfer. They have asked me to make phone calls for them."

At least one Longwood basketball player thinks the program will remain the same. "I think losing Ron Bash is a setback...no doubt about it...But we still have the same talent we always did and we still want to win just as much...I'm looking for a good season next year," said

Darrell Jenkins, guard for the Lancer ball club. Ron Orr, forward for the team, is not so optimistic. "I was really shocked when I heard the news...I don't honestly think we can have as good a season without Ron Bash next year. I just don't understand why they'd fire a coach like Bash...he was a winner."

Ron Bash, a native of Trenton, New Jersey, holds a masters and doctorate in education from Boston University. He has an overall coaching record of 146-70 and helped Stony Brook, New York (his last coaching position before coming to Longwood) turn their program into a Division III power. "Kids want to win and they want to play for winners," said Bash.

Dr. T.C. Dalton does not agree with Bash, saying in a news release on Friday, "In evaluating the total program, we feel that some dimensions are more important than the won-loss record."

One of the other dimensions may be Bash's interaction with the basketball players themselves. "As far as Ron Bash's knowledge of the game—methods and techniques for winning—he is the best. But as far as his dealings with the players, it's do it my way or hit the highway. When Bash tells players to come talk to him about something they may not see eye-to-eye on, it doesn't mean he'll change his mind. His dealings with the club members are strictly business," said Walter Taylor, who quit the team after his first semester of playing varsity ball. And so the Longwood basketball team anxiously awaits word on a new coach and the reasons for firing the old one.

Greenwood Elected President

Janet Daly Greenwood, of Cincinnati, was named Longwood College's first woman president today by action of the college's board of visitors. The announcement of Dr. Greenwood's selection was made today by board of visitors rector Eric Robinson.

The four finalists for the presidency of the college, selected by a search committee of the board from over 100 applicants, have been on the Longwood campus for two days for interviews with the board of visitors, and representatives of the faculty, administration, and students of the college.

Dr. Greenwood is the first woman to hold Longwood's top administrative post in the 142-year history of the institution.

Since 1977, Dr. Greenwood has been vice provost for student affairs at the University of Cincinnati. Her areas of responsibility there included information processing, health services, student counseling and development, residence hall life, and food services.

She has also taught on both the graduate and undergraduate levels while holding this administrative post.

A native of Goldsboro, North Carolina, Dr. Greenwood holds the B.S. degree in English and psychology and the M.Ed. in counseling from East Carolina University. In 1972, she received the Ph. D. degree in counselor education, higher education administration, and student personnel from Florida State University.

In addition, she has studied at North Carolina State University, the University of London, and is a 1978 graduate of Harvard University's Institute for Educational Management.

Dr. Greenwood began her career as a teacher, counselor and administrator in the public schools of North Carolina. She later spent four years at Rutgers University in New Jersey, serving as assistant director of counseling and placement services, lecturer, and consultant to the vice president for student services.

She is the author or editor of numerous books, papers, and articles, dealing primarily with educational leadership and change, and has conducted workshops and professional presentations throughout the country.

Her civic activities have included service to the Cincinnati Human Relations Commission Committee for Women and Parents Without Partners.

Dr. Greenwood is 38 years old, married, and has a nine year old son.

Scholarships Announced

By BRENDA COLEMAN

Nominations and applications are now being accepted for the 1981 Elizabeth Burger Jackson Scholarship and the Geist Scholarships. Geist annually awards these scholarships to deserving students each spring at the Honors Council Awards Ceremony. All three scholarships are based upon academic standing and financial need exhibited by the students.

The Elizabeth Burger Jackson Scholarship was established by Mrs. Elizabeth B. Jackson, a former science department faculty member, in a trust fund. This scholarship will be chosen from nominations made by the individual academic departments. The student must be a rising senior with a 3.0 or better GPA and will be awarded according to the student's contributions to the college community. The award totals $300.

There are now two Geist scholarships to be given to a rising sophomore and a rising junior. Students must apply for these scholarships on applications which are available in the Rotunda. The criteria for the award include a 3.0 GPA, financial need, and contributions to the college. All eligible rising sophomores and juniors are urged to apply now. The scholarships are $200 each.

Your Turn

Chi Is Commended

Dear Editor,

I want to publically thank CHI for its development of the symposium held March 9, 10, and 11. As a presenter, I was impressed with the organization and the reception. Most importantly, I was impressed with the topics and their importance to the student body. CHI obviously does have concern for Longwood and for the students individually.

My personal thanks for being allowed to be part of the symposium.

Jennings G. Cox

Anti-Killer

Dear Editor:

Murder and assassination are ugly words given their character by the deeds they represent. I was astonished to learn through your paper that such words and deeds are considered a fit subject for recreation. I refuse to believe that Farmville and Longwood College are so lacking in recreational opportunities that students can only amuse themselves by hunting down and destroying other students.

Ten to fifteen years ago college campuses across the nation were centers of protest over what the students considered to be a wanton and senseless waste of human life in Viet Nam. Now it seems that our college campuses are to become training grounds for assassins. Our values have indeed changed.

If every human being valued the life of others equally with his own, six million human beings would not have died in Nazi Germany, there would not have been any Viet Nam atrocities, and there would not be a killer game on the campus of Longwood College.

Sincerely
Milo D. Walker

Good Luck Freshmen

Ring Information

To the Class of '83—

Since being chosen in October, the Ring committee has been working steadily on plans for ring ordering, ceremony and dance.

The company the rings will be ordered from is Jasten's. The company representative, Bill Stephens, has been working with the committee to set up dates for ordering and delivery. The dates for ordering rings will be April 13, 14, and 15, from 10:00 a.m.-6 p.m. A down payment will be required but the full price will not have to be paid. A price list should be available at the sophomore class meeting this Thursday at 7:00. Also, the ring committee will answer any questions you may have.

The ring ceremony will be in September. Rings will be delivered the day before and paid for then.

The ring dance has been scheduled for November. The same format as in previous years will be used.

Please come to the sophomore meeting to learn more about ordering your college ring. Male students are urged to come and find out about a new gold alloy which can decrease the price of their rings as well as the price of the girls' rings.

Thank you,
Lisa Swackhammer
Chairman, Ring Committee

Be Responsible

Dear Student Body:

Stealing and falsification of records have become increasingly important issues on campus this semester. It has almost become a national pastime on this campus to steal another's belongings and trying to get into the Dining Hall without a proper ID card is a daily occurrence. If students would stop and think, these honor code-college regulation offenses would be lessened. Lock up personal belongings if you want to keep those personal belongings. Do not put items in the book drops outside the Dining Hall if they are valuable. Do not leave your ID card lying around so that someone can pick it up to use it. And do not try to use a false identification card to get into the Dining Hall. These are judicial board offenses and will be handled accordingly. We are adults and will be rewarded and punished for our actions. If you are "responsible" enough to steal another's belongings, you are responsible enough to take the consequences.

Respectfully submitted,

Brenda Coleman
Chairman of Judicial Board

Stress, Suicide and Sexuality were the topics of this year's CHI Symposium, March 9, 10 and 11 in Jeffers Auditorium. The summary of each session is explained below.

STRESS

By MARK KARL SEGAL

"Stress makes us function," began Dr. Jennings Cox of the Longwood Counseling Services. "There are physical reactions to environmental stress. External pressures create internal reactions that motivate you to perform."

Dr. Cox interrelated the factors of stress to those of the college student. For instance, watching TV when you should be studying for a test is a way of misplacing stress. You could have coped with the stress in a more constructive way.

Fifty to seventy per cent of people visiting a doctor for the first time exhibit some sort of stress related problem. Stress can actually start some physical illnesses and can hinder others. Such as heart disease, high blood pressure and ulcers. Many of the pains experienced are referred to as psycho-genic—or pain without a basis.

"It's a simplistic thing to get yourself out of a situation. People don't realize that they will live regardless of the stress situation."

He went on to say that stress is really not brought on by external factors; it is the result of the human's reaction to a given situation. He warned that severe stress can move into depression. This can cause suicide because the rational thought processes don't flow at this point.

Cox warned against the dangers of using drugs to cope with stress. "Valium is prescribed for stress. But it creates a dependency. It really doesn't relax the victim anyway. Drugs can do good in some cases but they really only put off the symptoms not solve them."

The only question asked during the entire seminar was: "What about kids that smoke dope?" Cox said, "It puts off stress like any other drug and you can pay for it later."

Other more therapeutic techniques for dealing with stress were presented.

(2) Assertiveness. Many people work themselves into stress situations by not being able to say no. This is packing on additional stress factors. Learning to say "no" is the solution.

(3) Nutrition and Exercise. Eat regularly and exercise strenuously for at least ½ hour daily. The healthy working body has a way of productively absorbing stress.

(4) The last technique is Recreation and Escaping. You can't exactly run away from stress but perhaps leaving the source for a while can provide some insight into the problem. You can't solve your problems anyway when you are under great stress.

Suicide

By JOE JOHNSON

"One day an acquaintance of mine, who seemed as well adjusted as any of us, stopped in the middle of her spring cleaning, got in her automobile and drove to a store. Once there she bought a bottle of Drano and a gun. She drove to a wooded area, drank the Drano, and shot herself," said Dr. Mary G. Cristo, Associate Professor of Sociology and Anthropology at Longwood.

Dr. Cristo's lecture entitled "Factors Related to the Recent Rise in Suicide Rates Among Adolescents and Young Adults" was presented in Jeffers Auditorium on March 10 as part of the CHI Symposium Lecture Series.

Dr. Cristo pointed out that suicide was the third major cause of death for young adults between the ages of 15 through 24. However, due to any number of factors, the statistical percentage may actually approach the second or first major cause of death. She briefly outlined some of these factors and how they affected the percentages.

One of the more interesting factors was that until recently all non-white suicide rates were lumped together into a single statistical percentage, so that black women with the lowest suicide rates were added together with Indians, who have the highest suicide rate. "As can be imagined, this mixture causes serious statistical complications for sociologists studying suicide rates," said Dr. Cristo.

Another factor which Dr. Cristo referred to as "the unforgivable sin" was the lumping of attempted suicides and completed suicides. "An attempted suicide is actually just an attempt to influence others' behavior by 'almost' dying, whereas completed suicide is death seeking behavior," said Dr. Cristo.

Dr. Cristo warned that there are many fictions concerning suicides. To dispell some of these, she quoted material from Schneidman and Hargrove's Facts and Fables About Suicide. "Fable: people who talk about suicide won't commit suicide. Fact: of any ten persons who kill themselves, eight have given definite warning of their suicidal intentions."

Dr. Cristo lists three main factors which affect the risk of suicide. The first factor is group integration which refers to the number of groups to which an individual is firmly attached. Dr. Cristo stated that group integration for the adolescent is decreasing due to the increased urbanization and moving rates of families.

Another important factor is a firm value system for the individual. A value system is a set of guidelines for individual behavior. Dr. Cristo said that young people are confronted with such a variety of lifestyles and values that they suffer from what Durkheim defines as anomie, which is a feeling of emptiness, boredom and meaninglessness due to one's inability to establish effective guidelines for behavior.

The third factor affecting risks of suicide is self-image. Self-image is whatever value you place on yourself as a member of society. Or as Cooley defined it, "Self-image is what you think others think of you." Dr. Cristo pointed out that self-image varies from person to person. What one person may view as excellent traits, another person may find petty or insignificant.

Dr. Cristo concluded her lecture by giving suggestions on how to prevent suicides. "One good way," said Dr. Cristo, "is to establish a support system of people; don't just rely on one person. Another way is to try to reduce abnormal stress by jogging or conscious relaxation exercises or whatever works best for you. Set reasonable goals for yourself and don't hesitate to seek counseling." She also added with a smile, "A sense of humor is almost vital to surviving...let me leave you with an old kind of tired joke about suicide. You know you're having a depressing day when you call the suicide hotline and they put you on hold."

Sexuality

By JACQUILINE BURTON

"Sexuality" was the subject of the third and concluding lecture in the CHI Symposium series given Wednesday, March 11, at 7 p.m. in Jeffers Auditorium. The talk was presented to an audience of more than 75 people—mostly students and faculty—by Dr. Joseph J. Horvat. Dr. Horvat is an instructor of psychology in the Department of Education.

In his lecture on sexuality, Dr. Horvat discussed the influence of physiological and psychological factors upon the development and continuance of the sex drive in humans and sub-humans, both male and female. In consideration of the physiological influences in human and sub-human males, Dr. Horvat said that the removal of sexual organs prior to sexual maturity produces and universal effect of those individuals never developing a sex drive. There is no difference in the effects resulting in the human and sub-human male when this occurs. However, a contrast is seen between the human and sub-human male when sexual organs are removed after sexual maturity. The mature sub-human male experiences a noticeable decline in sexual activity or no sexual drive at all after the removal of his organs. The human male on the other hand experiences no decline in sexual motivation at all.

Similarly, Dr. Horvat went on to say that sub-human females whose sexual organs were extracted prior to sexual maturity do not develop sexual drives, as in the case with their male counterparts. Human females on the other hand do develop sexual motivation even when their reproductive organs are removed before sexually mature. The same results in the human and sub-human male occur in the human and sub-human female when their sexual organs are removed after the individuals are sexually mature. The sub-human female experiences a marked decline in sexual responsiveness, while the human female experiences no loss of motivation. Therefore, Dr. Horvat concluded that while the sexuality of sub-humans is more greatly influenced by physiological factors, humans are more receptive to psychological factors.

Dr. Horvat also discussed the influence of society upon sexual attitudes. Human females are more controlled by psychological factors in this regard than human males tend to be. Biological needs and natural motivations are found to conflict with social requirements, but these social needs and acceptances are continually changing. The drastic differences between what was considered sexually attractive in the 19th century and what is now considered sexually attractive are evidence of this transition.

Dr. Horvat concluded with a discussion of problems as they relate to sexuality. Sexual problems are usually psychological rather than physiological in nature. The mind has an extraordinary amount of control over the biological aspects of the body. Males, in respect to problems with sexuality, are found to have a higher incidence of psychological disturbances than females.

Sound Gallery Presents Ross And Mason-Roller Line

By SHEILA GOLLHARDT

This Thursday, March 19, at 8:30 p.m., Sound Gallery will present a "Double Treat." Performing will be Allen Ross, a folk singer, who if you remember, was here last year for American Folk Culture Week and also performed one night last year with Jon Ims in Sound Gallery. Allen began performing music at age 16 in a typical high school rock group. He plays a 6-string acoustic guitar and harmonica and writes much of his own material.

Now for an additional treat! Longwood's own Dale Roller and Charlie Mason — recent graduates — better known as "Mason-Roller Line" will perform Thursday in the Sound Gallery. Charlie and Dale have, since last October 1980, been affiliated with the NECAA (a college entertainment organization). We are very proud of them and hope success keeps going their way. So come on in to the Sunshine rooms — The Red-White-Green rooms and see this "Double Treat." It will be a great night of a variety of music and excitement.

Admission is $1.00 to L.C. students with I.D. and $1.50 to their guests.

Coffeehouse To Feature Arne Bray

By SUSAN BUTLIN

The first concert after spring break will be performed by Arne Bray on April 4. The concert will take place in the Snack Bar at 8:00 p.m. and it is free.

Arne, sometimes referred to as the lone performer, is one man and one music — his. His music ranges from blues, 'rot-gut' country, beer-drinkin' ragtime, instrumental, light rock as well as other contemporary styles. A blend of each type plus a string of humorous songs and stories all deal out an Arne Bray lineup.

His expertise on the guitar and expressive voice combined with his accumulated experience of fifteen years makes Arne regarded by many as the steadiest, most consistent performer on the college circuit. He has appeared as a warmup act for such names as: Judy Collins, Leon Redbone, John Sebastian, Pure Prairie League, Tom Chapin and Jesse Colin Young. Arne has performed at over 115 colleges within the past three years.

Movie Review

By JOE JOHNSON

"Seems Like Old Times" starring Goldie Hawn and Chevy Chase is Neil Simon at his funniest. This vintage Simon script is uncomplicated but includes fast-paced action with the laughter coming even faster.

The characters with small parts add almost as much laughter as the two leading roles. A chauffer who doubles as a butler and a local drunkard is paired with a Spanish maid who cooks like an angel but swears (in Spanish, of course) like a stable boy. And there are the two Indian brothers who can't ride a horse or rope a cow but can steal a car and drive it away before you can say Chief Sitting Bull.

Casting agent Jennifer Shield is to be highly commended for choosing Chevy Chase and Goldie Hawn for the leads. They are perfect in their roles. Charles Grodin also does a first-class job of playing his part which amounts to hating Chevy, loving Goldie, and kicking wayward dogs out of his bed.

Chevy Chase's contribution to the movie is enormous. As a professed woman-chaser and clumsy fool, Chevy brings a detached finesse to the art of acting cool under pressure. His fails and bumbles so cleverly covered up make him the definite "hero" (good grief, an impoverished ex-con and sex maniac as a hero?) of this film.

The movie begins with Nick Cardelia (Chevy Chase) being forced to rob a bank by two hoodlums who later toss him out of his own car doing 65 MPH. Nick, who has spent 2 years in a Mexican prison watching cockroaches commit suicide, is determined to remain free, even if he has taken a beautiful 8x10 glossy at the bank. Overcome by hunger (he holds up a candy machine), he wanders to his ex-wife's house and pleads for food and shelter. Ex-wife Glenda Parks (Goldie Hawn), who just happens to be married to the soon-to-be district attorney (Charles Grodin) and who is a bleeding-heart lawyer in her own right, tells him to hide in the garage.

The movie takes off from there and the high-jinks have the earmarks of classic Marx Brothers' comedy. Sometimes the slapstick gets a little hammy, particularly during a certain courtroom scene involving five dogs, two ex-spouses, one black-eyed district attorney, and the Spanish Chevy Chase's puppy-dog countenance and Goldie Hawn's wide-eyed hysteria—"He's under the bed again, isn't he...isn't he...put garlic on the windows...hand a cross over the bed!!" carry the humor off smooth and easy.

Rangers Train With Green Berets

By KURT COFFIELD

Nine students and two faculty members of Longwood's ROTC Ranger Detachment spent the week end of March 6-8 at Fort A. P. Hill training with the 11th Special Forces Group. The Special Forces, more commonly known as the Green Berets, provided realistic instruction in survival, patrolling, and rappelling. The ROTC group arrived Friday night, set up camp in the woods, and were ready to start the training Saturday morning. The cadets learned how to determine azimuths using the sun, how to obtain water when none is readily available, and how to construct shelters in the woods. Each cadet was then given a chance to prepare a survival meal of chicken, potatoes and bread cooked over a campfire. The afternoon was spent preparing for a night ambush operation. The ambush was conducted successfully and they were up early Sunday morning to rappell from a forty foot tower. Several cadets also had the opportunity to learn how to climb the rope using mechanical climbing devices. The group returned to Longwood tired, but knowing they had received some of the finest training the Army can provide. Tough? You bet it was tough. But you have to be tough to be a Longwood ROTC Ranger! Participants in the training included Dave Sawyer, Chuck Reed, Dave Crute, Karen McCraw, Gil Bates, Dave Volz, Steve Breeden, Joel Black, Jim Cashwell, SSG Pat Morse, and CPT Tom Stanford.

Sawyer And Cumbeys Exhibition

By JOE JOHNSON

Lisa Cumbeys' and Neil Sawyer's art work is currently on exhibit in the Lankford Building and Showcase Gallery. The show went on display March 4 and will continue until the 17th. The exhibit contains the works that Neil and Lisa have collected over the last two years. Neil's favorite work is a pencil drawing entitled "Missing Persons." Lisa's favorite work is an acrylic on board entitled "Zeke II: The Wizard's Tears."

Neil is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Sawyer, of Alexandria, Virginia. He is a graduate of J.E.B. Stuart High School of Falls Church and is presently a senior BFA candidate at Longwood College. Neil's concentration is graphic design which he plans to pursue as a career.

Neil is the photography editor for the Rotunda and also serves as head host for the Bedford Gallery. In his junior year, he won an Alumni Purchase Award and also served as president of the Longwood Players, where his graphic designs were used in the play production, "Barefoot in the Park."

Lisa is a senior at Longwood College working toward a BFA degree with studio concentration in drawing, printmaking and graphic design. A native of Courtland, Virginia, Lisa attributes her first serious interest in the arts to the creative instruction of Myrna Dworsky, her eighth grade art teacher. She won her first blue ribbon in 1973 and has since won numerous ribbons and cash awards in competitions judged by noted artists and curators such as Clarence Macnelly, Barclay Sheaks, Anthony Radich and the late Dick Cossitt.

Her latest achievements include the 1980 Art Department Purchase Award and the "Best in Show" title in the 1980 Walter Cecil Rawls Museum's annual Five County Art Show. She is the Art Editor of The Gyre, Longwood's literary and art publication, and the Student Director of Showcase Gallery.

Allen Ross will perform March 19th at 8:00 p.m.

Double Trouble

By TAMARA NASH

Have you ever been mistaken for someone else? It can be more than a little awkward. But it can be totally frustrating if you are mistakenly accused of being married by you're not or engaged when you're not or a thief when you're not. Such is the case in A Comedy of Errors, the Drama Department's latest undertaking.

Under the direction of Dr. Patton Lockwood, Stage Manager Lisa Magill and Assistant Stage Manager Ilona Wilson, Shakespeare's humorous play is well into rehearsals on Jarman stage. Even with the stilted language, the jist and humor of A Comedy of Errors is delightful.

Bob "Ralph" Lemieux and Robert Graham play the twins, Antipolus and Antipholus. Their servants are also twins, Dromio and Dromio, portrayed by Ross Conner and David Wood. Adriana, the wife of one Antipolus, is assumed by Sherry Forbes and her naive sister, Luciana, is Tamara Nash. Dr. Quentin Vest is most effective as the Duke while Carol Murla dominates as the Abbess. Chris Conner is accused and arrested as Angelo. Neil Sawyer and Mike Curley add their talents as the merchants while Dave Conte is Egeon. Jeff Sledjeski appears from behind the scenes as Balthazar.

The handy officers are Carl Ellis and Mitch Wheeler and the even more handy courtesan is Karen Purcell. Joanie Pearson is Luce and Rob Merenick takes on a double as Dr. Pinch and the jailer. Lisa Swackhammer is a most convincing headman and the attendants Brenda Coleman, Cindy Dean, Lisa Kause, and Penny Nunley, are always around to assist. The entire cast is most convincing in revealing the antics of the play.

Baseball

From Sports Info

Getting top-notch pitching and hitting from a number of different players, Longwood's baseball team won five of six games last week to continue its best start ever. This week the Lancers visit arch-rival Hampden-Sydney Tuesday, host Washington & Lee Wednesday, travel to King College for a pair of games Saturday and play at Bristol for two Sunday.

Longwood, averaging 11.4 runs per game, while holding foes to 2.5, split with Virginia Wesleyan Monday winning the opener 6-3 but losing the nightcap 3-0, the first time the Lancers have been shut out in 33 games dating back to last March. Saturday, Coach Buddy Bolding's team swept University of D.C. 4-0 on a shared no-hitter and 26-2 in the second game. West Virginia Tech was dealt two losses Sunday 6-2 and 19-1.

In the highlight of the week sophomore Mickey Roberts pitched six innings of no-hit ball while striking out 10 against UDC, but needed seventh inning relief help from junior David Mitchell to complete the no-hitter. Roberts hurled the first no-hitter in Longwood history last season in a 15-0 win over Houghton.

Longwood centerfielder John Crosby, who led Division III in base stealing a year ago, is off to a great start in 1980. Through 10 games, the Surgeon of Steel has swiped 20 bases in 22 attempts while leading the team in runs scored and walks. Crosby now has an amazing 117 stolen bases for his career.

Crosby, who already holds the career record for Divisions II and III, is just five short of the career stolen base record for Division I (122 by Mark Van Bever of South Carolina in 1975-77).

Former Clover Hill standout Sonny Bolton was Longwood's leading hitter and RBI man through eight games. Bolton, who has made but one error at shortstop, is hitting a sizzling .520 with 14 RBIs. Rightfielder Jim Thacker ranks second in the hit parade with a .480 average while David Runburg is hitting .429.

Division III All-American Doug Toombs broke loose with a big day at the plate Sunday. Toombs, who hit .565 a year ago to lead the nation, came into Sunday with a .355 average. He banged out four hits in five trips and powered in six runs to pace Longwood's 19-1 mauling of West Virginia Tech.

Veteran pitchers Richard Vaught and David Mitchell have won four of Longwood's nine games and each has hurled two complete games.

Gymnastics

By LISA SPENCER

Led by an outstanding all-around performance by sophomore standout Sharon Pillow, Longwood's gymnastics team finished second in the Region II regional meet Friday night at Western Carolina.

The Lady Lancers accumulated 122.85 points in the meet, but a strong William and Mary team took its second consecutive regional title with 127.30. East Carolina was third with 118.8.

Coach Ruth Budd says there is only a slim chance that the team will qualify for Nationals, but Pillow will almost certainly receive an invitation. Her all-around score of 32.45 took first place, and she also won both vaulting (8.80 — tie with Jan Roltsch of W&M) and bars (8.45).

Monica Chandler finished third all-around (30.30) and third in floor exercise, and stands a good chance of qualifying for nationals. Also a possible qualifier, Kathy Idelson placed fourth in bars (7.65) and vaulting (8.4) and sixth all-around (29.80).

Nationals will be hosted by William & Mary who received an automatic berth in the tournament which will be held April 3-4.

Women's Tennis

By LISA SPENCER

The tennis team opened its season Friday with a 7-2 loss to Hollins, but coach Phyllis Harriss feels that the team has a promising season ahead. With seven returning players from the fall team, and three talented freshmen, Harriss is confident that the team will finish with a better record than its 3-7 mark last fall.

Returning for the Lady Lancers is senior Nancy Leidenheimer who finished the fall season in the number one singles position. She and Amy Wilson, another returnee, won their singles matches against Hollins.

Also returning to the team are: Kim Diehl, Stephanie Ibanez, Annette Noel, Leslie Robertson, and Dawn Sealy. Bland Hotchkiss, Bonnie Lipscomb, and Martha Sheppard are the three new netters on the team.

Coach Harriss has been very pleased with the team's performance thus far, but realizes that there is a lot of hard work ahead.

"The team's spirit is really good," Harriss commented. "We've got a lot of practice ahead, but we're getting there."

The Lady Lancers will not see competition again until April 3-4 when they will play in the Emory & Henry Tournament.

Men's Tennis

From Sports Info

Longwood's first ever men's tennis team opened play last week as the Lancers dropped matches to Charleston 8-1, King 5-4 and Emory & Henry 7-2.

Coached by Dr. Al Yoder, Longwood has been led by freshman Beck Haviland and soph Gus Leal. Haviland has won two matches at No. 3 singles and has teamed with Leal to win two doubles matches at No. 1.

Women's Golf

From Sports Info

Longwood's women's golf team, which managed a third place finish in a tough Longwood Invitational Tournament field Saturday, travels to Durham, N.C., this week to compete in the Duke Invitational Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

The Lady Lancers will face strong opposition from a number of Division I teams this weekend. Coach Barbara Smith's team has already qualified for the AIAW Div. II Nationals which will be held in June.

Wake Forest more than lived up to its reputation in the Longwood Invitational as the Demon Deacon women golfers won the 36-hole event by 36 strokes over second place Meredith 648-684. Longwood took third with a 686 while James Madison (689), William & Mary (703), N.C. State (770) and Mary Washington (846) rounded out the field.

Five Wake golfers placed among the top six individuals led by Robin Holloway who took medalist honors with a 77-80 - 157. Brenda Baker of James Madison was second with an 81-80 - 161. The last day of the tournament was played under cold, windy conditions, but nothing seemed to slow down the victors from Wake Forest.

Longwood senior Kay Smith finished seventh overall with an 82-85 - 167 to top the Lady Lancers. Robin Andrews had an 84-88 - 172, Emily Fletcher an 84-89 - 173, Sharon Gilmore an 88-86 - 174, Cheryl Dufort an 82-92 - 174 and Susan Morgan a 96-92 - 188.

Lacrosse

By LISA SPENCER

With the return of three All-State players from last season, the lacrosse team is looking forward to an exciting year in Division III. Coach Jane Miller feels that her team has an abundance of talent this season.

"I cannot say at this point that we have any really key players," stated Miller. "We have an equal level of skill on the varsity squad — and that's good."

Debbie Cosby, Cindy Dropeski, and Denise Snader were chosen in 1980 as members of the All-State team. Combined with the skills of the remaining varsity players, the team should have a good season.

Chris Mayer and Mary Milne combined last year for a total of 26 goals. Both players are expected to be strong forces on this year's team.

The rest of the varsity roster includes: Sharon Payne, Kim Fuhr, Betty Jo Casey, Susan Melvin, Jo Jacobs, Janice Johnson, and Lorrie Garber.

The team will meet its first opponent of the season when it faces Mary Washington at home Tuesday, and then travels to Randolph-Macon Thursday for two games.

Alumni Gives Advice

By CATHY CARDEN

On Wednesday, March 11, a dinner meeting was the place where four Longwood College Alumni and one Longwood College Employee spoke on job opportunities, academic preparation, and job search "tips." This was sponsored by the Office of Career Planning and Placement.

The first speaker was Ms. Kim Cave, a 1980 English major graduate. She is now a Claims Approver for Equitable Life Assurance Society in Richmond. Ms. Cave stated that "a good resume is important and don't be picky about the first job you are offered." She said that the first job you decide to take may not be with the company you would like to stay with but it will give you job experience. Ms. Cave felt that working in the Computer Room on campus during her four years here really helped her to get the job. So many companies are going to computer-based programs that knowing a little bit about computers could be helpful.

Mr. David Dausinn was a Business Administration Major and is now the Merchandising Coordinator at Craddock Terry Shoe Company in Lynchburg. Mr. Dausinn's first advice was to "set up a game plan for the future." He agreed with Ms. Cave that a good resume is important. Mr. Dausinn encouraged the crowd to participate in a Senior Practicum or Internship if they could. He feels that the experience is good even if you don't like the job you get. Marketing, Math-Statistics, and Personal Finance classes were good classes to prepare him before and during his job. He also stated that asking questions was an essential part to every job.

Mrs. Sherri Barnard Thomas is an Administrative Assistant at Thalhimers. She graduated in 1978 and majored in Physical Education. She did not take any business courses to prepare her for this job but said, "My general education classes helped me to become a well rounded person." Mrs. Thomas said that the marketing and retail field was wide open and the chance for advancement was there if you pursued it. She also said, "Personnel managers looked at different types of jobs in certain ways." For example, if you have had the same job for a long time, it will show stability. If you were a waitress, then you dealt with a lot of people.

Once a Social Work major, Ms. Cam Oglesby is now a student at T. C. Williams Law School. From listening to Ms. Oglesby tell about her experience in trying to get into law school, she proved how important it was not to be a quitter. Ms. Oglesby set her goals and after a lot of hard work and despair, she met those goals. She went on job interviews even if there were no job openings. She felt that the interviews helped her to prepare her for the job she really wanted to get.

As a Systems Analyst here at Longwood College, Ken Bywaters graduated from James Madison University in Accounting. Mr. Bywaters received interviewing experience by interviewing with companies that visited the campus. He stressed that job experience is "extremely important." When working with computers, he said that specializing on a common brand name and model that was widely used allowed him to transfer into other jobs more easily. Mr. Bywaters' advice to the Senior Computer Science majors was to get two years job experience with computers and to specialize with the equipment.

All of the speakers were informative and truthful in their advice to the students. They also stressed how the Placement Office helped them to prepare for their interviews and jobs. Have you set your goals, prepared for interviews, and established a good resume to help prepare you for your job search?

Fires Plague Campus

By JOE JOHNSON

"You don't ever know when it's going to happen and if it does, whether you will be lucky again or not so lucky and somebody will have to pay for that fire freak's kicks. I keep my clothes right beside my bed now...ready for the fire alarm to go off again and ready for me to get the hell out of this building!" said a resident of the Cunningham dorm speaking about the rash of fires which has plagued the campus recently.

Roy Kyle, State Police Investigator for the Virginia State Arson squad said that this recent set of fires started about one month ago on March 8 in the Wygal Music Building. "A fire was set to Rob Flescher's locker in the basement of the music building at about 3:50 p.m. ten minutes before his Sunday music recital. At 5:00 p.m., (the ending time for the recital) another fire was set to the same locker. The time element involved in the setting of the fires suggests the possibility of a music student(s) starting the fires...but that's one of many possibilities," said Officer Kyle. Rob had supposedly been receiving threatening letters prior to the incident, but neither Roy Kyle nor Rob Flescher would comment on this.

On March 11 a set of trash can fires on third floor, Main Cunningham, was started at about two in the morning. Neil Sullivan, Resident Supervisor for Main Cunningham, put out these fires. Two nights later, on Friday the 13th, just before midnight two more trash can fires were started on the second and third floor Annex, Main Cunningham. Five nights later the curtains were lit in the third floor lounges, Main Cunningham. Neil Sullivan with help from other residents of the Cunningham dorms,

"We were lucky," said Neil, "whoever is doing this has got a problem and it has got to be dealt with. I don't think he really wants to burn down the building, or hurt anybody...maybe he just likes the commotion the fires cause...maybe it gives him a sense of power." That the arsonist did not want to harm anyone would have been a plausible theory had it not been for the fire in room 338 on March 15. David Wall first spotted the smoke billowing out of the room's window at about 4:00 a.m. He called Bob Bagnal in room 338 and Bob kicked in the door to the blazing room. Smoke immediately filled the hallway. "You couldn't see...you just couldn't see a thing except black smoke and the flames in the room...the bottom bunk was in flames from one end to the other...the top bunk was smoldering."

Bob pulled the fire alarm and woke up third floor R.A. Ray Spillman who proceeded to evacuate the building. Meanwhile, Campus Police Officer Huskey and a few helpful residents put wet towels over their faces and sprayed the flames with over eight fire extinguishers. The mattress was still smoldering when the Farmville Fire Department arrived and threw it out the window.

A number of curious facts surround this particular fire. The first fact is that Rob Flescher (the music student whose locker was burned out) happens to room in 338 and sleeps in the lower bunk. The second is that both Allen Hoffman (Rob's roommate) and Rob Flescher had left the room with the door locked. Whoever started the fire obviously knew the combination to that lock.

Farmville Fire Department officials said that if a draft had been running through the hall at the time of the fire, the whole building could have gone up. "It was pure luck that the fire was contained to one room," said Campus Police Chief Neil Smith. "Anytime a fire set and not found immediately, it can get serious...whoever is doing it should start exercising a little concern for other students, for God's sake, don't be putting somebody else's life in danger!"

After the incident on the 15th, Police Chief Neil Smith ordered officers to patrol the dorms regularly. This seemed to deter the arsonist(s) until after spring break when he, like a greedy burglar, struck again.

Fires were started at 3:00 a.m. on April 6, "At first three fires were lit, one on each landing of the Annex," said Neil Sullivan. "We barely had them under control when I looked in the basement. There were four curtains burning and part of the carpet was on fire...we almost ran out of extinguishers, putting out all the flames. If the windows wouldn't have been closed in the basement, Lord knows what would have happened."

Michael Kerrigan, who helped Neil put out some of the fires, commented on student reaction. "The students are angry...this guy is playing a dangerous game and if the students catch him at it, I wouldn't be surprised if he (the arsonist) gets hurt."

Roy Hill, Director of Physical Plant, and Melvin Moore, Fire Marshall for Longwood College, estimate the damage to the campus as a result of the fires at about $1,200. Even at this cost, Mr. Moore says that Longwood has been lucky. "Nobody's been hurt, and we are grateful for that...materials are replaceable but a human life isn't."

When asked what is being done to catch the criminal, Officer Roy Kyle replied, "We have given a number of students lie detector tests...and we plan on giving many more...as many as necessary." A reward is also being offered by the Virginia Advisory Committee on Arson Prevention for information leading to the arrest or indictment of the person or persons responsible for the fires. Call 1-800-552-9865 if you have any information.

Mr. Roy Hill said that the reward could go as high as $5,000 dollars and he hopes that if someone in the building knows what is going on and who is doing it, this reward might make him talk.

Campus Police Chief, Neil Smith, leaves the arsonist(s) with a poignant warning. "For persons setting fires, the minimum sentence is five years in a penitentiary...if someone sets fire and the result of that fire is a loss of life, the arsonist is subject to the electric chair...you (the arsonist) are playing a game with life and death odds...people who play for those stakes are fools!"

Nursing Home Procedures Questioned

By MARK KARL SEGAL

A Farmville nursing home was recently criticized by a fired employee and the Farmville branch of the Virginia Legal Aid Society. In a press conference on April 1st, called by Matthew Pavok of Virginia Legal Aid, he and Lisa Pauli made public grievances and deficiencies concerning the operation of Holly Manor. Pauli was previously employed by Holly Manor and asked to resign last March 30th by Earl B. Lee, administrator for the nursing home. She was told to leave immediately or police would be summoned. She did pack up and leave and police were called. Pauli alleged she was not given a reason for her resignation but that Lee just held up a five page report from the state inspector indicating this was his reason for dismissal.

In the report, by Frances B. Koehn of the Bureau of Medical and nursing facilities services, she outlined numerous problems in several areas of operation. The problems were allegedly reported to the administrator (Lee) on previous occasions and ignored.

In a telephone interview with Mrs. Koehn in Richmond on April 10 she told the ROTUNDA she would close the kitchen down if the unsanitary conditions she noted were not complied with immediately. No further comment was made in reference to actions that could be implemented by the state but she did feel that Lee would fully cooperate with the state.

Deficiencies were noted in the areas of medical care, restorative care and nutritional care.

More specifically in the area of medical care; deficiencies in the staffing of Registered nurses and the overburdens placed on the scanty under trained staff.

In the area of restorative care, patients are not properly rehabilitated so they can eventually rejoin the world at large. The rules of the state require nursing homes to have an "active program of restorative nursing care directed toward assisting each patient to achieve and maintain his highest level of self care and independence."

Instead of encouraging people to remain active and move around, the staff at Holly Manor accedes to the "alleged desire" of some patients to remain in bed at all times.

Furthermore, deficiencies were noted in the nutritional facilities:

1. Insufficient hot water for the sterilization of dishes.
2. Open items stored in uncovered containers.
3. Imbalanced diets and menus were offered and not supplemented.
4. Poor storage locations of foods were noted.
5. Food is often not served at 140 degrees, as required by the state.
6. And kitchen sanitation was a problem area.

Mr. Lee was not available for comment last week end as his office reported he was out of town.

I held the weapon in my hand, it felt light, hardly dangerous, surely not something that could kill a man. The officer placed the earphones over my head and I crouched down like I had seen so many heroes and non-heroes do on television. Squeezing the trigger was an almost unconscious reflex and the target showed a pinpoint of light where the bullet had pierced.

The sense of power is overwhelming. In my hands, I held the great equalizer, the winner of the West, the champion of hunters, and the best friend of any good soldier. I also held a .22 caliber revolver, the same type weapon that punctured the President's lung and drilled a hole through press secretary James Brady's brain.

I imagine that groups favoring stronger gun-control legislation will once again increase their activities as usually happens following an assassination or assassinator attempt. I also imagine that the National Rifle Association, being the most effective lobbying organization on Capital Hill will swiftly and effectively put a plug on the barrage of proposed gun-control legislation.

In essence nothing will change and America's consciousness will have one more nightmare to add to its already brimming coffer of nightmares.

The reason for our long list of tragedies is sometimes naively attributed to handguns and their availability in our society. This is at least in part true and I would be the first to favor stronger gun control legislation if not an outright ban on all sales of handguns.

But something is tugging at our society other than the prevalence of handguns. There is a sickness in America, handguns and violent crimes are but reoccurring symptoms of that disease.

Our nation has been brought up on a diet of Davy Crockett and Jesse James. A ten-year-old boy could probably tell you all the movies Clint Eastwood acted in before he could name his congressman. John Wayne is idolized more than Sister Teresa could ever hope to be.

Our country has been built by bricks of violent individuals. The handgun is but an extension of that power mystique. To cure violence in the streets, we must first clear violence in the mind. We will know this is happening when the bad guy gets shot...and nobody cheers!

By MARK KARL SEGAL

John W. Hinckley Jr. will be remembered as just a demented love crazed assassin. Once Americans heard he was just some emotionally disturbed maniac they immediately considered him harmless. "Whew", I heard a friend exclaim. "At least he was just some psycho and not a double agent for the CIA—or even a PLO member."

But what plagues America is not confined to potentially dangerous radical groups. This thing does not lie in some arrestable field of reason—it is bundled around the core of individualism and freedom—what America is based on.

We seem to be so scared of "Communism", "the KGB", "the PLO" and other such organized groups infiltrating our lily white society. Anything we can put our finger on and give a name immediately becomes our villain. But the threat to America does not sit sweating in some obscure South American country while masterminding a plan to murder the president of the U.S. Instead, he or she goes to drive-in movies, eats McDonalds hamburgers and sleeps in a serene bedroom in a split level house in Dreamland, America.

John Hinckley, Arthur Bremer, Sarah Jane Moore and Squeaky Fromme were not members of counter intelligence organizations or the KKK. They are Americans silently bellowing for some individualistic endeavor. They are also crowned heroes in Russia. They buy a gun at a pawn shop and completely on their own—without the aid of bazookas and organized groups—proved to the world that any American can possess the hardware and insanity to murder anyone in our democracy.

Point proved. The fellows up in the Kremlin are rolling in laughter while free Americans are taking target practice at naked America. All of our weaknesses are being exposed and all our strongholds are being undermined by an inadvertently picked bushel of "average" Americans ready to pull the plug any minute.

Our "average" Americans are riddling Reagan's rib cage, blasting John Lennons flesh away and scoring big points in Moscow, while an American submarine can not even find its way past a Japanese freighter.

Breshnev must be leading a triumphant cold war victory club into hours of non-stop laughing.

Return Radio

To The Editor of the Rotunda:
Last Friday, between 11:30 a.m. and 12:00 noon, someone entered my office at the TV Control Room in Hiner Building and took a portable two-way radio (walkie-talkie) which is used for amateur radio in the VHF band.

This radio can only be used by licensed operators and the use by unauthorized persons, as well as its destruction, constitutes a Federal crime according to FCC regulations. The most important use of that radio is for public service and emergencies, and the person who took it is depriving the community of this important service.

The disappearance of this radio, which was my personal property, has been reported to the National Record of Stolen Equipment, therefore; someday it will show up somewhere in the U.S. However, perhaps the person who took it may be considering starting in amateur radio (wrong start) and will decide to keep it for himself; in that case, I'll be glad to donate the charger required to keep the special battery alive. Within the next few hours, the battery will revert polarity and become ruined, and it is expensive.

In the event that this person may want to return my radio, I believe that leaving it in any place (like my mailbox) with instructions to be returned to me, will be satisfactory. Please note that this is not a CB radio and cannot be modified or converted for this use.

Last Saturday I was scheduled to handle communications with the Southside Amateur Radio Association of the Minithon which took place in this area; the absence of my radio was noticed so let's hope that none of the runners needed fast assistance in my post.

Sincerely,
Mike Silveira
TV Center

P.S. I am sure that eventually I will recover this radio. The television premises are protected by cameras and recording equipment to detect intruders. I have a video tape of this incident but before turning it in for identification, I want to give this person the opportunity to correct this act.

Woods Lecture

By JACQUILINE BURTON

The speaker for this year's final Faculty Colloquium Lecture was William C. Woods, Assistant Professor of English, who spoke at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, April 8 in Wygal Auditorium.

The subject of Mr. Woods' talk was "Fiction and the Figures of Death: War Stories in Flashback and Fast Forward." In this lecture, he discussed the films, literature, personal accounts, and other media which have come into existence since the Vietnam war.

Mr. Woods said that "war is a continuing experience." It has no end or limitation in its influence on life and the way people continue to perceive the nature of belligerency. The effects of war are found to recur in later conflicts. The perception of and reactions to World Wars I and II and other conflicts found further outlet in the Vietnam war.

The effects of a war continue long after its conclusion, making a lasting impression upon people who are exposed to these effects. War finds expression through pararealistic film, postmodernist fiction, and personal reaction. The overwhelming pervasion of war into the attitudes of people and its methods of expression are contributors to the gradual transition war is making from mere historical occurrence to an art form. The unrelenting persistence of war and its effects on our culture account for the fact that so many writers who have never seen war at first hand are able to convey the flavor of war in their writing in a believable manner. The media shaped the conceptions of war for those going to Vietnam in the 1960's and early 70's.

In his lecture, Mr. Woods examined the significance of such films as APOCALYPSE NOW, novels like GOING AFTER CACCIATO, and the memoirs DISPATCHES. He also recounted his own experiences as a broadcast journalist in Japan while serving in the army during the Vietnam war, and later as a witness of the riots and marches on Washington while working as a reporter with The Washington Post. Although, like many writers of war fiction, he never served in a front line of battle. Mr. Woods said he was still affected by the pervading mood and far-reaching sentiments of the times concerning the war. These forces contributed to the conceptions he expressed in the writing of his novel, THE KILLING ZONE.

Spring Weekend Highlights

Dancers Delight

By TAMARA D. NASH

The Longwood College Company of Dancers did the new dance studio proud with their Spring Concert. Presented April 7-11, the dancers' program was professional, enjoyable, and very beautiful.

The program opened with a fairly upbeat dance, including a majority of the dancers but the variety was endless. Divided into six themes, the 12 dances were clearly choreographed to carry out each theme. The lighthearted "Games Children Play" revealed the graceful movement of even the simplest games we played as youngsters, while the romantic "Friends" caused every heart to go a little soft as you remembered the first love past or maybe yet to come. "Ladders" was one of the more rousing dances. The constant synchopation led every toe to tap and left a smile on every mouth. Because of its uniqueness, Dr. Nelson Neal's "Sports Dance" must be mentioned. The all-male dance was vibrant and exciting and it left the audience, as well as the dancers, a little breathless with exertion.

The program's solid foundation was, of course, based on the talent but the costumes, lighting, and music all combined to make the concert memorable and successful. Every detail was taken care of with such finesse that no one left without feeling a touch of the beauty the dancers revealed.

Longwood Minithon

By JOE JOHNSON

The sun-drenched crowd applauded once again as the fifth entry in Longwood's fourth annual minithon running contest came strolling in. The minithon, coordinated and directed by Dr. Gerald Graham, was held on the morning of April 11.

"I was really happy with the turn out," said Dr. Graham. "The support I received from fifty or so local citizens and the Farmville ambulance squad made everything work smoothly."

The course for the minithon ran from Hampden-Sydney College to Lancaster Library, a distance of 6 and two-tenths miles. There were 170 participants and all managed to finish with sweat dribbling and legs chugging.

The overall first place winner for males was John Loughram with a time of 32:53 seconds. The overall first place winner for females was Sherry Will with a time of 41:27 seconds.

All contestants were treated to a free minithon t-shirt which were partially funded by Blue Cross - Blue Shield of Virginia. They also received as much gatorade as their exercise shrunken stomachs could hold.

There were six categories that a person could enter depending on his age.

LONGWOOD MINITHON WINNERS:

The Gyre Literary Festival will begin Tuesday, April 14, 3:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium, with a reading by Maurice Duke. It will be followed by a reading on April 16 by Tom O'Grady at 7:30 p.m., also in Bedford Auditorium.

The Literary Festival is sponsored by the Gyre, Longwood's literary and art magazine, published annually by a student staff. During the literary festival, there will be an exhibit on the second floor of the Bedford building of original artwork by the artists who will be presented in the 1981 Gyre.

On Wednesday, April 22, at 3:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium, a reading of original poems by students, faculty and people from the community will be held. Anyone interested in doing such a reading should contact Dr. Martha Cook, Department of English, Philosophy and Foreign Languages, Longwood College, 392-9356, before noon, April 22.

Maurice Duke is professor of English at Virginia Commonwealth University and book editor with his wife, Elizabeth Duke, of the Richmond Times-Dispatch. Mr. Duke is a native of Richmond and received his undergraduate degree from the College of William and Mary. He earned the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Iowa and taught at Kent State University in the late 1960's, before retiring to Richmond.

In 1971, he founded the scholarly journal, Resources for American Literary Study, and remained an editor until 1980. Author and editor of scholarly books and articles, Maurice Duke says he "got tired of scholarship" and turned to writing fiction two years ago in 1979.

Thomas O'Grady was born in Baltimore and educated at the University of Baltimore, Johns Hopkins, and the University of Delaware. He has taught at colleges in Maryland, Delaware and Virginia (Hampden-Sydney).

He is the author of Establishing a Winery, a sequence of poems published in 1977, and The Farmville Elegies, published in 1980 by Commentators Press of San Francisco and winner of the Impact Book Award. In addition, his poems and essays have been published in a number of magazines.

Mr. O'Grady and his wife, Bronwyn, own and manage the Rose Bower Vineyard and Winery near Hampden-Sydney.

Janice Strikes Again

By LISA BOWERS

As most Longwood students know, one of the most eagerly awaited Student Union events of the academic year is the traditional "Janice" mixer. For the third successive year, Janice and her band graced the lower dining hall Friday night with their awesome presence and style. The Janice Band plays a good repertoire of soul, beach, motown, and top forty music, and Janice displays a melodic voice, a wide vocal range, and a strong pair of lungs! She also shows excellent taste in her selection of stage costumes — she appeared in a red flounced dress in the first set, a violet pantsuit in the second set, and a leopard-spotted jumpsuit in the final set, while she constantly cavorted about stage on four-inch stiletto heels. She's not only talented and cool, but graceful!

Janice isn't merely a performer who plays her gig, receives her pay, and leaves as impersonally as she arrived. Janice is a real person who believes in people. She perpetuates continual audience rapport, both during and between each song, and without reservation she professes to her audience her love for Jesus Christ and accredits to Him all of her success.

the usual popular dance music: such songs as "Celebration," "And the Beat Goes On," "I Told You So" (the Janice theme song), "How Do I Survive," "Sugar Pie Honey Bunch," and "Goody Two-Shoes."

April is the cruellest month for college students, but the Janice mixer on April 10 provided a welcome reprieve from the monotony of studying and writing term papers. Janice's music, personality, and Christian testimony were truly beautiful and refreshing.

Anthropologist To Speak

Dr. Catherine Seaman, Professor of Anthropology at Sweet Briar College will speak on her recent fieldwork in India at a public lecture in the Red and White Rooms of the Lankford Building at Longwood College Thursday, April 16, at 1 p.m. Dr. Seaman's lecture is titled "Impressions From Public Places: Patterns of Human Behavior From the Roads of India."

Dr. Seaman has recently completed research under a Fulbright Fellowship in India during 1980. She holds the Ph.D. degree in anthropology from the University of Virginia. Her previous fieldwork has been on kinship in the American South. Art Purchase Exhibit

By JOE JOHNSON

The annual Art Purchase Exhibit is currently on display in Bedford Gallery until April 30, 1981. The artist for this year's Exhibit is Charles K. Sibley who is displaying 16 oil and acrylic paintings.

The Annual Art Purchase Exhibit originated sometime in 1948 under the name of the Longwood College Committee for the Purchase of Paints by Contemporary Virginia Artists.

In order to invite a group of printmakers to exhibit in 1965, the name of the committee was changed to embrace art objects in addition to paintings. The collection now consists of 62 items — drawings, prints, sculpture, oil and watercolor paintings. The items are placed in the Lancaster Library, the Bedford Art Building or anywhere that the greatest number of students can see them most often.

This year's committee members are as follows: Barbara L. Bishop, Chairman; Mark Baldridge, Virginia Mitchell — Art Department; George Elliot — Education Department; Pauline Haga — Music Department; Rebecca Laine — Library; Jacqueline Wall — Campus School; Jeanne Person and Guy DeLadurantaye are the student representatives.

First Win Over Hornets

From Sports Info

Doug Toombs (Chase City) drew a bases-loaded walk with two outs in the bottom of the ninth to score Jim Thacker (Bedford) with the winning run as Longwood took its first win ever from Lynchburg in baseball Sunday afternoon, 11-10.

Lynchburg, now 13-2 and ranked fourth nationally in Division III, had tied the game in the top of the ninth on a three-run homer by first baseman Wayne Harrison, but the Lancers, now 18-8, rallied to earn the victory.

Longwood held a 9-6 edge after four innings thanks to a two-run single from John Crosby (Richmond) in the third and a two-run double by Chuck Hagar (Eagle Rock) in the fourth. Toombs added two hits and two RBIs for the Lancers while Sonny Bolton (Richmond) and Rusty Bowlin (Powhatan) also had two hits.

The Hornets got three hits from Chip Childress. Lynchburg coach Gerry Thomas played the game under protest after a controversial call in the bottom of the ninth.

Longwood benefitted from 15 walks and collected 11 hits while Lynchburg was issued 10 free passes and had 12 hits.

With the win over Lynchburg behind them, the Lancers face another tough week of baseball action beginning today at Virginia Tech. Longwood will play the Hokies for the first time ever in a single game at 3:00 at Tech. Wednesday, Longwood hosts a strong Liberty Baptist team in a single game at 3:00 and Saturday the Lancers host Bowie State for a pair of games beginning at 1:00.

David Rumburg, Sonny Bolton and Doug Toombs had the hot bats for Longwood last week as the Lancers beat VMI 15-4, St. Mary's 13-4 and lost to Duke 9-6. Rumburg leads the club in batting (.483) and RBIs (29) while Bolton is right behind at .400 with 28 runs-batted-in. Toombs boosted his average to .360 and has 23 RBIs.

John Crosby, who has stolen 34 bases in 39 attempts through the Lynchburg game, leads the team in runs (31), at-bats (90), walks (19) and has stolen 131 bases in his career, tying the all-time college record for stolen bases. He's a good bet to break the record this week.

Lacrosse: Off To A Good Start

By TERRI DAVIS and CINDY DROPSKI

It was quite a week for the Ladies Lacrosse team as they faced three vigorous competitors. However, they held their own as their record stands 4-2. The second team has dominated their games with an excellent record of 4-0-1.

The first match of the week was on Monday against Hollins College. Knowing Hollins team is one of the strongest of the Division III teams, Longwood managed to maneuver by Hollins' zone defense to win by a score of 8-4. The Lancers defense must be commended as they prevented the penetration strength of Longwood's defense. The second team followed the first team by winning 8-2. Kim Wood played an exceptional game by scoring the major portion of the Lancer goals. Gayle Shuler played an exceptional defensive game.

On Wednesday, Longwood met with the University of Richmond from Division II. Denise Snader and Debbie Cosby, not only played a strong defensive game, but also lead Longwood's attack by scoring 3 and 2 goals respectively. Chris Mayer also scoring one goal contributed to the punch of the attack. The defensive wings, Lorrie Garber and Denise Snader did an exceptional job. Their hustle enabled them to block numerous passes as well as providing the various mid-field connections for the offense. University of Richmond's second team defense was strong but the Lady Lancers managed to tie the game at 7-7 within the last few minutes. The key offensive players were Susan Melvin, Terry Chumley, Jeannie Wakelyn and Kathy Klebert.

The Lady Lancers met with Roanoke College on Friday. Even though Longwood did not play totally up to par, they managed to pull out a 7-6 victory. Mary King contributed to this victory as she on a free position in the final minutes of the game. Jo Jacobs did an outstanding job in the transition from defense to offense at mid-field. Despite the field conditions, the second team beat Roanoke 9-5 with their excellent passes and tight defense. Kim Wood and Susan Melvin again played a good offensive game. Terry Chumley had many key defensive plays to enable the Lancers to dominate the game.

This week the Lancers face Lynchburg (away), Madison (home), and Bridgewater (away). All home games are played on First Ave. field, so come out and support our Lady Lancers.

Idelson At Nationals

By LISA SPENCER

For the third straight year Longwood has been represented in the AIAW Division II Gymnastics Championships, and for the third straight year junior Kathy Idelson qualified for and participated in the tough competition — an extraordinary feat for the Annapolis, Maryland native. The trip to the tournament, which was held at William & Mary, was the second one for sophomore Sharon Pillow, and the first for freshman Monica Chandler.

In the preliminary round Friday, the three gymnasts competed in the uneven bars, vaulting, balance beam and floor exercise. Out of over 100 competitors, Pillow, Idelson, and Chandler tied for 22nd in floor with a score of 8.6. Pillow also placed 18th in vaulting with an 8.65. But despite strong showings and high scores by each gymnast, only Idelson qualified for the finals held Saturday. Her beam score of 8.55 was high enough to qualify her to compete in that event in the finals.

Coach Ruth Budd, who led the Longwood team to a 9-2 season and second place finishes in both the State and Regional Tournaments, was delighted to have a gymnast competing in the finals.

"Kathy did really well on her routine," observed Budd. "She held up well under the pressure of a national competition."

But Budd was even more pleased after the results of the finals were computed. Kathy's 8.55 score Friday, combined with an 8.35 Saturday were high enough to give her an eighth place finish in that event. Kathy was the only Virginian to even qualify for the finals.

Beam being the most fickle of all events, Kathy was as surprised as well as delighted to have done so well in that event.

"I'm really glad that I did so well. You can never tell just how good you've done in that event," commented a tired Idelson. "I'm glad for the team as well as myself."

Idelson became Longwood's first All-American in any sport two years ago when she finished seventh at nationals in floor exercise. Then last year she finished 13th in beam and 14th in floor.

Coach Budd felt that all three gymnasts did a good job in representing their team in the toughest competition of the year.

"All three competed really well. I was impressed with each performance, particularly Monica's since it was her first time at nationals," Budd stated.

Kathy's father, Robert Idelson of Annapolis, perhaps summed up the meet better than anyone else — "They did Longwood proud."

Sports Profile

By KAY SCHMIDT

Although having been a member of the Longwood Lacrosse team for only two years, Jo Jacobs is one of the leading scorers. She has contributed seven goals in the first six games, helping the Lady Lancers compile a 4-2 overall and 4-1 VAAW Division III record.

Jo first played lacrosse in a physical education class her sophomore year. "I really liked the game and decided to try out for the team," she said. "I think playing sports in high school has helped in lacrosse, but I still had to work hard to pick up the new skills."

"Jo has made great strides since last year," says coach Jane Miller. "She is one of only six second year players on the varsity team. She is a very consistent and determined player and is a big asset to the team."

An all-around athlete, Jo was a member of both the softball and basketball teams at Stafford High School. She received All-District and All-Potomac honors in softball her senior year, and was also the recipient of the Howard G. Woodard Memorial Award for outstanding athletic achievement.

Jo is also involved in many other college activities. She was an Oktoberfest Clown and has helped the Longwood Women's basketball team as timer. She is also a member of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority. A good student as well as an athlete, Jo is a member of Delta Psi Kappa honorary fraternity for health, physical education, and recreation majors. She plans to teach and coach after graduation.

CHI Commends Outstanding Individuals

CHI Burning, April 16, 1981

We, the members of CHI, come together to recognize those of our college community who have exhibited outstanding dedication and spirit. It is through you as individuals working together that these ideals will be realized.

We, the members of CHI 1981, challenge you, our friends, to erase from your memory the personification of the ideal. Instead look to your own souls—you are the flame, you are the spirit, you are the CHI to whom we burn.

Archeological Dig Proposes Questions

By JODIKERSEY

A small piece of glass is accidentally broken and Bob Flippen, the glass expert, quickly studies the pieces to make sure it was not an extremely important artifact. Dr. Jordan checks on the verdict and assures the guilty foot that it won't have to be sacrificed! Every object scraped out of the ground may be a major discovery for Dr. James Jordan and the students of Archeology accompanying him on a dig at Hampden-Sydney.

The site of interest is the small building located at the back of the President's home at Middlecourt. Mrs. Josiah Bunting, wife of Hampden-Sydney's President, contacted Dr. Jordan at Longwood when she discovered there might be historical artifacts of value located in a small cabin which is considered to be a slave cabin built around 1829.

The suspicion was aroused, when workmen who had been hired to renovate the cabin for a guest house found piles of old bottles located under two floors of wood. The second layer of wood had begun to decay and cave-in. Mrs. Bunting and Dr. Jordan established a conditional use permit for the area and the dig began. opportunity for Hampden-Sydney and Longwood to cooperate on a worthwhile project", said Dr. Jordan. He added that the dig was only possible through the cooperation of Hampden-Sydney and the body of people that were experienced in Archeology. Many of the students participating are those who assisted Dr. Jordan last summer at Anna's Ridge in Cumberland County.

During the preliminary digging, objects that were found were such things as chicken and frog bones which relate to African customs. Shells, buttons, various pieces of glass, pipes and many other objects were excavated.

The dig is especially interesting because of the idiosyncrasy that has arisen in the original room of the cabin. All concern has now been placed on this room instead of all three rooms of the building. This puzzle is not in conflicting dates of artifacts, but the unusualness of the brick feature in the floor. The students have dug the floor deep enough to clearly distinguish three separate brick pits with a walkway in between. This walkway extends to the window which used to be a door.

Dr. Jordan is very eager to continue the dig to try to establish a legitimate reason why this room would have the brick pits. A possible hypothesis suggested by Dr. Jordan is that this particular room was used for heating water for a wash room or a butcher's house. About two hundred pieces of quartz were also excavated which suggests that these were heated and then thrown into the water to make it boil. Another possible hypothesis is that these three brick features are actually three separate rooms or compartments for sleeping with the walkway leading to the former door.

Another ticky feature that complicates the research is that arrowheads and small scrapers which would have been used for hides were excavated two and a half feet below the original clay floor. The cabin could be located on a pre-historic Indian site.

The time limit has been extended to include one more day of excavation in the original room of the slave cabin. The many questions concerning the cabin will be further considered as Dr. Jordan and his crew return this Thursday to continue their dig.

Commentary

Dear Editor:

There is something very disturbing happening on Longwood's campus. I am happy to see students showing their concern for something that they feel is a good cause. What I'm referring to is the food fast scheduled for Wednesday. This sounds like a good idea the way it is presented. But how many of you have really taken a good hard look at it.

There is an article in last Thursday's Wall Street Journal, concerning food aid. Although it does not use African countries as an example, it does point to other similar countries where we have given food aid and the starving people weren't helped one bit. The money and food sent to these countries goes to the governments and the middle class. I don't think there is anyone at Longwood who could prove to me that the money sent as a result of Wednesday's food fast would put one morsel of food in a starving person's mouth. Another aspect of this to look at is if we are able to feed these people it is really going to help them. It has been proven in countries like India that if you feed them they get stronger. If they get stronger they make more babies. If they make more babies then they can't feed themselves again. This is not just some wild theory I've dreamed up. I discussed this fact with three different professors and they all agreed.

While the intentions of the food fast were good, I seriously question the effects. If the students want to show their concern, why not help someone in this country where we need it. Couldn't the money from a project such as this be sent somewhere like the Boys Home, the Cancer Foundation, or even Jerry's Kids. We have enough problems at home to solve without trying to continue our efforts as the Great Humanitarians of the World.

Program Congratulated

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank and congratulate the Therapeutic Recreation Organization of Longwood College as well as the various sororities and fraternities on campus who volunteered many hours of their time to make last week end a spectacular success for the disabled citizens of Farmville, Virginia as well as the disabled students of Longwood College. In this, The International Year of the Disabled, it is very important for us to begin to focus in on the capabilities, desire, and needs of our disabled citizens, which are not much different than our own. In one weekend, the Longwood College campus saw a well organized Special Olympics program for the retarded citizens in our community, as well as a competitive wheelchair basketball game, organized to raise funds to send the competitive disabled athletes from Longwood College to regional and national competitions for the physically disabled.

I would also like to commend both Stacie Southwick and Kelly Reeves for their numerous hours spent in organizing these two events. I hope that these events will become annual affairs on the Longwood College campus, and that they will receive the same warm response from the students, faculty and staff as they did this year.

In conclusion, I hope that our concerns and efforts to break down architectural and additional barriers toward the disabled did not cease at the end of these events, and that we will consciously make an effort to focus in on the ability of all individuals and not the disability.

Sincerely
Frank M. Brasile

1981 Gyre Literary Festival

By JACQUILINE BURTON

Longwood's Literary publication, THE GYRE, is sponsoring its annual literary festival. Several events were scheduled to occur during a week-long period for this year's festival.

THE GYRE commenced its 1981 Literary Festival Tuesday, April 14, with a short fiction reading given by Dr. Maurice Duke at 3:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium. Dr. Duke is a professor of American literature at Virginia Commonwealth University, a book-editor for the Richmond Times-Dispatch, and a writer of short stories.

Dr. Duke read four short stories, the inspirations for which were drawn extensively from his personal experiences and curiosities in everyday living. The first of these, "Editor's Choice," is the story of a soft-hearted magazine editor who is approached by one of the countless "literary widows" who is trying to have printed a poem written by her late husband. "Hide and Go Seek," the second story Dr. Duke read, is a surrealistic story of a man hallucinating while sailing alone at sea. The third story, "To Grandmother's House," deals with the psychological anguish of a young Vietnam Veteran in search of the truth concerning his grandmother's insanity—an illness he feels he may have inherited. The final story, "An Act of Contrition," is the ironic account of a crippled man who risks his own life in order to kill his dying brother before he can pray for redemption and die of natural causes.

The second event of the Gyre festival was a poetry reading by Tom O'Grady on Thursday, April 16, at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium. Mr. O'Grady teaches at Hampden-Sydney College and is editor of the HAMPDEN-SYDNEY POETRY REVIEW. He has published two collections of poems, one of which has been translated into French.

Mr. O'Grady, who calls his books "books of forms," agrees with the opinion that form contains meaning. The form of a poem is dictated by what is being said and how it is being said.

As well as explaining his theory of poetry, Mr. O'Grady read a number of poems from his FARMVILLE ELEGIES including: "Parade," "Sally Sitting on a Chestnut Mare," "Sitting Under a Picture of Robert E. Lee in a Little Bar Somewhere in the South of Virginia," "At the Phoenix Slaughterhouse," "Charlie in his Uniform, 1944," and several love lyrics among others.

The next upcoming event of the literary festival will be a reading of original poetry on Wednesday, April 22, at 3:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium. The reading will feature the poems of Longwood faculty, students, and area residents.

Also part of the 1981 Literary Festival is an exhibit of works by artists whose work will appear in THE GYRE this year. This exhibit is located on the second floor of the Bedford art building and is open to the public.

Senior Spotlight

By BRENDA COLEMAN

"Yes, I'm weird—I work with Doozies all summer at Kings Dominion. Everyone thinks I'm crazy, but that's okay. They are the crazy ones—I'm fine."

Even people who are only casually acquainted with senior Joyce Anderson know this is only one of the many off-hand comments Joyce is famous for. Joyce, an elementary education major from Mechanicsville, calls

"There are a lot of things I still want to do before I settle down. I want to live on my own for a little while and adjust to responsibility and independence. I'd like to travel some—write—take some art classes—and have a few flings here and there. Don't put that! Wait a minute—maybe you should—"

Joyce transferred to Longwood from a community college in Richmond as a junior, but because of changes in major and non-transferable credits "I've been here three LONG years! I told everyone I went to Reynolds University—no, pronounce it as the French would. When they would inquire about where the school was, I said "France, of course!" Little did they know that I was referring to J. Sargent Reynolds in Richmond."

"I was interested in speech pathology and Longwood was one of three schools with a joint program with U.Va. I wasn't impressed with Mary Washington, so I came here. I stayed in speech pathology one year—I went out to do a practicum and decided that I didn't want to do it as a career. So I changed my major to elementary education."

"Yes, it took me three years to find myself and I did it without alcohol or pot. Trouble is that I'm still looking... Anyway, I went student teaching last semester and had a great experience. I loved them—and surprisingly they loved me."

Joyce stresses the fact that students should become involved in other activities than academics. "When I first came here, I was shy and my first friends were pretty apathetic—that rubbed off on me. I've gotten active this year and I regret the time I've lost." Activities for Joyce include Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority and co-chairman for the food committee of the recent 1981 Muscular Dystrophy Superdance. "I'm also a member of the BSU—my job is to be the extension operator for a Dial-A-Prayer because I never go."

Joyce had to think a moment before making her closing comments. "I've enjoyed by years at Longwood—the good times and bad. One drink and I don't remember any of it... Seriously, I've matured a great deal and I needed that. I've made a lot of friends and that is what I'll be taking with me."

herself a "very wordy source of entertainment never to be taken seriously." However humorous Joyce may be at times, she is a sincere and honest person that looks at life tongue-in-cheek.

"On May 16, 1981, I plan to hopefully graduate from Longwood College. After that is one big question mark. My parents have been waiting about 17 years to see what my future would be—they would like to know—so would I!"

"Seriously I want to teach for two to three years—no longer than five. During this time I hope to be working on my Masters'. Perhaps after three years I'll return full-time to school to get my degree instead of dragging it out. Right now I am leaning toward guidance counseling or administration and someday I want my doctorate in one of those two areas."

When asked about future plans in other areas, Joyce was quick to respond. "In the area of romance, I'm still reading Harlequin Romances, wondering where I went wrong. I know—I read the Joy of Cooking instead of the Joy of Sex—maybe I've got the wrong things cooking..."

Review

By JODI KERSEY And NEIL SAWYER

If anyone attended "The Comedy of Errors" performed by The Longwood Players expecting to see a typical Shakesperian fine arts dramatization, they didn't find it on stage in Jarman Auditorium from April 15th-18th. That is not to say, however, that attendance would have been wasted. Under the direction of Dr. Patton Lockwood, the liberally executed acting of the cast served to make the last play of the semester an extremely entertaining amateur production.

The fatal flaw of the play was the lack of transition from character to actor. The transition which should have taken place between the setting up of the stage and the actual play did not seem to completely develop. Therefore, many of the veteran actors were playing their parts professionally while the great number of new comers insisted on being themselves, hamming on the stage instead of striving to be actors. This was the major disappointment in the play. The actors had a one to one rapport with the audience, but numerous occasions suggested laughing with the person, not the character.

Characters in this play who should be highlighted are Ross Connor portraying Dromio of Syracuse and Sherry Forbes portraying Adriana. Connor succeeded on stage mainly through hamming much of the time instead of acting, but his presence on stage caught the total attention of the audience. Nevertheless, there were times when one was tempted to agree "Come, Dromio, these jests are out of season"! Sherry Forbes performance was as equally intriguing in the play. Through mature acting, not hamming, Forbes displayed a believable character as Adriana.

The set for "The Comedy of Errors" was light and fit the comedy play perfectly. The costumes were hard to adjust to when mixing theatrical costumes with cords and top siders. However, the use of masks was the main theatrical asset concerning the visual aspect of the play.

Art Historian Symposium

By JOE JOHNSON

The fourth annual symposium for Art Historians in the Virginia area was held on Friday, April 17, in Bedford Auditorium.

Sponsored by the Longwood Fine Arts Center and the Department of Art, "the symposium gave us a chance to meet new Art Historians, exchange ideas on class teaching procedures and research and even make new friends... it combined the social and professional!" said Dr. Elisabeth Flynn.

The day began with Richard C. Flint's lecture entitled "Punch's satire of Aubrey Beardsley." Dr. Flint is an instructor of Art History at Virginia Commonwealth University. Dr. Flint's paper focused on the distinctive spirit of Punch's (an English satirical journal) critical treatment of Beardsley and his art.

His lecture was followed by Gerard Maurice Doyon's talk on "Why so few Women Artists in the History of French Art. Doyon is presently chairman of the Art Division and professor of Art History at the Washington and Lee University. Doyon's lecture dealt with several critical questions concerning women's role in art. It was well illustrated with color slides. Although the subject was treated with lightness and humor, it leaves one with serious thoughts concerning the exclusion of French women as artists and the profusion of French women as subjects of that art.

After a small break, Betsy Fahlam gave a lecture entitled "An American in Paris; the Art of Guy Pene du Bois in the 1920's." Fahlam is an instructor for the Art Department at Old Dominion University. In her lecture Fahlam explained how Guy du Bois' art, as well as his life, reflected the internationalism of the period.

Jerri Pike from the Virginia Polytechnic Institute gave a lecture entitled "Attic Black-Figure: A Vase, A Grafitto and a Workshop." Dr. Pike's talk had a three fold purpose: 1) to attribute the vase to its rightful workshop and painter, 2) to demonstrate how not only the style of the figure—drawing, but also the shape of the vase and its floral decoration are support for the attribution, and 3) to discuss the subject matter of the vase which was Athena, Apollo and Dionysus.

After lunch the symposium continued with Sharon G. Jones talk on "The Iconography of an American Relic: George Washington's Masonic Apron." The lecture dealt with Washington's Masonic Apron which was an almost sacred cloth worn during the solemn rituals of a Society known as Free Masonry. Jones identified the main elements of Washington's Apron and compared them with other major works of art from the 18th and 19th century.

Michael T. Gilliath then gave a lecture on "The Art Nouveau Movement: Virginia's Contribution." He is now teaching at the Virginia State University in Petersburg. Gilliath's lecture dealt with the contribution of Ella Louthan to the short lived Art Nouveau movement. He frequently surpasses the examples of the Art Nouveau movement which are preserved in museums.

Charles E. Scillia gave his lecture on "Leonardo, Loderico, and the Mulberry." Scillia is an educator at the Old Dominion University. The paper dealt with a comparison of Leonardo Da Vinci's work and Loderico's work and their use of the Mulberry tree as a decorative vegetation and a symbolic representation of their personal, political and dynastic ambitions.

The final lecture was given by Kenneth A. White. The paper was entitled "The Urbanism of Teotilancan."

White gave a lecture on the culture of Mexican Middle America. The talk covered the earliest times of Circa 1500 B.C., up until the conquest in 1521. He also gave interesting details on the site of Teotilancan, it's urbanism, palaces, pottery and frescoes.

Art Department Purchase Awards

By JOE JOHNSON

The winner for this year's junior Art Department Purchase Award is Carol Cordes with an oil painting entitled "Coral Reef". The winner for this year's Alumni Association Purchase Award is Elizabeth Jones with an ink wash entitled "Orchid."

Both these works were selected from the works of 19 junior art majors at Longwood which are on display in the Lancaster Library Gallery through April 30.

Among the great variety of works on exhibit are: paintings in oil and acrylic; etchings, some handcolored; drawings in pencil, pen and ink, and pastels; linoleum block and silkscreen prints; watercolors; photographs; weavings; wood sculptures and shadow boxes; handmade paper castings; ceramics and stoneware; a basket made of pine needles and corn shucks; and an intriguing mixed media sculpture composed of old soft drink crates, alphabet blocks and pieces from children's games.

Each year, as part of their course of study, junior art education and studio art majors are required to submit a selection of eight to 12 works executed in any studio class at Longwood. The works are juried by the Junior Art Exhibit Committee, chaired by Barbara Bishop and Randall Edmonson of the art department faculty, Nancy Shelton, Director of the Alumni Services and Student representative, Lisa Cumbey.

Two or more purchase awards, by the Longwood Alumni Association and the department of art, are made each year from the junior art majors exhibit.

The exhibit is open to the public, and many of the works are for sale. Library gallery hours are: Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 110 p.m.; Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Saturday, 1 to 5 p.m.; and Sunday, 2 to 10 p.m.

Sports Editor's Turn

Once again, a controversial issue has come about that I feel needs to be addressed. That issue is immaturity; specifically on the part of former Basketball coach, Dr. Ron Bash.

By now most of you have read the article in the Richmond Times Dispatch featuring Ron Bash. This article, in my estimation, should never have to cross the gaze of a civilized human being. This is only a way for a distraught cry-baby to dishonor Longwood College.

The only analogy I can draw from the situation is the spoiled child who doesn't get his way, while playing with friends, who disgustingly grabs his bat and his ball and his glove and goes home depriving others of the pleasure of participating in a sporting event.

Actions such as those of Dr. Bash, certainly dishonor the name of the majority of coaches who really attempt to get along with others and treat their players as human beings, instead of using them as pawns in a no-win game of chess.

If I sound as if I'm biased for Longwood, I am. I played softball with Dr. Bash this past summer and discovered what a real egotist he is. This over-endorsement of ego is used as a weapon against those whom Dr. Bash has wrongly mistaken as his lessers.

I have two final points. One, if I was Dr. Bash's next employer I would be careful of him attempting to also stab me in the back. Two, good-bye, Dr. Bash, and good riddance.

Player Of The Week

By LISA SPENCER

Junior Kathy Idelson qualified for and participated in the finals of the AIAW Division II Gymnastics Nationals, winning an eighth place in the balance beam out of over 100 original participants.

For her accomplishments, the gymnast has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period April 4-11. This was the third time this year Idelson has been named to this honor.

Idelson's confidence and experience contributed a great deal to her ability to compete well in the high-pressure national championships—it was her third trip in as many years.

"At any national level meet, the pressure is tremendous, and Kathy proved herself more than capable of handling this pressure," observed Coach Ruth

Budd. "She performed with poise and confidence and did a super job of competing with the top gymnasts in the nation."

In her first year of gymnastics at Longwood, Kathy earned the title of All-America with a seventh place finish in floor exercise at nationals. Last season she placed 13th in beam and 14th in floor. Her preliminary all-around score (33.15) at this year's tournament was her second highest of the season.

Idelson was a steady performer for the Longwood team all season, winning four all-around titles in eight meets. She placed fourth in all-around and floor at the state tournament and fourth in vaulting and bars at regionals.

A dean's List student, Kathy majors in Spanish. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Idelson of Annapolis.

Riding Finishes Today

From Sports Info

The riding team finished up this season's competition with two meets that qualified five members for the regional tournament which will be held April 21 at the University of Virginia. The April 1 show at William & Mary qualified Bryan Farrar and Beth Wiley for post-season action. Farrar placed second in Novice over fences and sixth in Novice on the Flat. Wiley took first place in the Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter category.

Other finishers for Longwood at William & Mary were: Carol Gardner—2nd Open over fences and 5th Open on the Flat; Pam Svoboda—4th Open over Fences and 6th Open on the Flat; Jennifer Ferguson—3rd Open on the Flat and 5th Open over Fences; Robin Walker—5th Open on the Flat and Kathy Redmon—6th Open on the Flat.

Longwood placed second out of nine teams and was the reserve High Point Team at a home show co-hosted by Mary Washington April 5. Pam Svoboda earned Reserve High Point Rider of the show with a 1st place finish in Open on the Flat and a 2nd place in Open over Fences.

Farrar also took a first place, winning Novice on the Flat and placing third in Open over fences. Also placing were: Redmon—3rd Open on the Flat and 5th Open over Fences; Gardner—4th Open over Fences and 4th Open on the Flat; Ferguson—4th Open over Fences and 6th Open on the Flat; Walker—3rd Novice over Fences and 4th Open on the Flat and Wiley—2nd Novice on the Flat.

The final three qualifiers for the regional show were Kathy Redmon, Pam Svoboda, and Shannon Chambers.

Professor Bobbitt Honored

By CHERYL WILCOX

Dr. Eleanor W. Bobbitt, professor of Health and Physical Education at Longwood College, is the recipient of the prestigious Honor Award from the Southern District of the American Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance.

This award is the highest honor given by the SDAHPERD. It was presented to Dr. Bobbitt during the organization's annual convention in Orlando, Florida.

Dr. Bobbitt also accepted the gavel as president of the Southern District at the convention. Dr. Bobbitt was nominated from the floor and elected because of her credentials: successful leadership, personal integrity and reputation as a teacher. Including 13 states, Southern District membership totals approximately 10,000. Dr. Bobbitt is the 50th president of the Southern District and the fourth person from Virginia to hold this office.

Dr. Bobbitt, a Longwood alumna, has been a member of the Longwood faculty since 1954. In 1977, she received the college's Faculty Recognition Award for "professional excellence and devoted service to students".

In addition to her teaching duties at Longwood, she has conducted numerous in-service workshops for elementary teachers, focusing on perceptual motor activities and exercises which develop math and reading readiness.

She served as past president of the Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance in 1974-75 and received that organization's Distinguished Service Award. She has also held many offices in the VAIWA and the Tidewater Field Hockey Association.

"Awards come to Eleanor Bobbitt because she cares about people, and she works with them and for them; she has an intellectual grasp of her profession and has developed leadership skills that enable her to guide others to meet their goals". Dr. Bobbitt is a great asset to the Longwood community and we are all extremely proud of her accomplishments.

Go Lacrosse

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's women's lacrosse team tied Lynchburg (5-5), fell to Division I power James Madison (12-6), and tied Bridgewater (8-7) last week to bring its record to 5-3-1 overall and 5-1-1 in VAIWA Division III.

The Lady Lancers will finish their regular season Tuesday as they host conference foe Randolph-Macon Women's College. On April 24-25 they will participate in the State Lacrosse Tournament at Lynchburg. Longwood will be informed of their seeding at the tournament late Monday night. Says Coach Jane Miller, "We expect to receive a high seeding as a result of our successful conference record."

"Our ability to come up from behind to win will help us in the State Tournament", says Coach Miller. The Lady Lancers trailed Lynchburg 2-4 and Bridgewater 4-5 at halftime to finish with a tie and a win, respectively.

Balanced scoring has also helped the Lady Lancers. Six players who have been consistent in scoring include Chris Mayer with 21 goals, Mary King with 10, Jo Jacobs, Denise Snader and B.J. Casey with 8 each and Cindy Droseski with 6.

The JV lacrosse team is also enjoying a successful season. They hold a 6-1-1 overall record and are undefeated (6-0) in conference play.

Come out and support the Lady Lancers in their last home game, 3:00 p.m. at Second Avenue field.

Dr. Greenwood Held Open Forum

By JODI KERSEY

Dr. Greenwood was present Thursday, April 23, for an open forum to discuss her position concerning Longwood at this time. Dr. Greenwood began by telling the audience why she was interested in Longwood. She said from sources in and out of the state of Virginia, Longwood was considered to have a strong base and potential for the future, excellent faculty and valued traditions. Dr. Greenwood said she considered Longwood to be a manageable institution with a real sense of community.

Dr. Greenwood continued the forum by discussing some of her major priorities for Longwood. Two areas which she felt were very important to emphasize at the college were the Public Affairs Office and the Office of Institutional Advancement.

The major program Dr. Greenwood plans to introduce this fall is a capitol drive for Longwood, accomplished by school-wide involvement or Greenwood said she felt that the areas most needing attention were fund raising and public image building for the college.

Archeology Dig Concludes

By JODI KERSEY

Dr. James Jordan and the students from Longwood have completed their archeology dig at Hampden-Sydney. Many questions are still unanswered concerning the brick features inside one room of the slave cabin where they have been excavating. Dr. Jordan said the remaining investigation will be turned over to the two historical archeologists from William and Mary who will visit Hampden-Sydney soon to try to distinguish the purpose of the unusual pits inside the cabin.

The area has been left exposed with the brick features intact, in order for the archeologists from William and Mary to get a clear view of the total structure.

Dr. Jordan commented that now that the brick pits have been excavated, there seems to be a specific purpose for their presence. "The area is divided into quarters, said Dr. Jordan, just as an archeologist divides a room when excavating." The theory is that these pits were built for a reason and possibly the historical archeologists from William and Mary will be able to solve the many questions concerning the cabin.

Longwood's participation in the dig ended last Thursday and no one is expected to excavate the area any further unless something significant arises when the historical archeologists visit Hampden-Sydney.

Dr. Jordan and Robert Taylor, a local patron of archeology, discuss theories about the cabin as the dig concluded last Thursday.

Cristo Boasts Longwood Impact

By MARK K. SEGAL

In November of 1979, Dr. Anthony B. Cristo, professor of economics at Longwood, first incorporated a local Market Basket study in the Farmville area. The study, through economics classes' participation keeps a monthly tab on 72 locally priced food items taken from the four leading supermarket chains and one independent. The results can be correlated with the other areas of the state that are studied — Northern Virginia, Richmond and the Tidewater area.

But what makes the Farmville study unique is that it is funded privately by the Longwood College Foundation Inc. The other three major areas are funded publicly through the State Department of Labor and Industry. Cristo believes that this is the only study of its kind in the country.

There is a second study also: The Longwood College Impact study. This study accounts for the entire economic impact Longwood has on the Farmville area. This includes: the income generated by the 1150 jobs created by Longwood; what students spend; student banking; college activities that generate outside income, and many more factors. All of these are added up and the impact Longwood has on Farmville has been exacted to $9,774,126.

But Cristo has not ended yet. He has also included a "Trivia Basket," a survey which has been conducted for the last two quarters. The Trivia Basket is new and the only one of its kind in the state. It is made up of non-food items which take a large part of the consumer's dollar.

Since there are no other Trivia Baskets in the state, these figures can not be compared to any others. But it is a new idea that Cristo hopes will give other areas incentive to start one. Meanwhile the figures can only be used to compare the fluctuation of non-food items in the Farmville area.

On Tuesday evening, April 21, the Economic Seminar class hosted an open house to release information from the impact study for the first time.

"I expected over 250 people to attend...only some 50 people were there," including the class, said Cristo.

"I'd think the merchants would care enough to find out the enormous impact Longwood has." The college provides one out of six jobs in Farmville.

Cristo went on to explain that Longwood can make or break the town. "If the students boycotted the local businesses, and shopped elsewhere...then I'd think they would realize."

Cristo believes his study proves that Longwood deserves a lot more political clout than it receives.

"According to a Supreme Court decision," says Cristo, "Longwood is allowed a seat in the Town Council." He also said Longwood students are entitled to vote in local elections.

Now Cristo believes that the studies can provide more political clout for Longwood.

Aside from Cristo's qualms with Farmville, through his guidance in conjunction with his students, Farmville is now the only rural area currently being economically monitored.

This summer Cristo will write, and have published, two monographs recording the findings. Each monograph will be paid for by the Longwood College Foundation and be written on the Market Basket, and impact study separately. They will be distributed throughout colleges and universities in the Southeastern United States.

Your Turn

Review Criticized

Dear Editor:

I think it is rather sad that the ROTUNDA finds it impossible to get a truly qualified person (or persons) to write the drama review for the paper. If the director, actors, and crews have taken the time to do a performance, I feel they are entitled to a fair review by an unbiased critic, which this year, they have not had.

Neil Sawyer and Jodi Kersey had no trouble finding fault with nearly every aspect of the play from costumes to acting but with a little investigating, they could have found the significance behind the costuming, some strong points in acting, and the advantage of doing a "non-traditional" Shakespearean play.

The biggest fault of the review seems to be in the belief that it must be as uncompromising as possible. Certainly every production will have its faults and not everyone will appreciate every play but surely there is some good with the bad and I see no reason why Mr. Sawyer and Ms. Kersey failed to acknowledge this point. Every actor appreciates and deserves praise for merely having the desire to get up on stage and I firmly believe that those involved with "The Comedy of Errors" were slighted in not receiving any. Although the ROTUNDA needs a review of the Longwood productions, if they are unable to do any more than criticize, I fail to see the purpose.

Thank goodness Mr. Sawyer and Ms. Kersey were the exceptions and not the rule regarding those who attended the play. The support was overwhelming every night and those of you who found it not beneath you to watch-and enjoy-an "amateur" production, I thank you.

Sincerely,
Tamara D. Nash

Review Defended

When I started writing for the Rotunda, I was determined to put an end to play reviews that did nothing more than tell what the play was about and bolster the egos of those who thrive on seeing their names in print.

I'm sorry you found our review so displeasurable. After a lot of rereading and thought, I also see many things that could be improved upon. I would like to attempt to set these things straight now. My use of the term, "fatal flaw" conveys the wrong message; that I thought the play died because of the lack of transition from actor to character. The lack of transition was a disappointment but the play was still very enjoyable despite that problem.

Another thing I would like to set straight is the impression I gave that Ross Connor did not do a good job of acting. On a campus this size there are always people that identify with the person more than with his character, but even with this obstacle, Ross Connor was a truly bright spot in the production.

I agree with you that it is a shame that we couldn't find someone more qualified to review this play but we tried. Jodi Kersey had asked qualified teachers from Longwood to do the review and was turned down.

Because I try to do my best work and stand by it there are certain points in my review that I refuse to retract. The production was amateur—not meaning that it was bad, but that it did not exhibit the same professionalism that the other plays of this school year had. I'm not in the business of dishing out praise to anyone who has the desire to act. How fair am I to those who earn praise for exceptional acting if I throw it out to anyone who walks across Jarman stage? You should count yourself lucky because while I found the play, "An extremely entertaining amateur production", a more qualified person like say a New York Times drama critic might have found it pure trash. Granted this was not a Broadway production, but when discussing college productions, we are ideally discussing preparation for the professional world of drama where you either learn to take good and bad criticism or "Get the Hell out of the Theater".

Any actor who would let criticism stop him from performing on stage probably has no business on stage to begin with. The reward to a true actor is not to see his name in print but the feeling of accomplishment that comes from inside him. By demanding praise for your mere presence you slight those actors who have earned praise.

Those in the cast of "The Comedy of Errors" who were mature enough to listen openly to peer criticism and maybe learn from it, thank you. You help make a hard job of reviewing a little easier.

Yes, I think it is a shame that those qualified people who find it easier to set in judgment of those who try rather than having the guts to do it themselves. I refuse to compliment acting which is not of the same caliber as that which I've seen in past productions.

In the future, those of you who eagerly await the newest issue of the paper to see your hard work rewarded by lavish praise don't consider a career in drama. It is not that your work wasn't hard but that in the real world much good work goes unnoticed. Let me be the first to tell you, in the real world, "you can't always get what you want".

Disgusting Tables

By CONNIE FALLON

As a student working my way through college, I expect to come upon a few hardships now and then. Last Friday I ran into one of the biggest messes I've ever seen, the Longwood College Dining Hall after Friday lunch. Now personally I don't mind working in the dining hall. It's a lot more interesting than typing, and I can say "hi" to my friends while I work. Unfortunately, though, some of my fellow students continually seek to make my job unpleasant. I am specifically referring to those students who find it their duty to leave their trays on the tables after buffet style meals.

Now, contrary to popular belief, it is not the job of the student workers to clean up such massive amounts of dirty dishes. We are supposed to check the tables for cleanliness and if necessary change the tablecloths. This would not be difficult and would only take a few minutes. But on Friday, due to the amount of dishes I had to remove from tables, I missed my 1:30 class. I did not appreciate it in the least. In truth, I was very angry about it. It seems kind of ironic that I was working cleaning tables to pay for a class I never made it to. I'm not the only student working in the dining hall that feels this way, but I do seem to be the only one who's willing to say something about it.

One thing though that these inconsiderate students don't realize is that by continually doing this they are only hurting themselves. When conditions for student workers become this bad, they would rather not work. Doris Carey finds it difficult to get students to work. When this happens, the kitchen staff must be paid extra to clean up the mess. This extra money, as I was told by Mr. Inge and Mr. Yeatts, would otherwise be used for food for students.

So the next time you complain about the food in the dining hall, and how the cost of room and board keeps going up, stop and think of how many times you paid someone to clean up what would take you less than sixty seconds to do yourself.

Fast Support

Dear Editor,

I would like to respond to the commentary written by Barry Driver concerning the school-wide fast held last Wednesday night. Mr. Driver raised the question that if Longwood's students want to show their concern for people, why don't they help someone in this country? In regard to this there have been many drives on Longwood campus directed toward at-home causes such as the Muscular Dystrophy Superdance, the Swing-a-thon and the Rock-a-thon. The school-wide fast is an effort to go beyond ourselves to help those in countries not as blessed as ours.

Finally, concerning Mr. Driver's complaint that the money collected will not reach the hungry mouths, I would like to say that this depends on the organization. It is true that paragon governmental organizations are often inefficient at getting aid to the people who need it. But there are many organizations not hampered by governmental ties (and therefore not mentioned in the Wall Street Journal article), which have proven records of not only helping people when they are hungry, but also of teaching them how to feed themselves in the future. One of the best known of these is World Vision International, which is allowed to work in many Third World countries where no other organizations are let in, simply because it is recognized for doing a good job.

I would like to thank all those who participated in the fast.

Hevener Writes Handbook

By BRENDA COLEMAN

Dr. Fillmer Hevener, Jr., has researched and authored a handbook entitled Successful Student Teaching: A Handbook For Elementary and Secondary Student Teachers. Dr. Hevener, professor of English, calls his handbook "a concise, practical, informational guide designed to help steer the college student through the intricacies of student teaching as smoothly as possible."

And indeed the handbook is concise, practical, and informative. For the budding student teacher (of which this reporter is in secondary education English), this handbook covers such pertinent topics as the purpose of student teaching, keeping fit, and classroom management. The textbook, published by Century 21 Publishing of Saratoga, California, was marketed on March 15.

The text of the handbook is written in a clear, concise manner devoid of the technical jargon that clutters many methods textbooks. Instead of presenting idealized situations solved by equally idealized solutions, Dr. Hevener covers real problems that crop up in the classroom and suggests possible answers and/or solutions to these problems. This future student teacher reporter appreciates these blunt and to the point observations that are so different from the run-around impracticalities taught in some student teaching classes.

Successful Student Teaching is available from Dr. Hevener in Grainger 003 for the introductory price of $7.50. It may also be ordered from the publisher for $9.95 including postage.

Simkins Lecture

Featured

Lucas Foss

By JOE JOHNSON

"Disco is rather sadistic...like your head being banged on pavement" said Lucas Foss fielding one of the many questions he received on his lecture entitled "Music Making Today".

The lecture which was held April 14, 1981 in Wygal Auditorium, was part of the Francis Butler Simkins Lecture Series. The series is in honor of Dr. Simkins who was known throughout the country as one of the most profound and perceptive students of social, political and religious history of the south.

The lecture began with a piece composed and directed by Lucas Foss and sung by the Camerata singers. The piece entitled "Behold, I build a house" was a hauntingly beautiful synthesis of the electronic organ and the human voice.

Mr. Foss talked on the difficulty of being a conductor and composer in American Society today. He was careful to point out that there is a very real difference between the two fields. "A composer doesn't think of a career, just working...you don't worry about what people say or how many performances you give. A conductor has a career...it matters whether and what people say...he is at the mercy of his orchestra."

Mr. Foss also pointed out the enormous power the critics have in today's society. "The critic is the truly powerful one...they can literally re-write history." He went on to point out many of the fallacies of that power. "The trouble with critics is they know one one hundredth of what the performers know, but they come to hide it under a veneer of contempt...respect doesn't sell papers, insults do."

Another point made in the lecture was the need for innovation in music on one hand and the need for security and familiar pieces on the other. "Man wants a foot in the past and a foot in the present and future."

He further explained that to achieve this seeming paradox the student of music should be well grounded in all forms of music from the Medieval to Modern. "The more you learn the more you are in position to make your mark. Inspiration never falls into a blank mind."

In conclusion, he gave some recommendations to music education majors: "teachers must live what they are communicating, the student must be important to him...try to have at least one good professor if you want to be a good music teacher."

Mr. Foss has been a moving force in the world of music for over thirty years. He currently directs both the Milwaukee Symphony and the Brooklyn Philharmonic. To date he has composed some seventy-five works, one of which was based on Carl Sandburg's "Prairie", a work that brought him immediate recognition.

Robbin Thompson

Concert Well Received

By ALAN NUSS

Last Wednesday night the Robbin Thompson Band performed for a near full house at Jarman Auditorium. Even though the band came on stage late, they made up for it by playing until almost 11:30 that night, with about a thirty-minute break after the first set.

The Robbin Thompson Band, which was formed in 1978, is made up of five very talented musicians, the least of which is Robbin himself. As one woman was heard to say, "all he's got is his voice and his body, nothing more." Two outstanding performances were given by Eric Heiberg, on keyboards and Velpo Robertson on lead guitar. Both of these men had several solo opportunities to show the audience their superb talent and skill with their respective instruments. The final two members of the group were Mike Lanning, playing bass guitar and Bob Antonelli on drums.

About ninety minutes before the show, Robbin Thompson and Bob Antonelli gave an interview for WUTA program director Laura Carroll. The interview was broadcast live as it was done and gave those that were listening an idea of what the show was to be like. Robbin seemed to be a laid back person as opposed to Bob who was a very funny guy. One lady liked what Bob said so much she called up the radio station during the interview just to talk to him.

The concert itself was slow getting off the ground. In the dim lights of the stage the band came out and tuned their instruments for about five minutes before they opened with their first song, "Melinda," which drew light applause. After another song, the band got the audience going somewhat with "Barroom Romance" which was well received. The next popular tune they played was the theme song from CBS's "The Jeffersons" — "Moving On Up." Just before the band took a break they did "Brown Bag Rag" which was a jazzy-hillbilly tune about the North Carolina ABC laws, which went over very well with everybody.

After the break, the band played eight more songs until they got to "Candy Apple Red" and "Sweet Virginia Breeze" whereupon the audience rose to its feet and shouted and clapped to show its approval. These two songs were by far the best minutes of the entire performance. After "Breeze," the show ended, but the band came back for one encore number of "Bright Eyes" which got everybody back upon their feet and clapping and dancing in the aisles. After a nine-minute version of "Bright Eyes," the band thanked the audience, took their well deserved bows and said a final goodnight. Even though the concert started slowly, it ended very well.

Griffith Performs

By PAUL GILLESPIE

Top 40 rock and roll includes some good listening, but sometimes you get the feeling that you've had a little too much sleaze and cynicism from it. You get the feeling that you'd like something beautiful for a change, something deep, inspiring... yet with room for something just a little bit crazy.

One answer to that craving is a concert by Nancy Griffith, as in the one that went on April 21 at the Lankford mall. Labels given her material vary from "folk" to progressive country. At any rate, her act left no cause to add "boring" to the list. She opened the show with the Gordon Lightfoot classic, "Did She Mention My Name?" which she did with a clear, powerful voice that could grab your attention and not let go for an instant. Later came "Alabama Soft Spoken Blues," a deep, soothing work with guitar work reminiscent of Lightfoot or one of the more laid-back classics from the rock group "Yes." Another '60's classic, "Don't Think Twice" soon followed offering all the power and feeling of Bob Dylan at his prime.

On the lighter side was "Cold Heart, Closed Mind" which she said had "punk" leanings... probably because of the jerky tempo and sheer energy she threw into it that made sitting still almost impossible. Also fun was her rendering of Mike Williams' "Witchita Falls," done in a bold, keen-edged guitarless solo from start to finish that left the listener wondering what was next.

Miss Griffith ordered songs that stated personal feelings as well, along with comments to the audience that could make you wish you knew her personally. She introduced the song "When Your Heart Goes Out Flying" by commenting that probably "everyone has a hero," and that one of hers is Carolyn Hester, "one of the first folk singers to cross over from the beat generation." The song itself told of Hester's gentleness and wisdom, and lovingly insisted that "You still shine, just like the first time I heard you..." A personal warmth came through in "There's A Light Beyond These Woods" as well, as Miss Griffith sang of times that an old friend spent with her dreaming of all the great hopes they had for the future. The vocals here were soothing yet strong, giving a vivid sense of always holding on to the dream that you know won't be hopeless when its time comes.

Artist Of The Month

Theresa Mendez, of Farmville, has been named Studio "Artist of the Month" for the month of April by the Longwood College Art Department.

A sophomore at Longwood, Miss Mendez is working toward the Bachelor of Fine Arts degree with a Concentration in Crafts. Her prize-winning work is a hand woven beach jacket. The jacket was woven on a four-harness loom using hand dyed tobacco twine and carpet warp, both 100 per cent cotton.

She receives a $50 cash prize and her work is featured on the "Artist of the Month" bulletin board in Bedford.

Awards for the best Art history term paper were also presented to Elizabeth Jones and Pamela Mayo. Pamela, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Mayo is a senior Art History Major at Longwood College. She plans to receive a Bachelor of Fine Arts Degree with a concentration in Art History and then to graduate work at Hofstra University in Long Island, N.Y., where she will study appraisal of fine art.

Pamela is the recipient of two scholarships (History Department Scholarship and the Hargrett Scholarship). She is also a member of Alpha Lambda Delta (freshman honorary society) and Phi Kappa Phi (National Honorary society). Recently she has completed an Honors Paper entitled, "Lue Osborne and Cordray Simmons, Pioneers in Acrylic Paints." She has also given a talk on the subject at the Senior Art History Lecture, March 16, 1981.

The winning term paper was on the Gobelins, 16th and 17th century Parisian tapestry makers.

Elizabeth Jones is a Senior Art Major from Arvonnia, Virginia. She received an art scholarship to Longwood College her freshman year. She is a studio art major with a concentration in painting and has a minor in Art History. Liz recently won the Alumni Association Purchase Award in the Junior Art Exhibit with an ink wash entitled "Orchid." Her interest in Art History began in her freshman year after having taken survey Art History and she looks forward to her European Art History trip this summer.

Liz served on an evaluation committee for the accreditation for the National Association of the Schools of Art for Longwood College. She is a member of Alpha Lambda Delta honorary fraternity and Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority. She was publicity co-chairman for the Miss Longwood Pageant 1981.

Couple Begins Graduate School

By BRENDA COLEMAN

On June 6, 1981 Kathy Lance and Gary Riley, two of Longwood's graduating physics majors, will be getting married. The unusual thing is that these two young people met here at Longwood, are graduating with the same major, and both have been accepted to Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, New York to begin graduate work this fall.

Gary, a native of Honolulu, Hawaii, served in the US Air Force working in Severe Weather Forecasting for the Continental United States Department before coming to Longwood. "I had just gotten out of the Air Force and was looking for something to do. I saw a PBS presentation of 'Key to the Universe' that centered on astrophysics. That subject really interested me a great deal so I decided to enroll in classes at Longwood. My family was in Crews at that time because my father, who was a retired Air Force veteran had gotten a job teaching at a local high school."

Kathy stumbled into her major by accident also. "I did a report on biophysics in my physics class in high school. I really enjoyed researching for the report and decided that was what I wanted to major in in college. I wanted to go to a small school far away from my native state. I had received a brochure on Longwood College and I liked what I saw."

Home for Kathy is Milford, New Jersey. Her physics concentration is in Pre-Medicine and Biophysics and she plans for at least her masters in biophysics involving muscle tissue at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. She has maintained a B+ average during her four years here and is a member of Lynchos, the mathematics and science honorary.

While at Longwood, Gary was selected by the University of Chicago's Argonne National Laboratory for a semester of research in its Student Research Participation Program. However, Gary has declined this opportunity in order to begin his research at RPI. Gary's physics concentration and research centers around the astrophysics area involving interstellar spectroscopy. He plans to get his Ph.D. He is a member of Lynchos, Phi Kappa Phi, and Pi Mu Epsilon, the mathematics honorary and has maintained an A- average in his academic work here at Longwood.

Both are extremely happy with their career choices. Gary stated, "We'd like to see more intensity in the science programs here. Some of the courses are watered down. But we have the basics now and we will take it from there." Come June 6, they will be taking it from there together.

Crosby, Bolding, Harris, Dayton Win Awards

From Sports Info

Baseball and field hockey reaped the Lion's share of awards at the Longwood College Athletic Banquet Monday night. Baseball's John Crosby (RICHMOND) was named Male Athlete of the Year and Charles (Buddy) Bolding (BEDFORD) Male Coach of the Year. Field hockey star Julie Dayton (LAUREL, DE) was named Female Athlete of the Year and hockey coach Dr. Bette Harris (FISHERSVILLE) was chosen Female Coach of the Year.

Crosby, a Lancer tri-captain the past two years, holds numerous national records in base-stealing. The all-time leading base thief in college baseball history (139 steals in 150 attempts), Crosby holds college division (NCAA II & III and NAIA) records for career steals (139), steals in the regular season (62) and steals in a game (8). The senior, a graduate of Armstrong High School, also has an overall GPA of 3.2. He batted .327 in his career at Longwood with 106 runs, 93 hits, 46 RBI's and 59 walks.

Bolding led Longwood to a record of 21-12 through games of April 22 and has a career record of 56-35 in three years at the helm. He came to Longwood in 1978 inheriting a team that went 0-13 the year before and has since turned in seasons of 16-12 and 19-11. Bolding was a highly successful high school coach at Stanton River in Bedford County before taking over as Longwood baseball coach.

Dayton, a senior physical education major, was a standout athlete in both lacrosse (3 years) and field hockey (4 years). An All-State player in Division I field hockey last fall she was named an All-American in Lacrosse in June, 1980 when she was one of 36 players picked for the national lacrosse squad. Dayton was unable to play lacrosse this spring because of a student teaching commitment.

Dayton, an aggressive athlete who uses her quickness to good advantage, scored 53 goals in lacrosse last year and led the hockey team to an 11-7 mark with 14 goals. She ranks as one of Longwood's finest two-sport athletes ever and the college's first lacrosse All-American.

Dr. Harris has built up the Longwood field hockey program since her arrival in 1979. The Lady Lancers were 5-9-2 the year before she came and 3-11-3 in her first year. Last fall the Harris-coached team turned in a 9-4 regular season record and qualified for the regional tournament, finishing with an 11-7 record overall.

Harris had coached previously at Washington State University, James Madison and Sam Houston

State University. Also noted for her ability as a women's basketball official, Harris has twice officiated the AIAW Division I national championship contest, most recently this year. Over 200 athletes were recognized at the banquet and special awards were presented to retiring women's tennis coach Phyllis Harriss (19 years as head coach) and outgoing President Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., for their service to and support of athletics. Dr. Willett was guest speaker for the event.

Overall, Longwood teams compiled a record of 121-101-1 in 1980-81.

Lacrosse Wins State Title

From Sports Info

Aided by a goalie save from Janice Johnson, (DILLWYN) with just 12 seconds left to play, Longwood's women's lacrosse team defeated Bridgewater Saturday 6-5 to claim the VAAW Division III Lacrosse Tournament championship. The tournament was held at Lynchburg College.

Now 9-3-1, Longwood earned an automatic berth in the AIAW Division III National Tournament May 14-16 at Penn State University. Coach Jane Miller's team has now compiled a 9-1-1 mark against Division III teams this season.

Longwood defeated Sweet Briar 4-2 and Lynchburg 6-4 Friday to set up Saturday's meeting with Bridgewater for the title. The Lady Lancers had a 6-5 lead late in the game when Bridgewater was awarded a free shot at the goal. Johnson, going one-on-one with the Bridgewater player, knocked away the attempt to preserve the victory.

Miller's team won Longwood's first ever state title in lacrosse with Saturday's win, and the coach expressed pride in her players.

"I am really proud of our team and the way they conducted themselves both on and off the field," said the coach. "They were a real credit to Longwood College. We are probably the most poised and patient team in Division III. We don't have any flashy players or stars. Everyone contributes."

Six players have been consistent scorers for Longwood. Chris Mayer (STONY BROOK, NY) has scored 33 goals, Mary King (VIRGINIA BEACH) has 15, Cindy Dropeski (WINTER HAVEN, FL) has 13, Jo Jacobs (STAFFORD) and Denise Snader (CHESTERFIELD) 10 and Betty Jo Casey (ANNANDALE) has nine.

Longwood placed three players on the Division III All-

Tournament team as Snader and Dropeski were joined on the select group by Lorrie Garber (VIRGINIA BEACH). The All-Virginia teams, which will play in the South Tournament next week end, were also selected.

Longwood senior Julie Dayton (LAUREL, DE), now playing for Piedmont Club, was named to the Virginia I team. Making Virginia III were Snader and Johnson. Jacobs, Dropeski and Debbie Cosby (RICHMOND) were named to Virginia IV while Mary Milne (VIENNA), Garber and King received honorable mention.

Miller confesses that she never expected Longwood to have the kind of season it has had. The Lady Lancers finished up with five consecutive victories.

"Seven of our 12 starters are only playing lacrosse for the second year," Miller pointed out. "The team has by far exceeded my expectations. I think they even surprised themselves."

Harriss Retiring

From Sports Info

Phyllis Harriss (Lynchburg), the dean of Longwood coaches, has announced she will give up her duties as women's tennis coach after guiding the Lady Lancer netters for 19 years. Harriss-coached teams have compiled a record of 72-62-2 over the past 10 years.

A graduate of Longwood and the University of Tennessee, Harriss had perhaps her best season in 1976-77 when the Lady Lancers finished 16-3-1. She released the following statement Friday afternoon:

In the fall of 1977 I made a decision that came all too soon in 1981. That decision was to follow through with the, then freshman tennis players until they graduated.

Coaching has been very rewarding in many ways. As I write this I think of all the young ladies that it has been my pleasure to share the sport that I so dearly love. I have learned a great deal from this experience and I, hopefully, trust that the young ladies have also benefited.

To me tennis has always been a little different from other sports. Like life your parents cannot hold your hand forever — so I like to think that as a player walked onto the court, the coach let go and the player made all the decisions. Hopefully, they learned that hard work and preparation usually ended in satisfying results.

Yes, I am going to miss the challenge and closeness of working with these young ladies, but nothing can erase the fond memories.

To the new coach and future players — "keep swinging and THINK TENNIS!"

After 19 years I feel that it is time to put the cover on coaching but not on the game.

Men's Golf

From Sports Info

Longwood closed out its season in men's golf in record-breaking fashion Thursday afternoon as four golfers shot in the 70's at Longwood Golf Course to ring up a school record 297 and beat Randolph-Macon (319) and Newport News Apprentice (325).

Finishing 10-2 in match play (best record and most wins ever), Coach Steve Nelson's team got a 71 from Tim White (RICHMOND), a 74 from Robert Boyd (CHASE CITY) and 76's from Todd Atkinson (CREWE) and Rick Currier (MILTON, PA). David Moore (DANVILLE) also broke 80 with a 79. White had an eagle on No. 3 (par-5, 459 yds.) while Currier eagled No. 6.

Kanary

Player Of The Week

From Sports Info

Pitcher Donna Kanary (Bumpass) hurled complete games in Longwood's three fast-pitch softball victories last week, with two shutouts to her credit. For her accomplishments, Kanary has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period April 17-24.

Over the last six games, five of which Longwood (7-4) has won, Kanary has picked up credit for four wins and a save. In the five contests the sophomore hurler has struck out nine, allowed but 17 hits and just eight runs.

"Her hard work has really paid off," said Coach Nanette Fisher of Kanary. "She works a lot on her own and always gives 100 per cent in practice. Donna always seems to come through for us."

Success is nothing new for Kanary who also played field hockey for Longwood in the fall. The Louisa County High School graduate was an All-District performer during her prep days and was Louisa's MVP in softball in 1979. Also an outstanding student, Kanary was a member of the National Honor Society and graduated 13th out of a class of 220. She also won All-Regional honors in band.

A member of Delta Psi Kappa and a physical education major, Donna is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kanary of Bumpass.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA SUNDAY, AUGUST 23, 1981

NO. 1

Greenwood Stresses A Sense Of Community

The main objective proposed by Dr. Greenwood for the incoming freshmen class and the total college population is to "develop a sense of community." "We need to provide the student with a positive learning environment," said Dr. Greenwood.

One of the first steps Dr. Greenwood took towards this goal was a meeting held with the Resident Assistants for Longwood College. She spoke to them of RA responsibility in maintaining an environment that is conducive for learning. She also spoke of developing a code of student-faculty rights and responsibilities. "We need to be consistent and fair in rules and punishments. We need to establish a sense of community for the students. The faculty, RA's, administration and students should all be tightly interrelated."

Dr. Greenwood went on to list a number of improvements she would like to see. Included among these were the possible development of a quality advising system, extending library hours, increasing the computer literacy among the students and "joining together" with the surrounding communities.

Freshman Class Data

The Class of 1985 arrived Friday consisting of approximately six hundred students. The number of transfer students totaled 120. According to figures from the Admission office, out of these 720 students, 250 are male. This figure verifies that there is an increase in the number of males attending Longwood. Seven per cent of the new students on our campus are non-Virginia residents.

The freshman class statistics show that 61 per cent of the freshmen graduated in the top third of their class. The entering class of 1981-82 has also received many honors and achievements. There are 78 members of the National Honor Society among the new students. Recipients of a major high school award total 83. Freshmen that were president or office holders of other major organizations in high school includes 69. Beta Club members total in at 39. One final statistic figure concerning the freshmen is that 116 students are relatives of Longwood Alumni.

Mr. Roy Hill, Director of Physical Plant and Mr. Ike Finney, Resident Inspector for Longwood stand in front of the newly renovated French Dorm.

French Renovation Completed

"Say, will you look at this Anne — these rooms are enormous and look at these closets will you. Hey, are you sure we're in the right place ... why this could be a Holiday Inn. Heck, this could be the Hilton." Well, maybe not the Hilton, but close. The girls are talking about Longwood's newly renovated French dorm.

The dorm began its face lift in late January when crews of construction workers began demolishing the innards of the building. By February 11, the final floor had been stripped and the final nail had been pulled. French was ready to be revitalized.

"The plan was to convert the dorm into two and three room suites with baths and a separate place for studying. This architectural layout actually added space for two more rooms on each floor and the construction team has carried it off without a hitch", said Mr. Roy Hill Director of Physical Plant at Longwood.

Other improvements were also added. New light fixtures and a new public address and fire alarm system have been built in. Each room has its own telephone and heat control. Radiator covers and vinyl flooring have also been added to make the rooms attractive and easier to keep clean.

Six construction companies bid on the French building contract which was approved as a capital outlay project. The lowest bid was made by the Lewis Bridgforth Construction Company which undertook the project as general contractor. The architectural firm that

Saturday Night Alive Features Grinder Switch

The first "Saturday Night Alive" will take place at 9:00 p.m. Saturday, August 29th. This lower dining hall concert will feature "Grinder Switch". This five man band includes Austin Pettit as lead guitarist, Rick

Burnett on the drums, Stephen Miller on keyboards and lead vocals, Joe Dan Petty on bass and Dru Lombard as lead and slide guitarist and also a lead vocalist. Averaging over 250 dates a year with only brief stopovers for recording, Grinder Switch has built a steady following of loyal fans around the country. They've earned a solid reputation for honest, straight forward music that never fails to entertain.

Signed by Atlanta-based Robox

Records in early 1981, Grinder Switch began recording Have Band, Will Travel at Quadrafonic Studio in Nashville the day following their sixth consecutive appearance at the Charlie Daniels Volunteer Jam. Though instantly recognizable as the Grinder Switch sound, Have Band, Will Travel delivers a more sophisticated approach both vocally and instrumentally than previous albums. This is evidenced by the expanded role of Stephen Miller as one of the lead vocalists. While retaining its power and emotion, his singing style has been polished and more accessible.

The group's wide range of influences are well-represented on LP from rockers like "One Hour Into Sunday" and "Bound And Determined", to the bluesy sounding "Real Good Sign", to the country-flavored "Open Road" and to the mysterious, brooding "The Warm Kind", and "Ashes and Stone".

Also appearing with Grinder Switch will be the Ray Pittman Band. The cost for Longwood students is 2.50 and 3.50 for guests.

Outdoor Concert Features Skip Castro Band

Skip Castro will be presenting an outdoor concert on Iler Field Friday, August 28, from 8:00 pm until midnight. The group originated in Charlottesville, Virginia, where a large musical community has flourished allowing them to live and work among peers in a relaxed atmosphere. The Skip Castro Band is formed by four talented musicians: Danny Beirne (piano, vocals) who has been playing piano since the age of six and writing songs since he was ten. Drawing upon the influences of Ray Charles, Leon Russell, and The Beatles (among others), Danny combines an energetic keyboard style and a distinctive voice into a powerful stage presence.

Corky Schoonover (drums, vocals) is a twenty-six-year-old drummer who studied with jazz great Alan Dawson in Boston and played country swing in Austin before returning to Charlottesville to form the Skip Castro Band.

Bo Randall (guitar, vocals) is a twenty-four-year-old resident of Virginia that propels the Skip Castro Band with his exciting guitar work. Bo is a devotee of '40's swing and Be-bop, particularly the music of Charlie Christian and Charlie Parker.

Charlie Pat Pastorfield (bass, vocals) is a twenty-six-year-old bassist from St. Thomas in the U. S. Virgin Islands. In thirteen years of playing, Charlie has gained experience in a wide variety of styles from gospel to rock n'roll to reggae and calypso.

Their unique sound reflects the variety of musical environment in which they have worked — Austin, Texas; The Caribbean;

Boston, Mass.; Connecticut; Washington, D.C.; and New Jersey. The Skip Castro Band's sound ranges from '40's swing and an early '50's rhythm and blues to rock n'roll of the last ten years and the band's original material. These four performers have worked together in various combinations for years. Their close professional and personal association is obvious in their stage appearance; these guys like playing together — they have a good time.

Is ROTC For You?

Most of you probably think, no. But you'll never really know until you've tried it. The first four Basic Military Science courses (MS 101, 102, 201) allow you to find out what ROTC is all about and with no obligation to go into the military or to continue in ROTC. These courses are fun and allow you to get out and do things like rappelling, camping, canoeing, firing weapons, and riding in helicopters instead of sitting in class taking notes.

Most of you also probably think that the Army is only running through the woods and mud, sleeping in tents or barracks, and dodging bullets. Well, you're wrong! The Army needs chemists, school teachers, data processors, athletes, business managers, accountants, mathematicians, social workers and more to do what they are trained and educated to do. The Army will also guarantee you a good paying job and give you the supervisory experience and education you need to get the job you want as a college graduate.

Is ROTC for you? Find out for yourself. It's not too late to get Military Science 101 added to your class schedule. So sign up for MS 101 or stop by the Military Science Department, third floor, East Ruffner and talk to one of the instructors so you can find out for yourself if ROTC is for you!

Freshmen of Longwood College: You are about to embark on one of the most interesting experiences of your life. For most of you, this will be the first time away from home and loved ones. It will be the first time you have to wake up, without Dad or Mom screaming at you. It will be the first time you will spend long hours studying, not so you can go to the movie this weekend, but for self satisfaction and the feelings of accomplishment that follow an A or a B. In short, freshmen, for the first time in your lives you will be free.

With this extra freedom, as I'm sure you've so often been told, comes an equal portion of responsibility. Do not take it lightly. Too many students having traveled your path, let the intoxicating atmosphere of friends and partying allow them to neglect the main purpose of a college, which is to educate, not just socially but also academically. You new students must learn to ration time as you would water in the desert. Time is the most precious commodity you have, and learning to balance the scales properly between social activity and hard work will probably be the most important lesson to learn.

Upcoming Orientation Events

"The strong points of this year's orientation program are the excellent quality of the orientation leaders, colleagues and the student assistants and the great amount of participation by the faculty and administration", said Dallas Bradbury, chairman of Orientation. There will be many more important steps until the completion of orientation after today.

Tomorrow, a talk is scheduled for 11:00 a.m. entitled "How to Succeed in College". "This lecture is a very innovative idea," continued Dallas, who feels that this lecture that will be given by Dr. Jennings Cox and Ms. Niki Fallis will be helpful to the incoming freshmen.

Tuesday will bring two more events which are considered essential parts of the orientation program. These are the Student Government Program organized by Sharon Harrup and the Honor Code Signing featuring Dr. James Helms as speaker.

Honor Code Signing deals with student honor, concluded Dallas, who believes "that honor is something within each of us to discover and the signing of the code is important to every student in his or her own way". The orientation program will conclude on Tuesday night in the Gold Room with the Blue and White Sing.

Cal Luther Becomes New Coach

Longwood College has selected Cal Luther, former Athletic Director and basketball coach at Murray State (KY) College, as head coach of its NCAA Division II men's basketball program, incoming Longwood President Dr. Janet Greenwood announced earlier this year.

A man with a national reputation as a college basketball coach, Luther has compiled a record of 295-184 during his 20 years of college coaching.

Athletic Director at Murray State from 1967 to 1978, Luther coached at DePauw University 1954-58 and at Murray State 1958-74, recording a string of 14 consecutive winning seasons. A native of Valdosta, Georgia, Luther has kept his hand in coaching in recent years by working with international level basketball in Puerto Rico and Venezuela and by scouting for several National Basketball Association teams.

Honored four times as "Coach of the Year", Luther received these plaques in the Indiana Collegiate Conference (1957) and three times in the Ohio Valley Conference (1964, 1969, 1971). During a 10-year period from 1964 to 1974 Luther's Murray State teams won three Ohio Valley Conference championships, played in two NCAA Regional Tournaments and finished first or second in the conference seven of the 10 years.

Cal Luther plans to emphasize in-state players in recruiting and in-state teams in scheduling. Recruiting and scheduling were two of the topics the new Lancer coach touched on at his first press conference in Lancer Hall after being appointed coach.

"Our first area of interest in recruiting will be Virginia," said Luther. "We know there are some fine student-athletes in the state and we plan to pursue them." The coach indicated that Longwood has already received verbal commitments from two student-athletes, including one Virginia cager who stands 6-8.

"In terms of scheduling, one of our first goals will be to strengthen our schedule and play as many of the quality Division II teams in Virginia as well as some Division I's," the coach continued. Luther mentioned that he would like to play neighboring Hampden-Sydney and perennial Division II powers Randolph-Macon and Virginia Union among others.

"I want to stress that we are committed to building a quality basketball program here, and one that reflects the student body and strong traditions of Longwood College," he said. "Dr. Greenwood (incoming Longwood President Dr. Janet Greenwood) and the Board of Visitors have indicated that they want a quality program at Longwood, and we want to move in that direction."

"A lot of you are probably wondering why I'm getting back into coaching after seven years of being away from it," said Luther. "I love coaching and I never intended to stay out of it. I continued to work with the program at Murray State after I became full-time Athletic Director in 1974 and I've worked with international basketball and several professional basketball teams in recent years."

Luther spoke highly of Martin Schoepfer, Longwood assistant coach the past two years who will remain with the Lancer program as assistant coach.

"I'm fortunate to have a person with Martin Schoepfer's ability as assistant coach," said Luther. "He deserves a lot of credit for the work he has done in keeping things going as interim head coach, particularly for the work he has done with recruiting. I look forward to working with him in the future."

Concerning his coaching philosophy, Luther said he likes to have teams which feature quickness.

"I have had quick teams in the past and I believe in pressure defense," he said. "I also like to emphasize the fast break. I've been in coaching long enough to know that you have to adapt your style to the talent you have, but I like to most of my adapting to players who have quickness and speed."

Luther, who will begin his duties full-time July 1, said his first priority would be to acquaint himself with the high school coaches and players in Virginia.

"I plan on attending as many clinics as possible and visiting as many high schools as I can when I begin work in July. I'm very, very pleased to be here at Longwood and to be back in coaching."

designed the floor plan was Cross Rhodes Company.

The estimated cost for the entire project was set at roughly $629,900. Mr. Hill said that the final cost fell easily within that margin, even considering the estimated cost for completion of the first floor which remains unfinished.

Mr. I. Finney, Resident Inspector for Longwood College, said that when the idea was first initiated in 1972, the cost was a little over 250,000, but with staggering inflation and quadrupling interest rates, the price soon jumped way past that mark.

The completion date for second and third floors French was August 30 with the final completion date for first floor somewhere in the near future. French dorm will be housing 81 freshman females with the first floor being reserved for counseling offices, resident assistants and a kitchen and study area.

Mr. Tom Nanizg, director of Housing, guided members of the Longwood faculty and administration through the newly renovated dorm on the morning of August 20. Commenting on the renovation, Mr. Hill concluded "This is the nicest dorm on campus".

Greenwood Encourages Joining Together

By JOE JOHNSON

The faculty members flowed into Jarman flecking the still darkness with their academic regalia as the procession for convocation and capping for seniors of 1982 began. The ceremony which took place last Thursday, August 27 was an appropriate setting for such formal dressings as the presentation of colors by the Military Science Honor Guard and a rendition of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" by the mixed chorus directed by Dr. Egbert. The majority of the ceremony, however centered around the new college President and her message to Longwood College.

Dr. Greenwood began her convocation address entitled "Joining Together" with a resolution towards enthusiasm and a warning to the apathetic, "the time to stand passively on the sidelines with a 'We will wait and see' attitude is not an acceptable posture for those who care about Longwood...In order to do great things, one must be enthusiastic".

Briefly outlining the history of Longwood, Dr. Greenwood placed strong emphasis on the first 150 years as an even stronger base for the second 150 years. "We will be sure that our revitalization moves us successfully toward the turning point from our first century and a half into our second 150 years". She listed such major events in Longwood's history as its original incorporation by the state legislature on March 5, 1839 under the title of the Farmville Female Seminary Association.

Giving the tuition and various other fees for students at that time, Dr. Greenwood reemphasized the enormous changes that have taken place over the century and a half span. In 1839, tuition for five months was five dollars for each foreign language, fifteen dollars for higher English and twelve dollars and fifty cents for lower English. Room and board was set at an unbelievable eight dollars to ten dollars per month.

After the brief history, Dr. Greenwood turned to the future of Longwood and her plans for its revitalization. Quoting such futuristic thinkers as Daniel Yankelovich and Alvin Toffler, Longwood's President examined the hazards of complacent thinking about the status quo "a variety of current surveys show that twenty major normative changes have taken place in recent year". She went on to say that these changes should not frighten a person rather serve to act as "exciting, challenging, and enervating" facts of modern society.

One of the major changes Greenwood foresees in education is in the area of computer literacy. "Computer based educational systems...are the future of education...The rate of learning is accelerated for most students and comprehension and retention are good. Computer literacy is becoming essential".

"As Longwood moves ahead", Dr. Greenwood continued, "progressive stability will be evident; things will not be left to chance; they will be the results of purpose and intention." Some of

Armstrong To Fill Administrative Vacancy

By GAIL W. SHANNON

Dr. Verna L. Armstrong has been chosen by Dr. Greenwood to become the new Administrative Assistant to the President. This post was vacated in June by Dr. T.C. Dalton. Dr. Armstrong comes to Longwood from the University of Cincinnati at Cincinnati, Ohio on a one year leave of absence. She had been at the University for eleven years where she was on the faculty governance board and was a faculty member in the College of Pharmacy. Dr. Armstrong's special area of expertise lies in the field of Toxicology. Besides having her Ph.D. in Toxicology, she has received management training at Harvard and has had one year at the University of Alabama Medical Center in Pharmacology. Currently, she is working on her MBA in Finance.

In addition to her university positions, Dr. Armstrong also finds time to teach classes in CPR for the Heart Association. She is the Vice President-Treasurer of a small company and is on the Board of Directors of a private Christian school.

Dr. Armstrong's duties here will be to work with the faculty on a new organization of the faculty.

This includes updating the standards and criteria for appointment of new faculty, reappointment, tenure standards, and any policies concerning faculty. She will also be working with Longwood's computer department to help update it. Dr. Armstrong wants to help make Longwood a leader in computer technology as well as helping to make it the great college it is capable of becoming. When asked if she would do any teaching, Dr. Armstrong said that she has offered her services but that so far nothing has been decided.

Dr. Armstrong has three children, a girl, 18 and two boys, 11 and 16. Her husband runs a swimming pool company in Cincinnati that deals in larger pools such as those purchased by colleges.

Dr. Armstrong is a very personable and dynamic addition to the Longwood staff. Please join us in welcoming her to Longwood and wishing her the best of luck in her new endeavors.

Freshmen Officers Elected

By TAMMY PORTER

On September 1, 1981, the new freshmen of Longwood held their election for class officers. The presidential candidates consisted of Lisa Caudel, Randy Niemeyer, and Lisa Tirambuld. The aspirants for vice president included Tyra Jones and James Thornton. While the position of secretary went uncontested to Jaylin Leonard, the runningmates for treasurer comprised Tia Cochran, Gerald Boone, Annette Mucha, and Stephanie Parker.

Although the actual election took place on Tuesday, only the positions of the vice-president and the secretary were determined. These offices went to Tyra Jones and Jaylin Leonard respectively. Due to the closeness of the results between the other two races, a run-off election was necessary. The final outcome found Randy Niemeyer victorious as president, and Tia Cochran triumphant as treasurer.

The freshmen President, Randy Niemeyer, said, "I hope to raise the level of participation in extra-curricular activities to soaring dimensions," when asked what he hoped to accomplish this year, while the vice president, Tyra Jones, responded by saying, "I feel since our class is so large we have a lot of potential, and therefore, it is important for us to be closely knit to accomplish the most that we can."

Both hope to have the most successful freshmen turn out ever at the Octoberfest as they promote their class remembrance.

Senior capping officially took place as President Greenwood capped Kim Fuhr, President of the Senior Class of 1982.

Simkins Lecture Announced

David L. Costill, an internationally known researcher on what happens in the body during exercise, will give this fall's Francis Butler Simkins Lecture at Longwood College.

Dr. Costill will speak on Monday, September 14, at 7:30 p.m. in the Wygal Building Auditorium at Longwood. His topic is "Science Excuses You from Never Being a Champion." The lecture is open to the public at no charge.

Director of the Human Performance Laboratory at Ball State University, Dr. Costill has done extensive research on the two types of muscle fibers, known as fast-twitch and slow-twitch.

The fast-twitch variety of muscle fibers promote speed; champion sprint runners have a high percentage of these muscle fibers. The slow-twitch muscles promote endurance; those who excel at marathon running have a predominance of these fibers.

His other studies have dealt with the optimum diet and fluid intake for athletes, particularly distance runners, and the benefits of exercise for those with cardiovascular problems.

Dr. Costill is a fellow, board member, and past president of the American College of Sports Medicine. He has made presentations on sports medicine and the biochemistry of exercise in at least 14 countries and served as visiting lecturer or investigator in England, Sweden, Denmark, Norway, and the U.S.S.R.

In 1979-80, he received a Fogarty International Research Fellowship for study at the Laboratory for Muscle Physiology in Oslo, Norway.

The Francis Butler Simkins Lecture Series, initiated in 1979, honors the memory of an eminent scholar and beloved teacher at Longwood. Dr. Simkins came to Longwood in 1928 shortly after receiving his Ph.D. in history from Columbia University. With the exception of periods he spent as a visiting professor at Louisiana State University and at Princeton, Dr. Simkins remained a member of the Longwood faculty until his death in 1966.

A prolific writer, Dr. Simkins was known throughout the country as one of the most profound and perceptive students of the social, political, and religious history of the South. In 1977, Longwood's department of history and social sciences, in cooperation with the Southern Historical Association, established the Francis Butler Simkins Prize in Southern History as a memorial to him.

Colloquium Lecture Features Ferguson

This year's Faculty Colloquium at Longwood College will feature presentations on on-going research by four members of the college's faculty.

The research areas include: an ancient form of animal life still found in caves in the United States; results of damage to the hippocampus, a structure of the brain; a sociological inquiry into "alternate futures;" and the newly discovered forms of oxygen, its role in cells and possibly in cancer.

Dr. Lynn M. Ferguson, assistant professor of biology, will give the first Colloquium lecture on Wednesday evening, September 16, at 7:30 in the Wygal Building Auditorium.

A zoologist and experienced cave explorer, Dr. Ferguson will discuss his study of "Refugees of the Ice Age" or cavernicolous camptodeid diptera. Ten genera and 42 species of these primitive, eyeless and wingless insects have been identified from more than 280 caves in 24 states.

Dr. Ferguson states that the present distribution and inferred evolution of the cave-dwelling camptodeids in the U. S. are best explained as a result of the climatic fluctuations of the Pleistocene Epoch or Ice Age (ten thousand to a million years ago).

"The alternating cool, moist glacial periods and warm, dry interglacials brought about the isolation of some ancestral species that later evolved into troglodites or cave-dwellers," he explains.

He adds that the distribution and primitive structure of certain genera suggest "a very ancient group whose range has been fragmented by continental drift." He considers the cave-dwelling camptodeids to be "living fossils."

Dr. Ferguson received the Ph.D. in zoology from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. This past summer, he presented a paper on his research at the Eighth International Congress of Speleology, held in Bowling Green, Kentucky, near the Mammoth Cave system.

The other Colloquium lectures this academic year will be as follows: November 11 — "Hippocampus, Habituation and Hyperactivity," by Phyllis G. Wacker; February 10 — "If Technology is the Answer, What Was the Question?: An Inquiry into Alternate Futures," by Dr. Lawrence G. Hlad; and March 10 — "Oxygen, The Tamed Toxin," by Dr. Patrick G. Barber.

All of the Colloquium lectures are open to the public without charge.

Swann Discusses Dorm Changes

By ILLONA WILSON

"...Perhaps students would want more co-ed residence halls where we could encourage brother-sister relationships. This would be with the hope that the people living there would appreciate the rights and responsibilities of such a co-educational environment," responded Dean Swann in an interview this week.

Miss Terri Swann is the administrative assistant to the Vice-President for Student Affairs. Though she carries the same title she had last year, her duties have changed. She is now responsible for resident staff, programming, and related areas that do not involve maintenance, resident budget, and or physical movement of "bodies or furniture". Says Dean Swann, "I am delighted to have the opportunity to work with people in the residence halls and to have a chance to help regulate residence life so people can get an education. But I feel a little overwhelmed with the increased responsibility since I handle discipline also. I try to do incident reports every day. This new responsibility situation now leaves Tom Nanzig freer to do physical movements of people, furniture, etc. He can now concentrate his efforts on improving the physical environment in the resident halls.

In response to feelings about the staff she works with, Miss Swann says, "Resident staff training went well. We have a group of people who believe in an educational environment." Each residence building must submit a goal to Dean Swann for each month.

Other changes? "It is my hope," said Swann "That we can identify similar living patterns and house people according to these patterns." For example, two floors may be study floors and our brilliant 3.5 to 4.0 students could be housed there. In this way, a common community environment of understanding and common needs could develop. To continue "limit visitation in some residence halls and have full visitation in others." Not full twenty-four hour visitation, but present visitation as we have now in one hall and less in another. "This needn't be by building. It could be by floors. All the music majors could live on two hallways.

Miss Swann mentioned cooperation residence halls also. This would be where individuals do work in the hall and on the hallways (such as cleaning and painting) and their room-board expenses would be less. Moving on, Dean Swann said, "These are things that could happen. We need student interest. We can't guess what's best for our students. They need to tell us!" Change? "We are enforcing what we have," replied Miss Swann. "They are basically the same rules. Our attitude is not 'to get' somebody. But we do want students to conform to the regulations that exist. Times are changing in that the rules that haven't been enforced are now being enforced. The change is that we want students to be responsible for their actions. When they know what's not o.k., they should avoid doing it."

In closing, Terri Swann said, "I am excited about this year's staff. I feel that we have an administration who will want to make positive changes. If there are any problems, I'll be glad to talk to anybody about the things I'm responsible for. By working together, we can make changes that will be good for the student body and for Longwood College."

ROTC Summer Activities

By JOE JOHNSON

"Ten Hut" growled a young girl standing stiffly at attention, trying to raise her voice another two decibels above her last command. So went the summer days of Longwood's ROTC students at advance camp.

The camp which was held at Fort Bragg, North Carolina lasted for six weeks. Training included such exciting events as rappelling off in fifty foot tower, the confidence course (named so, because anyone who manages to complete it gains enormous amounts of confidence), an obstacle course and training with the M-16 A1 Automatic rifle, M-60 machine gun, light weight antitank weapons and handgrenades.

The sixteen members from Longwood College also practiced squad movements, took a ride in the Black Hawk (the Army's newest helicopter) and received branch orientation training (individualized training in the separate branches of the Army such as artillery, finance, transport, communication, engineering and medicine). All candidates were required to undergo test in such areas as land navigation (compass and map reading), physical fitness (two mile run, push ups and sit ups) and peer group ratings before graduating from the camp.

Longwood's ROTC department has also been busy in other areas. They sent six people to ROTC Basic camp at Fort Knox, Kentucky. Among those sent were Tania Gallop, Dave Dodd, Bill Klink, Joe Bass, Sherry Gallop and Nick Ciucci.

Sharon Browne, a junior member of ROTC received training at the airborne camp in Fort Benning, Georgia. Dave Dodd a newcomer to the ROTC program received training at an air assault school where he learned procedure for helicopter dismounting and mounting.

Four people were submitted for three year ROTC scholarship this year and four received them. Among these were Janice Gathwright, Derick Wolfe, Janice Boyd and David Dodd. Tania Gallop received a two year ROTC scholarship.

Captain Stanford, commenting on Longwood's ROTC program was very enthusiastic about the number of interested students.

Institutional Advancement

By BILL BRENT

The office of Institutional Advancement is new and has become an integral part of Longwood College. The addition consists of Alumni Services, Public Affairs and Annual Funds. It will enhance Longwood's efforts to acquire private funds that benefit twelve academic programs for the students.

The new structure began operating July 1. Also recommended and accepted was the position of vice-president to be responsible for the operation of the three offices.

Nancy Shelton, a Longwood graduate, is the director of Alumni Service, she is also interim vice-president and interim head of Public Affairs while Mr. Mitchell completes his doctorate. Barbara Nanzig is in charge of Annual Funds in the new format. The only noticeable problems are two vacancies that the school is still screening applicants for.

The office of Institutional Advancement has changed the one daily bulletin to a three times a week bulletin, created a new composition room to centralize typesetting and composition, training all of its personnel to operate computers. This combination of offices working together will play an indispensable role in the administrative function of the college and the education of its students.

Skip Castro Jams

By KURT COFFIELD

The students' first Friday back at Longwood was a prime time for the Skip Castro Band to play on Iler Field. Many enthusiastic Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students were on hand to hear Skip jam. The rhythm and blues mixed in with rock 'n' roll was the correct blend of music for college students ready to get back into the swing of school.

The Skip Castro Band has developed a large group of student followers after releasing their "Boogie at Midnight" album. This was demonstrated when members of the band encouraged the crowd into participating. By far, the most awaited song was the title cut "Boogie at Midnight" as the crowd seemed to be bubbling over with excitement when everyone boogied to it.

The Skip Castro Band, from Charlottesville, is formed by four talented musicians: Danny Beirne, Corky Schoonover, Bo Randle and Charlie Pastorfield.

Cheers to the Student Union, they picked a great band to entertain on the first weekend of school. Next time, we hope they will pick a better beer to drink than Old Milwaukee!

Danny Beirne fascinated the crowd playing the Keyboards.

See Grady Nutt Tonight

Tonight in Jarman Auditorium Grady Nutt will be featured beginning at 7:30 p.m. Students will be admitted free with I.D. card on a first come-first served basis. Non-students can attend for $3.00 a person. A regular member of "Hee-Haw," Grady Nutt is a minister by ordination, professional entertainer by occupation, writer by avocation, graduate of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary by matriculation, and finder-enjoyer-proclaimer of all things funny by inclination.

He is a master of human understanding, cultivator of the best kind of spontaneous fun, seer of life's most poignant moments. Grady can amaze people with his syncopated finger flippings, roll them in the aisles with outrageous yarns, make the 10 strings of a tiple sound like an orchestra. And beyond that, his gift of words makes him a speaker and writer of extraordinary effectiveness.

Grady's appearance is sponsored by the Inter-Religious Council and the Wesley Foundation of Longwood College. You are invited to two hours of fun and laughter.

Hundredth Production Underway

By BRENDA COLEMAN

The Longwood Players' first production of the year will be William Congreve's 17th century restoration comedy Love for Love. The play, which focuses on the affairs of the heart, is set for an October 14-17 run. This production is a special one for the Longwood Players' drama organization. It is the 100th production of the Players as well as the 30th anniversary of Jarman Auditorium.

The play centers around a young man named Valentine Legend and his efforts to win the hand of the pretty and shrewd Angelica. Angelica decides to have Valentine prove his worthiness before she consents to his appeals and the resulting complications serve as the basis of the play. Meanwhile, other couples in the play are likewise breaking up, making up, and engaging in all sorts of interesting matters of the heart. Their dialogue and actions are liberally sprinkled in that marvelous 17th century manner that proved to be and still is scandalous.

The cast is headed by Stewart Grant as Valentine and Faith Lancaster as Angelica. Frank Creasy, a veteran of many Players' productions, has another beautiful character role as Sir Sampson Legend, with Jim Pittman as Scandal and George Hughes as Tattle. Other support comes from costmates Jim Greene, David Wood, Tony Russo, Don Bush, Mike Curley, Cindy Jude, Lyman Smith, Helen Van Jackson, Lisa Bowers, and Terri Long with orange wench Wendy Sublett and Nannette Lemplin.

States To Rock Longwood

By MIKE LYNCH

On Saturday, September 12, Longwood College will be visited by States. The States is a highly refined band that is reputed to be great to listen to. They should be one of the highest caliber bands to come here all year. Although their musical style contains many different popular songs and a number of songs from their own albums, The States' basic musical style is heavy rock'n'roll supported with excellent vocals and harmonics.

Hailing from the Norfolk area, the band was formerly known as McDonnell. Among the groups that they have toured with are Hall and Oates And Toto. The States are Timmy McDonnell (vocals), Steve Chandler (guitars), Barry Scott (lead guitar), Morgan Hampton (drums), Robert Schindler (keyboards) and Butch Germano (bass).

The band takes the state at 9:00 on Saturday night in the lower dining hall. It is part of the Student Union's "Saturday Night Alive" program and the cost of admission is $2.00.

WUTA Begins Second Year

By SARAH BISE

On Tuesday, September 1, 1981, Longwood's own radio station, WUTA, began its second year of broadcasting. As of now the station will run from 4:00 until 12:00 p.m. seven days a week. After the personnel have been organized, it will remain on the air until 2:00 a.m. on Friday and Saturday only.

Program director Jodi Kersey has many goals and ideas that she would like to see incorporated into WUTA this year. Some of these are to expand and include more forms of programming, such as interviews with the faculty and staff, as well as with the individual performers that are scheduled to have concerts at Longwood.

Ms. Kersey believes the radio station can be used to highlight activities on campus, as well as for controversial topics that may arise throughout the semester. After these interviews have been conducted, the listeners are encouraged to call the station and give their comments on the program. Some time in the future, the radio station would like to expand to 100 watts, and become stereo, thus securing WUTA's place on 90.1 FM dial. The station would also like to be an official member of the FCC, instead of test broadcasting.

The next meeting of WUTA will take place on Tuesday, September 8, 1981 at 1:00 p.m. in Jarman 026. The radio station is open to all students that are willing and able to take the responsibility of being a disc jockey. The announcers must agree and become aware of the FCC rules. WUTA is a member of the Longwood Radio Association, and must answer to the school and the FCC, if any violations occur. There are several other jobs that are open at the station other than being an announcer, such as working on the news, selecting promotional records, and obtaining public service announcements. By working at WUTA, one will have the advantages of learning firsthand how to work the control board and other facets about a radio station. Disc Jockey Jay Carey views his job at WUTA as challenging, "I learned how a radio station is run and this may be very beneficial to me in the future."

Ms. Kersey encourages all the students that would really like to work at WUTA, making these goals become a reality, "not to hesitate to join," Longwood's own radio station, WUTA, 90.1 FM.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS By Jodi A. Kersey

Editor's Turn

Our school is now involved in a great surge of ideas and goals, perpetuated mainly by our new President, to improve our college. We do need to "join together" as President Greenwood has stated frequently. However, we also need to become leaders in our own right to help promote campus individualism. To become truly united with the community one first should establish a strong self identity.

In modern society, particularly chaotic college life, it is often difficult to see oneself as a separate entity. By defining one's own personal goals and remaining dedicated until their completion, self achievements and total campus improvements are certain to coincide.

Yearbook Changes

By PAM WINGER

There is nothing quite as satisfying as looking at an annual containing photographs of events that you have had some part in — for instance, attending a LeRoux concert or participating in the Oktoberfest paint battle. It is even more satisfying when you can purchase an annual such as this for $2.00. That's right, $2.00. Not the usual fourteen dollars, because the 1981-82 Virginian (Longwood's yearbook) will be approximately 72 pages long. And boy is it going to be good.

The Virginian staff is planning a yearbook this year that will be new and exciting. It's a brand new idea in the concept of Longwood's traditional yearbook. This new annual will be packed full of pictures of events going on at Longwood, such as Oktoberfest, mixers, concerts, Mardi Gras, sports, Saturday Night Alive and Spring Weekend, to name just a few. There will be many, many pages of candid photos of you and/or someone you know, parties, open mikes and plenty of other exciting events.

The Virginian Staff will be selling subscriptions for this yearbook during this fall. So come experience the joy in opening and looking through a book filled with memories. Remember, it only costs $2.00 and for seniors, there will be a special section of pictures of seniors included with your yearbook, at no extra charge.

Greek Reception

President Greenwood met Longwood's Lady Greeks on Wednesday, Sept. 2. The reception was held in Lankford's Gold Room, complete with members of each sorority, certain faculty members, Panhellenic President, Betsy

Clark and Vice President Cathy Christman.

Each sorority member was individually introduced to President Greenwood and then directed towards the refreshment table.

It was an enjoyable and successful social gathering.

The Longwood Scholars: "An Opportunity to Extend Yourself"

By RONNIE BROWN

The Longwood Scholars Program, sponsored by the Longwood College Foundation Inc. and the Longwood College Alumni Association, is an organization that encourages "exceptionally qualified (high school) students to attend Longwood," says Gary Groneweg, Director of Admissions. In the eight years of existence, the scholars program has provided the students with many privileges, including a cash award. These funds come from private donors and are used for educational expenses.

The scholars have many advantages, but their journey to this status is by no means easy. The first procedure in becoming a scholar candidate is submitting an application (these totaled between seventy and one hundred last year) before the last week of February. The applicants academic credentials are considered and approximately seven candidates are chosen. These candidates visit the Longwood campus in March and with the combination of their academic record and their performance at the personal interview, the scholars are named. According to Janet Smith, a sophomore scholar from Victoria, and John McMillen, a freshman scholar from Falls Church, the interviews are a chance for the group of faculty to observe your composure under pressure. "If they had to know you. They gave you every opportunity to mess up," said McMillen. Smith described the atmosphere as "intimidating". The candidates sat on one side of the table and the faculty resided on the opposite side. She was questioned on topics such as her personal goals, the Iranian Crisis and "If you wanted to be anyone, who would you be?" Her session was highlighted by one faculty member asking her to convince him that God did not exist.

As witnessed in the interview, the vital quality the scholars have is to be able to perform under pressure. The students must keep an accumulative grade point average of 3.35 and combined with the adjustment of college living, the tension increases. Janet Smith experienced this and rates it as a real test. "I had a lot of pressure because of the academics combined with the personal adjustment." John McMillen, a freshman, is finding it difficult to anticipate how he will fare in college. Since classes started, he basically eats, sleeps, attends class and studies. "The hardest part is finding out how much time you have." He further explains that once he adjusts to college standards, he will be able to spend more time leisurely.

The scholars are granted many responsibilities, but they also enjoy numerous privileges other than financial assistance. They also have the first choice in registering for classes and receive special help from the faculty.

Although the scholars are exceptional students, they would be the last to admit it. "I personally don't feel exceptional...I think anyone can make good grades if they apply themselves," said Smith. McMillen, who never expected to receive this honor, also presents a humble attitude. "I'm not a super brain, I'll be the first to admit it...I don't like people to over emphasize my (membership as a) Longwood Scholar".

These students are given a great deal of responsibility, but after all, they have "an opportunity to extend themselves".

Alumni Proof to Alternatives to Teaching

By CINDY CORELL

A seminar-dinner entitled "Alternatives to Teaching" was presented Wednesday, September 2 in the Prince Edward Room at 5:45 by the office of Career Planning and Placement. The purpose of the seminar was to show how skills learned by education majors provide opportunities to work in many other environments than just the classroom.

Ms. Niki Fallis, the Director of the Office of Career Planning and Placement, opened the program by stressing that this seminar was not to discourage those qualified to teach from making teaching their career, only to make aware the other choices offered for Education majors.

Ms. Fallis then introduced the guest speakers who are both proof to the fact that other career choices for a qualified teacher, are not only available, but enjoyable. The speakers, Mrs. Sally Chewing Little, and Ms. Ann Johnson are both Longwood College alumni and both received Bachelor of Science degrees in Education.

Mrs. Little graduated from Longwood in 1977 as a Physical Education major. After graduation she returned to her home in Richmond, Va., and sought a job using her teaching certificate. Although she limited herself in her search by staying in Richmond, she advised the audience, of which the majority will soon be student teaching this year, not to limit themselves either geographically as she did, or to one level of certification. "Go all the way; if it's teaching you want; be certified for as much as you can be."

Finding no job as a teacher, Mrs. Little returned to her summer job as a tour guide for Philip Morris, Inc., which manufactures and processes tobacco and also brews and cans beer. She stayed in this job for approximately a year and a half, went through a series of promotions and job changes, at her own suggestion, and is now holding the position of Affirmative Action Specialist. This position entails keeping Philip Morris Inc. in compliance with the government by processing charges of discrimination with the corporation.

Mrs. Little feels that both her experience as a tour guide and her education have contributed very much to her success in these promotions. Specifically, she pointed out skills she learned for teaching such as flexibility, patience, ability to present material and information to the uninformed and self-confidence to learn what she needed to know in these unfamiliar jobs.

Ms. Ann Johnson, the next speaker, graduated from Longwood in 1979, with a certificate to teach elementary school. She decided as a young girl to become a teacher and devoted most of her life to that profession. She tutored and gave piano lessons in school and worked with the elementary children.

After she graduated, she received a job offer from her home city school board in Lynchburg, Va., and eagerly began her career. The next year, though, due to a swift decline in enrollment in the Lynchburg School system, her contract, as one of the newest teachers, was not renewed. Being unable to find a job as a teacher, Ms. Johnson applied elsewhere. She was soon hired by Thalheimer Brothers, Inc. as Assistant Personnel

Cox Discusses Stress And Anxiety

By GAYLE WEAVER

On September 9, Dr. Jennings Cox spoke on the subject of stress and anxiety at the Wesley Foundation. Ours is the most stress filled society in the world, one in which people must be aware of the stresses on them in order to prevent the mental and physical problems which may arise.

Dr. Cox had 8 suggestions for coping with stress. In using these suggestions one must constantly be aware of how "tense" the body can be.

These suggestions are as follows:

1. Learn to relax. If muscles are relaxed the body will become relaxed.
2. Use rational thinking and tell yourself the problem can be solved later.
3. Make Jokes about the problem which is causing stress.

4. Plan a rigid time schedule for a stressful day and use common sense throughout that day.

5. Set a goal and once this goal is obtained, a sense of completion and relaxation is felt.

6. Be assertive and stand up to one's rights. This may involve getting things out in the open that have been held back.

7. Good nutrition and exercise at least a half-hour each day, if possible.

8. Escape from a stressful environment and do fun and relaxing things. Only choose the escape route when the problem will not get worse if left.

Stress and anxiety cannot be fought against but can be coped with. The best way to do this is to constantly be aware of one's inner feelings and know when stress may be overwhelming the body.

Book Review

By JOE JOHNSON

Richard Bach, author of Jonathan Livingston Seagull has another masterpiece under his wing — Illusions. A culmination of experiences in a biplane and a visit or two with his imagination has developed into a philosophical statement of life. Or not life as the case may be for he seems to be saying that everything (meaning I suppose reality as we know it) is all right because its just one big facade anyhow.

Bach starts out with a quaint parody of scripture and the coming of the Messiah who in this book is a fellow by the name of Don Shimoda. This tuncful mechanic comes from the mystical hills east of Fort Wayne in Indiana. He is, however, a very unambitious man, for what does he do with all his miraculous power (not really miraculous at all as Bach soon explains) but neglect them in favor of an outdated biplane and an outdated writer who is the author of said book.

As the story continues, Bach begins to notice strange occurrences surrounding Shimoda such as walking on water, swimming in the earth, and healing cripples. Being an author, however, and very up on the latest developments in modern theology, Bach concludes that he is keeping company with the reluctant Messiah. Soon Shimoda lends Bach a book called "The Messiah Handbook, Reminders for the Advanced Soul," (another quaint invention) and scattered through the pages of illusions, like so many Psalms in the Bible, one finds sayings that were meant to be written in decorative old English and hung above a kitchen sink. Very beautiful they are and very thought provoking. Take for example "you teach best what you most need to learn," "live never to be ashamed if anything you do or say is published around the world — even if what is published is not true."

What many people may find obnoxious about Illusions is its tendency to remind one of the late sixties flower children and their incessant chants of "do your own thing." But the theme is taken a step beyond this into the realm of "meta-psychology," where we find that everything that happens to man is of his own choice. Those who are happy are so because they expect it. Those in pain also because they expect it. Those who hate or love or cry or die all because they expect it. It's a little hard to swallow but Bach says it so simply and with such ease, it's like honey and tea — "Where your thinking is, there is your experience."

As a piece of literature, Illusions will stand out among the twentieth century best sellers as a classic. It has everything, tongue and cheek humor, playful parody, vivid imagery (although some of the scenes could have been a little better developed, Bach's ambiguity tends to entertain rather than annoy) and enough intellectual morsels to feed a starving public.

As a philosophical self-help book, maybe it shouldn't be taken too seriously. As Bach himself states (covering every possible contingency) "Everything in this book may be wrong."

Sorority Life

By MITZI MASON

At the start of each year, everyone hears "sorority, sorority, sorority." The big question always follows, "What's it all about?"

A sorority is a group of girls sharing experiences, ideas, interests, secrets and much more. These girls are geared toward learning to live and work with others. Each national Greek organization sponsors different types of philanthropic projects to help people throughout the world. Rush is a period when every girl has the opportunity to get to know some of the members of the sororities.

At the conclusion of "Rush Week," you will indicate a sorority preference (You may list three sororities in order of your preference.) Where your preferences match those of a sorority, you become a "pledge" and eventually a member. Each sorority has fees paid for pledging initiation dues and pins. The fees vary in the different sororities.

Junior Pianists Recital

Jane Elder, Michael Gould, Michael Lawson, Sidney Long and Sandra Walls will present a recital of piano music on Wednesday evening, Sept. 23, at 8 o'clock in the Molnar Recital Hall (Wygall Building). They will play compositions by Bartok, Brahms, Chopin, Copland, Couperin, Debussy, Ravel, Schubert and Stravinsky. Two movements of Mozart's Piano Concerto in B-flat major, K. 238 will be performed by Michael Lawson with accompaniment by Kristin Holberg, a Longwood music graduate from Rice.

All pianists are students of Dr. Robert Blasch. Jane Elder of Fredericksburg, is a member of Longwood's Concert Choir and Band. Michael Gould from Jamaica Plain, Mass., and Michael Lawson of Hampton, are both active in the Longwood Camerata Singers and the music society Phi Mu Alpha. Sidney Long of South Hill, is a business major. Sandra Walls of Richmond, is a member of Longwood's Band and the music honor society Sigma Alpha Iota.

The public is cordially invited to attend this recital and the reception following it in the Green Room of Wygall Building.

She is an adjunct faculty member in Longwood's music department, teaching flute.

Jacquelin Spears is a graduate of the Peabody Institute in Baltimore. She was principal cellist of the Chattanooga Symphony for two years and a member of the Atlanta Chamber Orchestra and the Baroque Trio and orchestra at Emory University.

Ms. Spears is currently principal cellist in the Richmond Community Orchestra and a member of the Richmond Chamber Players.

Hope Armstrong Erb is head of the music department at St. Christopher's School in Richmond and teaches piano privately. She has played solo and chamber recitals in Northern Virginia and in Richmond at St. Paul's Music at Noon, the University of Richmond, St. Christopher's, and on WRFK radio.

Mrs. Erb is presently organizing and performing in a concert series of 19th century music to be presented this season at the Valentine Museum.

Chamber Music Concert Scheduled

The Richmond Camerata, composed of Patricia Werrell, flute, Jacquelin Spears, cello, and Hope Armstrong Erb, piano, will give a Chamber Music concert on Thursday, September 17, at 8 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygall Building, at Longwood College.

Longwood will welcome defending champ Trenton State, Virginia Commonwealth and Richmond to the Longwood Invitational Soccer Tournament Friday night with the consolation and championship games slated to be televised by WCVE-TV, Channel 23 in Richmond on Saturday.

Longwood, 1-0 after taking a forfeit win from Catawba Sunday, faces Richmond Friday night at 8:30 after Trenton State and VCU square-off at 6:00. Losers meet in a battle for third place 11:00 Saturday morning while the winners will play for the crown at 1:30. Admission to the two-day tourney is free.

Defending champ Trenton State, 13-6-3 last season, will open play in '81 against the Rams Friday night. In last year's inaugural tourney the Lions beat VCU 4-0 in opening round action before topping Longwood 3-0 in the title game.

VCU finished 9-8-4, Longwood 9-7 and Richmond 6-9-2 a year ago.

Lancer coach Rich Posipanko hopes his team will be able to challenge for the title once again. Led by All-Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association performers Gus Leal (Rockville, MD) and Dana Gregg (Cincinnati, OH), Longwood have seven starters combined with 15 talented newcomers for 1981.

WCVE producer-director Gene Harris announced last week that Bob Trent, formerly with Channel 6 in Richmond, will handle play-by-play and Neil Turnage, a nationally rated soccer official, will be color commentator for Saturday's broadcast of the consolation and championship contests.

Channel 23, a PBS station, plans to use three cameras with instant replay for its first telecast of college soccer.

The men and women's doubles teams played in the finals Sunday afternoon.

Hockey Team Opens Season Thursday

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's field hockey team opens play at home Thursday when Mary Washington visits for a 3:00 contest on Barlow Field.

The Lady Lancers will not be playing Randolph-Macon Saturday morning at 10:00 as previously scheduled. Instead, Randolph-Macon will visit September 28.

Competing in AIAW Division I, Longwood must face some of the best teams in the nation right here in Virginia. Old Dominion placed fifth in national competition in 1980. William and Mary also qualified for nationals last year after winning the state and regional title.

"Our goal is to do well against our Division I opponents," said Coach Bette Harris. "I feel we have the talent to succeed."

Although last year's leading scorer Julie Dayton, goalie Terri Davis and defensive leaders Kim Garber and Kathy Devine will be hard to replace, Harris has seven starters returning.

"We will have to rebuild the left side of the field since Dayton, Garber and Devine all played on that side," said Harris. "This year we will work on balancing the scoring. A stable defense and the players' experience of working together should be a major strength this season."

The 1981 edition of Longwood field hockey consists of 17 players from Virginia and eight out-of-state. Returning for the Lady Lancers will be juniors Chris Mayer and Betty Stanley, who scored five goals each last season. Also back on attack is senior Mary King, who scored four goals a year ago, and junior Cherie Stevens.

Heading up the defense will be Mindy Allman, Betty Jo Casey, Janet Long, Mary Milne and goalie Lorrie Garber.

This season's schedule includes 13 contests, with games against Division I opponents Virginia, William and Mary, Old Dominion, James Madison and Virginia Tech. The Lady Lancers also host the Longwood Invitational Tournament, facing Davis and Elkins, Maryland, North Carolina, Appalachian State and Duke.

In 1980 Longwood compiled an 11-7 overall and 9-4 regular season record. The Lady Lancers finished fifth in the VAAW State Tournament and sixth in regionals.

the areas for change she carefully outlined in her speech.

The development of an institutional information organization which would review among other things the colleges academic and administrative units and determine the quality and viability for each one. Another area of direction would be in leadership and planning. Longwood's President hopes to meet with every employee of the college during the 1981-82 year.

She also hopes to develop and maintain effective inter-department cooperation and teamwork to create as she says a "productive team approach".

Dr. Greenwood mentioned preparing for the accreditation visits and instituting programs for computer literacy, developing a system of appointment, reappointment, promotion and tenure criteria to reflect high standards of excellence and keeping the campus grounds in "excellent" shape.

Another major item was the revision of discipline rules and regulation to meet "legal requirements and assure fairness, appropriateness and consistency". She would also like for the college to expand its co-op program with other colleges and universities in the area of professional practices.

One of the major areas of her speech was on the John P. Wynne Campus School's future. Under study is the possibility of beginning classes for exceptional learners in the surrounding county schools. "By reaching out to the community in providing expanded services to include exceptional learners at the campus school...Longwood will reinforce its proud tradition of excellence in teacher preparation," said Dr. Greenwood.

Another point the college President wanted to emphasize was her theme of "Joining Together" with the community. To do this, she listed several goals: 1. Supporting Longwood's regional-county neighborhood development, 2. Developing cooperative and collaborative relationships with Hampden-Sydney, 3. Developing cooperative and collaborative relationships with public and private school systems in the area. 4. Working on the potential for developing the "downtown mall" concept which will assure the vitality of downtown and enhance town relationships.

In conclusion, Dr. Greenwood quoted Dr. Eleanor Bobbitts' poem "which choice will you make:" ending with the words "The only person you have to be better than is the person you are today."

Mrs. Johnson, like Mrs. Little attributes much of her success to her education received at Longwood College. She adds that her many extra-curricular activities in school and in College also helped her cause a great deal. She considers the people that she hires and trains her pupils and with the spirit of a teacher still in her blood, she feels that this career is for her.

Both former Longwood students plan to go back to, or start teaching in their future, but both also feel that there is so much else in the world that they can do, they are glad that they found something they enjoy.

Renewal Of Bookstore Contract Questioned

By JOE JOHNSON

"I'm just disappointed...they said they wanted to make a change in the bookstore and they didn't make it", said Mr. Freeman Fox the owner of "The Bookworm" a local bookstore one of the two people who made final bids on the bookstore contract.

The contract, which was put up for bid earlier this year, was awarded to Mr. Harper who has had ownership of the bookstore for the past ten years. Mr. Eric Skovgaard, the second bidder, and owner of Transfer Junction, a local T-Shirt shop, was equally disappointed. "The treatment of the people who bid was unprofessional...I've been bidding sealed bids all my life and I've never run into a problem like this."

Mr. Skovgaard explained the circumstances surrounding his bid. "I read the advertisement for the contract renewal in the Farmville Herald and submitted my bid. Later in March of 1981, I was told on the phone by Mr. Brandscome (Vice-President for Finance and Chairman of the bookstore committee) that as far as he was concerned we (Mr. and Mrs. Skovgaard) had the successful bid and that he would get back to me."

"About a month later I got a letter saying they'd decided to let Harper keep it for this year. I really don't know what happened..." The bids were reviewed in two separate meetings. The bookstore committee chaired by Mr. Brandscome reviewed the bids first and gave recommendations to the administrative council which made the final decision on who would be awarded the contract. Mr. Brandscome said that the criteria for awarding the contract was based first on service then on the best financial proposal.

In the area of finance, it appears that Mr. Harper did not have the best proposal, but in fact had the worst of the three. Mr. Fox and Mrs. Skovgaard both proposed that six per cent of their gross sales (exclusive of refunds and sales tax) would go back to the college. Mr. Harper's proposal was a four and a half per cent return. Mr. Harper proposed selling all his text books at publishers suggested list price with ten per cent discount for faculty and staff members. Mr. Fox offered a 5 per cent discount textbooks for all college personnel and ten per cent discount in other items that yield a higher profit margin. Mr.

Shovgaard offered a five to fifteen per cent discount on all items wherever possible.

In the area of service, Mr. Harper also appears to have trailed the other two candidates. Mr. Skovgaard proposed opening the bookstore an hour earlier (7:30 a.m.) on Mondays to allow students returning from the week end to purchase needed books. Mr. Harper's hours are 8:30 to 5:30 Monday through Friday.

Mr. Fox proposed a large section of the bookstore to be used for paperbacks and other special items. Mr. Skovgaard proposed a special order department within the bookstore to allow the students and faculty to order special clothing for their clubs, teams, fraternities or sororities.

In the area of used books, Mr. Skovgaard also made the tantalizing offer of purchasing used books from the students at 25 to 50 per cent of new book prices and depending on the condition of the books selling them at 15 per cent more than what was paid for them. They would take the profits from these used books and set up a book fund to help financially needy students buy necessary books. Mr. Skovgaard also planned on hiring student workers. Mr. Harper proposed purchasing used books at half the publishers price and selling them back at two-thirds the list price (provided the book is in good condition) the profit going to Mr. Harper. Mr. Harper does not have student workers because their hours don't coincide with his.

Mr. Harper has also had problems with a number of faculty members in the past in the area of service. In fact the problems have gotten to the point where no less than seven departments of Longwood College are getting a number of their courses texts elsewhere. The elsewhere is ironically Mr. Freeman Foxes "Bookworm". Mr. Stonikinis, chairman of the Social Work Department of Longwood College said "It's just a lot easier to get books through Mr. Fox...I've been getting texts at the Bookworm for the last three years...the quality of the service is better, the treatment of the students is better and the treatment of the faculty is better. Mr. Fox is more courteous and the students seem more satisfied."

Dr. Millar, Professor of History, is also getting his texts from the Bookworm. He related an interesting story, "About three semesters ago I ordered a book for one of my classes. I discovered the original publisher had sold the rights of the book to another publisher. I asked Mr. Harper if he could provide the address of the new publisher so I could make the order. Mr. Harper said he didn't know the new publisher's address and that it was up to me to find it. In my opinion, as owner of the bookstore, that's his responsibility. He doesn't have the personality or the expertise for this line of work."

Dr. Young of the Drama department, who is also ordering his books through the Bookworm ran into the same problem. "I wanted to order a larger section of paperbacks that he had firmly agreed to put on the shelves but to do it we had to include the publisher's name and address. It's very time consuming and really is his responsibility. I stopped order books from him three years ago."

When Mr. Harper was asked about this procedure, he replied, "If the faculty want to order books, I have to know the publishers name and address. I'm not a mind reader, I have no way of knowing where these books are."

How does Mr. Fox manage to find the addresses when Mr. Harper wouldn't or couldn't? "It's simple," said Mr. Fox, "we have listing of publisher addresses. It's helpful if the professors give addresses but they don't have to. If they don't include the addresses and I don't have it, I'll go and find it. I'd like to get their business."

Another problem the faculty has had is in the area of an increased paperback book selection. In Mr. Harper's contract it states explicitly that Mr. Harper is expected to carry as many as 200 titles of paperback books from as many publishers as possible provided the faculty supply the list of titles.

Dr. Sedgwick, an English Professor who was on the bookstore committee said that so far he has 100 or more titles but that a good many weren't ordered. "He ordered some of the titles but has not ordered all of them. His position is that the titles are a losing proposition". Mr. Harper said that he doesn't have all 200 in yet but they are on order.

Another faculty member, who preferred to remain nameless, said that the major problem he has had with the bookstore was the speed of service. "We could and should have a more efficient and a more cooperative bookstore. In most cases it's just faster getting texts from Mr. Fox up at the Bookworm."

A faculty member, who also preferred remaining nameless questioned Mr. Harper's not ordering from foreign publishers. Another complained of his treatment to students and said finally "I really don't understand why he has been allowed to get the contract again this year".

It was a good question. Dr. Peele, a member of the administrative council said this in answering, "My vote was cast in light of information on the three bids...in my estimation Mr. Harper was the one to have it". Dr. Gussett another member of the council (he was, however, in absence during the final vote) said "It was a sensitive thing...the council sensed the students wanted a change and it just wasn't possible to make the changes at the time".

It was rather obvious that the council sensed the students wanted a change, because the contract which was originally a three year proposition was changed to a one year contract when Mr. Harper was awarded it.

The reasons surrounding the decision to award Mr. Harper the contract, when Mr. Fox and Mr. Shovgaard obviously had just as good or better bids still remain obscure. Mr. Brandscome would only say that they (the

Bicyclists:

Warned Of Theft

By MARK K. SEGAL

If students are thinking of using bicycles to alleviate the automobile parking shortage then perhaps they should think twice, warns chief Neil Smith of the Campus Police.

"I wouldn't encourage students to bring bikes on campus," says Smith. "Most students don't even use their bikes year round."

In 1979, thirteen bikes were stolen from campus. In 1980 the figure was down to nine. But according to Smith this fluctuation is insignificant because of the relatively small size of Longwood. But the problem of theft is significant if you own a bicycle and park it at Longwood.

Last year three bicycles were recovered but few prosecutions ever occur here. The majority of stolen bicycles are taken by neighboring juveniles.

Smith estimates that half of the bikes stolen on this campus are taken completely out of this area.

If the bicycle is not stolen by a student to use for a quick ride to Lancer Hall or the dining hall, then the chances of the victim having his or her bike returned are slim. "Teenagers interchange handle bars, seats and other parts" says Smith, "and then the original owner has no chance of recognizing (the original bike)."

"All we can go by is the serial number on the frame." And most students don't register the number with campus police. There is no charge for bicycle registration at Longwood.

Smith estimates that there are between 50 to 60 bicycles on campus. If this year's theft trend is averaged into the last two years (when computer records began) average, then a Longwood bike owner is putting his chances at one-in-five that the cycle will be stolen.

"There is no fool-proof lock", warns Smith. There are all kinds of cutters that can be used, from simple wire cutters to acetylene blow torches. But perhaps the best safeguard is a Kryptonite or Citadel V-shaped lock. These companies boast a guarantee that will replace the bicycle if the lock is ever broken.

The bikes can be locked on the three racks provided at Lancer Hall, Wheeler and Cox, or the rack at Tabb, French and South Ruffner. When the cycle is not locked — even for that "one second" — then the owner is making the bike fair game for thieves.

Although the V-shaped locks can lower the odds of theft, the best method, according to Smith, is simply not to bring a bike to campus. Students can walk to class because of the small size of the college.

"Most of these bikes just sit around all winter and rust," says Smith. There have even been cases of bicycle vandalism. That is bikes that are idle year-round being stripped for parts or inadvertently smashed and knocked.

A Nutt Without Compare

By GAIL W. SHANNON

The halls of Jarman rang with laughter on the night of September 8. Grady Nutt held the audience in a perpetual state of mirth with two hours of his home-grown humor and wisdom. He progressed from tales of his family and childhood to ones of his college years with many hilarious digressions along the way. According to Mr. Nutt, "All of my shows are spontaneous and I never plan one in advance."

Grady became a Baptist minister at the age of 13. Consequently, this little fact tended to play havoc with his love life during his teen years. He finally did get married, however, and when asked how his wife put up with a comedienne in the family, his reply was, "She gets as tickled at my stories as the audiences and I do. Course, after she's heard 'em five or six times, she tends to turn 'em off. I don't consider myself a comedienne, however. I'm not telling jokes, I'm telling stories. All my stories are true, too. I never tell out and out lies, I just embellish the heck out of the stories."

Grady Nutt is as quick to poke fun at and tell stories on himself as on others. He does not believe "that things that have to do with religion or church should be immune from laughter." According to Grady, "humor can be found in church as much as it can anywhere else. Anyway, who better is there to poke fun at religion than a minister?"

Grady became an entertainer to pay for his college and seminary. In 1967, Ralph Edwards of "This Is Your Life" hired him to put a show on for a group of people and Mike Douglas happened to be in the audience. Douglas wanted Grady for an appearance on his show, but it took the show personnel four weeks to track him down. Over the next two years, Grady appeared on the Douglas show four times, and, in 1969, he resigned from the seminary to become a full time entertainer. Besides his spot on "Haw Haw", he has recently appeared in a T.V. pilot. At the moment, the status of the show is unknown. If the new NBC president gives production the go-ahead, the series will be called the "Grady Nutt Show". In this show, he will play none other than a minister.

As warm and friendly offstage as on, Grady Nutt is a very down-to-earth, next-door neighbor sort of person. He is also a person who holds his faith very dear. He may poke fun at religion but he never, for a minute, loses any of his respect or love for God. The Inter Religious Council and Wesley Foundation of Longwood are to be congratulated for providing the college students and community with such an outstanding evening of fun and laughter. It is not one that will soon be forgotten by any who attended.

Fine Arts Center Receives Gifts

By KIM DIGGS

Ms. Barbara Bishop, Chairperson of the Longwood College Art Department, has announced several recent additions to the Longwood Fine Arts Center. Some of these gifts are now on display in Bedford.

The center has received two gifts from Mrs. John B. Mason, an active member of the Central Virginia Chapter of the Virginia Museum and retired social editor of The Farmville Herald. The first, a large still life painting, is a late nineteenth century work by an unidentified German artist. The second is a portrait of a young girl and appears to be a nineteenth century American work.

The Fine Arts Center has also received a gift of a painting from Frank von Richter, III, from California. The painting, "The Maharajah," was initially commissioned by King George IV and then purchased and brought to the United States by John W. Audubon in 1847. It was presented to the Buckingham School in 1965 by Mr. von Richter, in memory of his grandmother, Mrs. Rebekah McCue Ellis. The Longwood Fine Arts Center was presented the gift of "The Maharajah" through Mrs. R. S. Ellis, IV, of Mt. Rush Farm, Buckingham County, Virginia.

Through the efforts of Mr. Ward Eggleston, a member of the Longwood Fine Arts Center Board of Trustees, the center will be receiving two paintings by an American artist, Albert Pinkam Ryder. These paintings are being donated by Mr. Daniel R. Goldenson, who contributed another Ryder painting, "Hero and Leander," to the center in 1976.

Mr. Kip Kephart is donating a major collection of European and American prints from his private collection. Mr. Kephart, who is from Richmond, has become an important patron of the Fine Arts Center here at Longwood. In addition to these paintings, a bequest of twelve Molas to the center is being arranged by a donor from the Southside Virginia area. This bequest was prompted by the current exhibit of Molas in the Bedford Gallery.

Hike for Someone Who Can't

By ROXANNE SLAUGHTER

"Hike For Someone Who can't" is the theme of the Hike-a-thon being sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega. The Hike-a-thon is sponsored to raise money for the Virginia Lung Association.

The Hike-a-thon will be held on September 26, 1981. On this day the walkers are to meet on High Street in front of Longwood for registration, which starts at 8 o'clock. The actual hike starts at 9 o'clock. The walkers will start here at Longwood and will walk anywhere from 1 to 12 miles. The walkers are allowed to pick their own distance. If someone chooses to walk 12 miles then he/she will walk to Hampden Sydney on the back road (the one used for the Mini-a-thon) and then back to Longwood.

One might ask how do I get sponsors? Okay, there are sponsor sheets which can be obtained at the Post Office, the Information Office, most all of the Front Desk of Dorms and many businesses downtown. Get a sheet and just ask your friends or whoever to sponsor you for a certain amount of money for each mile you walk. It's that simple. Then on the day of the walk bring your sponsor sheets with you to registration.

There will be prizes given to those who bring in the most money. First prize will be a 10 speed girl's or boy's bike which was donated by Rose's, second prize will be a Pioneer RK500 portable cassette stereo donated by the Stereo and T.V. Shoppe, third prize will be $45.00 in gift certificates ($30.00 certificate from Parlet's Inc. and $15.00 certificate from Western Auto), and there are more smaller prizes to be given away.

On September 8, challenge letters were sent out to the social sororities and fraternities on campus, challenging them to help us, Alpha Phi Omega, raise money for the Virginia Lung Association.

If anyone has questions or wants more information call 392-8973. I will be there working with my brothers and sisters and I challenge you to help us to "Hike for Someone Who can't."

New Program Provides Services for Handicapped

By CINDY CORELL

Purely coincident to the fact that 1981 is the International Year of the Disabled, this is also the year that Longwood College begins a new program with services provided primarily for the disabled. In 1977, new amendments to the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 were published, that prohibit discrimination of any person with any handicap who applies to a State Agency (such as Longwood) on the sole basis of his/her disability. Since then, Longwood college has been consciously working to eliminate barriers to the handicapped. In steady progress along this line to get handicapped students into the mainstream of academics, Longwood College has now named a contact person on campus to work with those students either physically handicapped or learning disabled.

Dr. Jennings G. Cox, the Director of Counseling Services has now also been named the Director of Centralized Services for Special Students. This position gives Dr. Cox, who has a great deal of experience working with handicapped persons, the responsibility of being the one contact person to work with these handicapped students.

Some of the duties that Dr. Cox is responsible for include providing the disabled student special services such as tape recordings of lectures, and notetakers to record lectures on paper, and adding physical aids to passage ways on campus such as ramps where stairs are used, elevators, and widened doorways to admit wheelchairs, to make all parts of the campus accessible to all students. He is also organizing a committee of interested persons to look into other services for the disabled, improve old services, and possibly innovate new services.

Dr. Cox is very enthusiastic and encouraged with this new program, which is uncommonly advanced for such a small college. He feels that this is very much in keeping with President Greenwood's "join together" theme for 1981-82, and thinks that this will greatly increase Longwood's sense of community.

The director of this new program is very interested that any student who feels that he or she needs any of the above services should be aware of them. "If you have a handicapping condition and need special services, you're welcome to contact me at 392-9235," he says. He is also interested that

Faculty Show Opens

By ILONA WILSON

"The Annual Faculty exhibit is a showcase of sophisticated, quality work by professional artists who work in a variety of media," said Miss Barbara Bishop, head of the Department of Art, concerning this year's art exhibit. The exhibit will be September 14 through October 2 in Bedford Gallery. All eight of the faculty are professional artists as well as teachers. "We exhibit here for the benefit of the students and the community. It has become a tradition," remarked Miss Bishop. Miss Bishop is displaying work in the media of handmade paper and fiber collage, which are abstract landscapes.

Mr. Mark Baldridge is displaying his jewelry including one of his newest pieces, "Regal Splendor." This piece was recently on display in a national exhibit, Metalmisth 1981, at the University of Kansas. "I spent the most time working on 'Regal Splendor.' A couple of pieces were in last year's exhibition." Mr. Baldridge lives in the Midlothian area where he and his wife, Lynda, own the "Baldridge Gallery" in Sycamore Square. All of Dr. Edward Betenas' work in the exhibit are bronze and stainless steel sculptures. They are produced by a process called lost-wax casting, which are polished after they are broken out of their molds. This process "is centuries old and was used in ancient Greece, China and Italy," said Mr. Betenas. All the pieces belong to one of two special series, either Vertical Organisms or Landscape.

Mr. Randall W. Edmondson will be displaying two painting in acrylic as well as an earthenware bowl. "I think you could describe the paintings as hard-edged geometrical abstractions. The earthenware platter was raku fired," said Edmondson. One of his paintings is entitled "Broken Rainbow."

Dr. E. L. Flynn is displaying black and white photography from her European trip this summer. When asked what she liked about architecture, Dr. Flynn remarked, "precision, imagination, sharp contrast, and abstract patterns." In reference to the Roman construction and brickwork which she photographed, she said, "I find this aesthetically pleasing and historically and intellectually fascinating. I use the photographs in class for explaining Roman brick work and Roman construction methods."

Showcase Gallery Coming Soon

By SARAH BISE

Beginning on September 22-30, 1981, the Longwood College Department of Art and the Student Union will present their first of many art exhibits. These works will be displayed in the Lankford Reading Rooms. The Showcase Gallery first occurred in 1974, to give any senior or graduate Art Majors a chance to have a one man show, thus displaying their own individual works of art.

Ms. Ellen Elinsky will be the first artist to be featured this year. She expects to have approximately twenty pieces, which include oil painting, prints, pencil drawing, pen and ink, silver point, scratch board, and punch weaving. Ms. Elinsky views the Showcase Gallery as "a good opportunity for seniors to display their work, because it gives other students and faculty members a chance to view your work, and it's a good experience for an artist to do."

Throughout the semester, many senior or graduate artists will have their works on display at Lankford after Ms. Elinsky leaves, such as:

Elizabeth Jones — October 12-21; Barbara Stent — October 23-November 1; Robin Hungate — November 3-12; Deborah Gordon — November 30-December 9

All students and faculty are invited to come and see for themselves these artistic displays which will be shown throughout the 1981 Fall Semester.

"BARK WORSE THAN BITE?"

Livingston Taylor, brother of James, will be performing without this lackadaisical retriever that seems not to bark or bite. Trent Arterberry, a mime will also be in the concert at 8:00 in Jarman. Tickets are $2.50 for LC students and $4.00 for guests.

By RUSTY HURLEY

The Phi Mu Alpha-Sigma Alpha Iota production of Godspell has been revived due to an enthusiastic rescue operation by students. But directors Thomas Williams and Dr. Louard Egbert have decided to hold a second audition night to try to fill the gaps in the cast.

The directors will hold a second audition night tonight. (Call backs at 7:00 p.m.; new auditions at 6:00 p.m.) in the rehearsal room at Wygal. Town and Gown are urged to audition. Those wishing to work on the crew are asked to report at 6:30. The production is great, the directors enthusiastic and we need YOUR talent to make it work!

College Republicans Return

By LORI RANDALL

The College Republicans of Longwood College are once again organizing events for the November 3, 1981 election which includes the Republican candidates as follows: Marshall Coleman running for governor, Nathan Miller running for lieutenant governor, and Wyatt Durette running for attorney general. The College Republicans would like for all of the students to know what these men can do for their state. They can also assist students in getting an absentee ballot.

The College Republicans also conduct fund-raising events such as car washes and dances. They have bumper brandings where they go to shopping centers and put bumper stickers on cars and distribute literature. They also view the returns together, and sometimes go to the victory (or defeat) party in Richmond. They would like to get together with the College Democrats and have a debate, and possibly a mock election. Mark Davis (of whom all this wealth of information came from) put out last year Longwood's first college Republican Newsletter, and will continue this year. These will be distributed outside the dining hall.

Once a year all of the College Republicans in Virginia get together at a convention. They form their platform, and send it to the state party leaders and the congressmen. Many activities have been planned this year, and all the manpower they can get is welcome.

Home Economics Banquet

By GAYLE WEAVER

A banquet was held in the Prince Edward Room on September 7 at 5:30 for freshmen and transfer Home Economics majors. The purpose of the banquet was to allow new students to become acquainted with the Virginia Home Economics Association and American Home Economics Association.

Speaker for the evening was Debbie Layman, President of the student member section of the HEA. Mrs. Layman informed the students about the VHA and AHEA and the advantages of joining these professional associations.

Cathy Carden, membership chairman, spoke on the new program in the AHEA, "Adopt A Professional." This program matches a member with a professional and allows communication between the two through correspondence, personal meetings, telephone and interviews. This allows them to find inside information on their profession.

Rare Treat

Editor:

Those of us who heard Grady Nutt Tuesday night experienced a rare treat. Imagine if you can, Jarman chock full of students and guests, all of whom were kept in stitches for over two hours. Grady Nutt is indeed a rare humorist.

As a member of this highly entertained audience, may I extend our thanks and a hearty well-done to the Wesley Foundation, the students, and the leaders of the Inter-Religious Council who made this experience possible.

Editor's Turn

This campus is supposed to be emersed in action to change the negative aspects of our college that have been harped upon too long.

Many administrative offices have changed procedures and duties, hopefully improving service to the entire campus. Faculty members seem pleased with future goals and improvements for the college.

Nevertheless, Longwood seems infamous for its hesitancy among administrators and faculty members.

They should concern themselves with issues on campus that need to be addressed. As long as everyone on campus refuses to stick their necks out so to speak to make a recognizable stand, no one should complain about unfair treatment.

If the administration and faculty are supposed to be setting an example for the student body, one wonders what type of leaders we will have in the future?

Lithuanian Finds Room For Freedom

In America—Longwood

By MARY R. SHIELDS

Lithuania is a land of natural beauty, ancient history and rich culture, of proud hard working people.

It is also a land where the American way of life is illegal. To come from an atmosphere of total repression into the free world is to experience a life long dream.

Such a dream has come true for Eduard Betenas.

Dr. Betenas, a native of Lithuania, now employed by Longwood as a sculpture professor, left his homeland in the early seventies for the free world.

Lithuania, on the Baltic Sea, was a democracy from 1919 through 1940, but during World War II the country was embroiled in a struggle for identity finally everging as a Soviet Republic. Because, as Dr. Betenas relates, "almost every family was involved in the war", the atmosphere in which he grew up was one where the devastating reminders of this "most terrible war" were constantly being recalled. The shadows of the democratic nation that Lithuania had once been were continually compared to the restrictions of Soviet life. These conditions instilled in Dr. Betenas a "hunger" for America as a "symbol of freedom, of technological and political advancement." He feels that he was influenced more by western "Americanized" Europe than by the culture of Lithuania's big brother, Russia. His relatives throughout the free world sent him articles published, often in Russian, by free presses, American clothes, and American music by singers such as Elvis Presley and Chuck Berry.

Finally, when in his early twenties, he grasped the only solution to communist repression, he left a country where capitalism, freedom of expression, the freedom to travel, or the chance to change the country's government are all illegal or impossible.

Dr. Betenas left "one of the most prettiest cities I have seen", his hometown the capitol of Lithuania, his family, the Academy he attended for a Masters in Painting, and the feeling of being forced into the Communist society.

"I went to see the world," and so he did. He travelled from centrally located Paris to the areas of civilization which are important to European culture, walked through Rome to stand in the Forum, visited museums, peeled away the layers of history which are the basis of European life and art.

In 1977, Dr. Betenas came to New York to begin his first stay in America. He travelled to the West Coast to visit relatives, marvelling at the contrasts between "the best country in the world" and the Soviet Union. The vast expanses of open woodland, the youthful cities, the fact that almost everyone owned a car stuck in his memory. He wondered at the critical attitudes of some of the people he spoke with, ultimately realizing that Americans are too close to their country to put the bad in perspective with the good.

In 1978 he returned to America to begin three years of intensive study at Penn State University culminating in a Masters in Sculpture and a Doctorate in Art Education.

After working extremely hard in such a relatively impersonal environment, Dr. Betenas began looking for something more intimate, quiet and peaceful. Farmville and Longwood are "exactly what I want (them) to be." He hopes to be able to pause to reflect on my "experiences" in more natural surroundings, and to reach a balance between my work and leisure time. He also hopes to have more time to indulge in watching sports, especially soccer, and to travel to study land and city scapes.

We hope Dr. Betenas can realize his goals, influence his students as favorably as he would like, and that Longwood can serve as an inspiration to his work.

CONFUSED

At best, today's rock scene is a melange of different styles. The schizodynamics of the B-52's to the roar of Rush. It seems we're passing through a different era annually. Pink Floyd's "The Wall" was the news of the day in 1980, yet in 1981 REO Speedwagon, a group that had been in relative obscurity for over a decade, launched a blitz on the record market. What do Pink Floyd and REO have in common? Not much. What is going on in the music biz?

Rockcorner will not only keep you abreast of concerts, album releases and pop news, but a critical look at what's going on. Not everything written in Rockcorner will please everyone; it is impossible. When it comes to rock, everyone is a critic... a fan of the Ramones will probably buy their next album no matter what I say about it, good or bad. So why read Rockcorner? It will (hopefully) offer not only insight on rock, but also make you think about the whats and whys. Rockcorner will never be so pretentious (aka foolish) as to totally reject any music category and, throughout the year a variety of rock will be highlighted — not just the critic's favorite which sometimes is the case. And that brings us to the case of REO Speedwagon.

"High Infidelity," their multi-platinum album has finally brought the group to the top of the rock heap (saleswise, that is). The fact is REO, like the Bee Gees, probably have their best work behind them rather than on their current success. REO began when Gary Riech (guitars) met Kevin Cronin (vocals). The band added keys, bass and drum and began touring the midwest in the early '70's with another unknown band — Styx.

Styx got their break early on, but for REO there was still a long road ahead.

In 1974 they released the disc "Lost In A Dream" which many still believe is their best. But it fell on deaf ears.

There is a rule of thumb in the record biz: if a band is hot on stage, sell it live. So in 1976-77 they released what is probably their best album, "You Get What You Play For". The tunes that had seemed mundane in the studio sizzle on this disc. "Keeping", "Magic Man",

Movie Review

By JOE JOHNSON

A future with Humphrey Bogart and Charles Bronson or maybe Batman and Robin, or better yet Superman and Wonderwoman. Comic Book Cliche' seemed to be the specialty of Heavy Metal an Ivan Petman-Leonard Magel production.

Heavy metal, a movie promoted for its musical wonder and art phantasmorgia fell far short of expectations. Having such name groups as Black Sabbath, Blue Oyster Cult, Cheap Trick, Devo, Donald Fogen, Dan Felder, Grand Funk Railroad, Sammy Hogan, Journey, Nazareth, Stevie Nicks, Riggs and Trust one would expect a little more than minute whispers scattered through the movie like lingering applause after a command performance. Music director, Elmer Bernstein seemed to be more intent on presenting the audience with dramatic science fiction sound effects, which managed to block out any rock and roll that could have squeezed through.

On the other hand, Heavy Metal's landscaping for the scenes where great. Based on artwork by Richard Cohen, Angus McKie, Dan O'Barron, Thomas Work and Bernie

"Ridin' ,he Storm Out" are shining examples. Unfortunately for REO, "Frampton Comes Alive" was released the same year... "You Can Tune A Piano But You Can't Tunafish" was their next success — this time they did reach more listeners. Two cuts are especially good, "Roll With The Changes" and the magical "Time For Me To Fly" brought the sizzle of the live albums (they also released another partially live album) into their studio work. REO was now a contender.

"High Infidelity", the band's monster hit, is a letdown to REO fans. They are doing nothing new from what they did in 1970. In fact, the whole album is rather cliché when compared to their other work, but it is new to the top-forty crowd. The best songs off the album, "Keep On Loving You", "Don't Let Him Go" and "Out of Season" all bear the mark of their earlier work, the only real changes being a rather smoothly produced sound. Overall the album is a good effort, so why do I sound hesitant about it? What's wrong with an album of basically good tunes?

REO may have made the biggest score of their career, but, like their early counterpart — Styx, they have shifted gears. Although the basic sound hasn't changed, the type of music has. On "High Infidelity" the ballad type of song is more featured than it ever has been, a trait Styx picked up on their "Grand Illusion" album. Since Styx has released that album, on each succeeding album, there have been more "middle of the road" cuts and each album has been worse. Many of their older fans have left. What happens when the fourteen year-olds stop buying their albums? Other groups and artists (notably Peter Frampton and Elton John) have made the same mistake, of misreading why they're popular, and have turned their back on all the promise of their earlier work for a fleeting moment of glitter. They have lost many early fans, thus record buyers.

We can only hope REO and

VCU Wins Soccer Tournament— Longwood Runner-up

By MIKE LYNCH

"It's a scorcher" said Dona Gregg in reference to the weather during the championship round of the Longwood Invitational Soccer Tournament. This was just early on in the game. In the final minutes of the contest, when it became apparent that VCU would take the championship by defeating Longwood 2-0, an exhausted Joe Parker could barely mutter an affirmative response when asked if it was hot.

But the heat was only one of many factors that caused the Lancers' final round loss. The biggest factor, of course, was the talent-laden VCU soccer team that rolled by defending champ Trent State 4-2 in Friday evening's tournament opener. Their standout player, Soid Kamoli, an example of VCU's highly reputed "foreign talent," made his presence known everywhere. His quickness and dribbling skills made it possible for his teammates to attack the net time and time again. But really it was VCU's defense that won the tournament for them. Of the 26 goals scored throughout the tournament, only two were against VCU, and one of those was a penalty kick.

The Rams started their championship thrust by scoring two quick goals on Trent State. Trent was never really in it after that. Whenever Trent got a goal, VCU would simply wake up again and put the margin back to two goals. The Rams were, by far, the more emotional team. After the first game, VCU coach, Ben Satterfield added that his was also the more determined team. "We really wanted it," he said and he was also certain that his team would win the tournament.

On the other hand, Lancer Coach, Rich Posipanko was more hopeful than certain that his team would defeat the University of Richmond for a championship berth. In the most exciting game of the tournament, the Richmond Spiders lived up to the Lancer coaches' apprehensions by putting the game into overtime before losing 5-4. They seemed to come out of nowhere to kick their first two goals, early in the first half. But for most of the time it was Longwood that was on the offensive. Amidst a barrage of 23 first half shots at the Richmond goal, Longwood finally got two scores. The first goal was by Chris Wilkerson and the second was by Gustavo Leal with one second left in the half. Leal was, unquestionably, the player of the game. To his credit were two goals, two assists, more than his share of falls and he even managed to get a yellow card.

For the second half, the pace was even faster, exciting the Iler field crowd which became a positive factor for Longwood. Two goals scored by Bill Foster and Gustavo Leal at mid-half put the Lancers ahead 4-3, but Richmond managed to even it up on a shot that the goalie, Brian Sprinkle, tipped, but could not deflect enough to avoid the final Richmond goal. An exciting overtime produced only one goal, but it was by Longwood's Tim Brennon, winning the game and giving Longwood a chance at the title once more.

The consolation game, on Saturday morning, saw Richmond and Trenton State playing a very even and exciting game until Richmond got tired in the second half. At that point, Trent made three unanswered goals and wrapped up the consolation game 6-3.

The facts that Trent had easily won, that Richmond had become exhausted, and that VCU had a rest advantage, having played earlier and for less time than Longwood, already gave the Rams an edge for the championship game. Midway through the second half, this advantage became a factor. VCU upped its margin to 2-0 on a hard fought goal (the earlier goal was on a penalty kick). The Rams then relied on their excellent defense to hold on for the win. Towards the end, they threatened to score again on the very exhausted Lancers.

The first half showed a much better Longwood team. They played an aggressive defensive game and threatened to score many times. They seemed to be able to do anything but get the ball in the goal. The defense was much improved from the night before. The standout player was goalie, Mike Grinstead, who (Continued on Page 8)

Lady Golfers Start Season Thursday

By RONNIE BROWN

The Lady Lancers golf team posted a banner season last summer as the runner-up in the National Division II AIAW finals, but coach Barbara Smith refuses to contemplate on the past.

"While I am proud of last year's record, we cannot rest on our past accomplishments," said Dr. Smith. "This is a new year and we will enter each tournament as the most important competition to date."

The golfers will tee up the 1981 season with the Longwood Fall Invitational Tournament to be held Thursday through Saturday on the goal course adjacent to the President's house. The teams include Penn State, Marshall, James Madison, UNC-Wilmington, and defending AIAW Division II champ William and Mary. The Lady Lancers will be competing with a number of Division I schools and this tourney should prove to be a good test of their capabilities.

The golfers will also participate in the VAAW State Open in October and the AIAW Division II Region 2 Championship in November.

Longwood placed third in the state tournament last year and is anxious to regain the title after holding it for six out of the last eleven seasons.

The Lady Lancers return five of the six golfers from last season. All American Kay Smith was lost to graduation, but All Americans, junior Robin Andrews and sophomore Emily Fletcher will be back. Other veterans include sophomores Chery Dufort and Susan Morgan. Sharon Gilmore, who placed twentieth in last year's national tournament, should also make a strong contribution to this year's team. The freshman consist of Donna Turner from Chapel Hill, NC, Kathy Wytenbach, from Chester, VA, and Marlane Gerker from Watertown, NY. Dr. Smith will also rely on Pam Othen, a sophomore transfer from Miami Dade Junior College. Othen's team captured first placed in the National Junior College Tournament in 1980.

With the combination of a nucleus of veterans and some promising newcomers, the golfers can have another successful season.

The Longwood College Lancer Club, at its fall membership meeting Thursday night, formulated plans for fund raising projects and a membership drive. Over 57 members, including parents of athletes, local residents and businesses, alumni and Longwood employees, have been added since the club was formed last January.

Designed to foster interest in and raise funds for Longwood Athletics, the Lancer Club will be holding a membership drive October 17 through November 3 with a goal of doubling its membership. In conjunction with the membership drive, a walk-jog-a-thon has been scheduled for the morning of October 17 from 9:00 to 10:00. The event will be the Lancer Club's major fund-raising project for the fall.

A highly successful fund-raising event at other colleges and universities, the walk-jog-a-thon will involve participants walking or jogging around a .4 of a mile area (on High St. adjacent to Longwood) with pledges secured for each lap completed in an hour.

Other projects are in the works, according to Bob Burger, Jr.,

Project Committee Chairman. Other members of the project committee include: Longwood Interim Director of Athletics Carolyn Hodges, Ron Ferrante and Mattiemarie White.

Membership Committee Chairman Kitty Hubbard says the club's membership drive will be capped off with a social in conjunction with the Longwood-Hampden-Sydney soccer game November 3. Other members of the membership committee are: Dr. Caryton Buck, Dr. Elisabeth Flynn and John Berrong.

President of the Lancer Club is Charles H. Dowdy, III.

Baseball Has Formidable Opponents

The top powers in Division I baseball in Virginia will come calling this fall as Longwood's baseball team plays its fall schedule of scrimmage games. On tap for the Lancers, 24-13 last spring, are home games with Virginia, Virginia Tech, Richmond and Virginia Commonwealth and, in addition, Division III power Lynchburg for several contests on Lancer Field.

Longwood defeated VCU 6-5 Wednesday and will be getting ready for a visit from the Richmond Spiders Saturday, September 19, at 1:00. After hosting Lynchburg for a home game on the 25th, Longwood will take on James Madison October 11, Virginia the 17th and Virginia Tech the 31st.

Longwood Hockey Team Hosts 3rd Invitational

Longwood's field hockey team, which defeated Mary Washington 4-0 Thursday, will host the third Longwood Invitational Tournament Friday and Saturday at Barlow Field and for the third straight year the tourney will include some of the strongest teams from the Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, North Carolina area.

Defending champ Maryland and last year's runner-up Davis & Elkins (WV), which won the crown in 1979, return along with Appalachian State. Duke, North Carolina and Longwood round out the six team field.

In the round robin format each team will play five games in two days with 40 minute contests rather than the regulation 70 minutes. Play begins at 10:00 Friday morning and at 8:00 Saturday morning.

Maryland had a 3-0-1 mark to take top honors in last year's five-team event. Davis & Elkins went 3-1-0 to finish second.

Longwood, 11-7 a year ago, got its 1981 season off to a solid start Thursday with a 4-0 win over Mary Washington. The Lady Lancers, who host Lynchburg Tuesday at 3:00, got three goals from senior Mary King (VIRGINIA BEACH) and one from Freshman Robyn Grindle (ANNANDALE) to top the Blue Tide. Junior goalkeeper Lorrie Garber (VIRGINIA BEACH) had 10 saves and a shutout in her first start on the varsity.

"I was pleased with our performance," said Longwood coach Bette Harris. "For our first game we accomplished the things we wanted to accomplish. We changed the field quickly, played assertively for at least two thirds of the game and functioned as a unit."

"I'm super pleased with Garber's performance," said Dr. Harris, "and Mary (King) played a tremendous game. She really took charge."

made many excellent saves and had almost no chance to block the two balls that did pass him.

Even through all these achievements, the highest compliment that can be paid to Longwood is for the tournament itself. The tournament was not set up with three teams that the Lancers could surely beat, unlike many other schools. This shows a good deal of class and the tournament will surely be reorganized and rewarded with great competition for years to come.

The variety and talent of Annual Faculty Exhibit makes it well worth seeing. The Faculty hopes students and other faculty members will come to Bedford Gallery before October 2. It will be well worth the trip to see what their colleagues and teachers have been doing outside of the classroom!

their management see this fact. When Styx was younger they had an occasional ballad, like "Lady". But was, in the middle of the slush they've recently released, "Lady's" power has dissipated. If REO capitalizes on their success by breaking new ground, they will become one of the front-runners in rock. But if they choose, like Frampton did, to opt for commercial success, they may well be doomed for the rocks. Peter Frampton released an album this summer called "Where I Should Be". Unfortunately, it is where he should have been three or four years ago instead of embarrassing himself producing cheap rock with the Bee Gees. Anyone can see that Frampton has an enormous road to recovery because he is now on the bottom of the rock heap and he has burned so many people with poor albums, he may never make it back to the top. Styx is slipping, we can only hope REO Speedwagon has sense enough to keep producing good music and by doing so, avoid the pitfalls of rock. Dr. Cox notes another problem faced by disabled persons; this involving other people's attitudes toward them. Many non-handicapped people either totally ignore the disabled, or go overboard, putting the disabled person on a pedestal and making the situation very uncomfortable. Dr. Cox stresses that it is imperative that others go in neither extreme, but accept and treat the disabled person as a human.

Wrighton, the movie was a kaleidoscopic tour of unknown futures and pasts. Unfortunately in all these landscapes they had to have characters (it helped the story move a little faster — but not much). Looking at these characters was similar to flipping through a muscle mag or playboy. Never, have I viewed such perfectly stereotyped people — rippling muscles and bodice blondes all. It must have taken a lot of imagination to achieve such a high degree of monotony.

O.K., so much for the good points of the movie, now let's talk about the theme, which was reflected in six different stories tied into a single plot line. Not actually different stories, just different landscapes. It probably wouldn't have been too bad if they could have snuck up on you with the theme and let you imagine that you figured it out all by yourself. But that's not the Heavy Metal way, the Heavy Metal way is to knock you between the eyes with blazing fist and flashing swords. So what are the first words of the movie, but the theme stated in a deep articulate voice: "I am the sound of evil...my power invests all galaxies...a shadow should fall over the universe and evil shall grow from this guise and death from that."

The voice of evil is embodied in a little green ball which, melts people down to skeletons and nasty stuff like that. This green ball follows different (more or less...mostly less) characters through vividly changing landscapes and manages to destroy everything that is involved with it. Sprinkled through all this dynamic violence are poorly timed lust scenes, which inevitably end with one or both of the lovers (poor choice of words — "lusts" might be better) being turned into dust or melted into jelly.

As one might imagine the dialogue consists of raptant cliché's uttered (depending on the genre) in rough guttural undertones or tinkly helplessness. How about these for some real jewels, "Pretty but Dumb" or "I'll do anything you want...just stay with me." It would be nice to think that perhaps director Gerald Patterson was attempting a satire...but I have this nagging suspicion that he was trying to be entertaining. Then again maybe he's hit upon the formula for the 1980's — Senseless death and senseless sex. I guess it's just the passive compliance of a burnt out world, jaded to everything but the most simple and explicit, that explains this movie's popularity.

Jordan Highlighted In Fireside Chat

By GAIL W. SHANNON

The first Fireside Chat was held September 17 at 7:30 p.m. at Longwood House. To open the evening, Dr. Janet Greenwood reiterated her theme of 'joining together' to welcome the guests; members of the Hampden-Sydney and Farmville communities, Longwood administrative staff, faculty, and students. She informed the approximately 300 guests that the same sort of informal gatherings had been held more than 100 years ago for the same purpose of drawing the college and community together.

Dr. Greenwood chose Mr. Homer Springer of the Longwood Art Department to organize the Fireside Chats. For the first meeting, Mr. Springer chose Dr. James Jordan of the Anthropology-Sociology Department to present a slide presentation on the Longwood College Summer Field School in Archeology and the three digs he has conducted over the last two years.

Dr. Jordan began his discussion by explaining that archeology is "the study of prehistoric human societies through the material artifacts excavated from their living sites." According to Dr. Jordan, "the purpose of archeology is to make things speak that seem not to be able to. Archeologists are interested in the relationships between artifacts — the objects man makes — and behavior." They are trying to "reach into the very minds of the people who made the artifacts."

The slide presentation began by projecting the audience back in time by about 100 to 200 years with slides taken at the Hampden-Sydney College slave cabin site. One of the first discoveries was that of empty Bromo Seltzer and Celery Caffeine Salt bottles. The fact was mentioned that, in combination, these two compounds can produce a high comparable to some of today's drugs. An empty laudanum bottle was also found, prompting several tongue-in-cheek comments from the audience on just who had been using these high-producing drugs, the slaves or the H-SC president of that day. The slave cabin just happens to stand behind Middlecourt, the residence of the H-SC president. Two, even more significant discoveries were imparted to the audience; one was the presence of arrowheads in the cabin, and the other was the presence of VMI cadet buttons worn at the time of the Civil War. The question was raised over the arrowheads about whether Indians and slaves may have been congregating together in the cabin around 1829. The possibility also exists that a slave had simply picked up the arrowheads in the fields. No real explanations were offered concerning the VMI cadet buttons; that question still remains a mystery.

Besides the slave cabin, the Field School tried to find the original buildings of H-SC based on studies of insurance policies of 1776 and other documents. A site was excavated based on the findings of these studies and the workers immediately hit an area thought to be the original president's kitchen. This conclusion was reached based on finds of broken crockery and other items and comparison with dimensions listed in the original documents. Of great interest were 34 day pipe stems found in the site. These stems presented a problem that is still unresolved. According to Dr. Jordan, these pipe stems were hand-bored using a technique that had evolved over a period of many years and which allowed smaller and smaller holes to be bored. A classification system has been developed to date the stems based on the size of the hole. Each size hole covered a time span of about 50 years. The pipe stems found at H-SC were dated at about 1725 using this dating system. Dr. Jordan further explained that it would be virtually impossible for stems in use to last that long because of their fragility. Therefore, the problem posed is whether or not the date entered in the H-SC records is incorrect for that of the original buildings. The possibility of delving further into this site at a later date was mentioned. Until then at least, the question of the pipe stems will remain unresolved.

The next set of slides took us back 1000 years in time to the Smith-Taylor Mound Site located in Prince Edward County across from the Southside Community Hospital. This excavation site was determined to be of the Mississippian Mound Type consisting of three pyramids with flat tops used by settled,

Catch That Oktoberfest Spirit

By BRENDA COLEMAN

Oktoberfest 1981 is in full swing with reds, greens, blues, along with many campus groups and organizations, all working together to successfully pull off Longwood's biggest fall week end. Preparations for this Oktoberfest began early last semester and the work will continue up until the very last hours before the big week end of October 23-25.

Geist, Longwood's top leadership honorary, sponsors this annual event. The Geist members have already worked out a complex program of events and locations to accommodate the Oktoberfest festivities. They have tried to coordinate all the planned activities into one large, fun-filled week end for students, parents, faculty members, and friends alike.

Already chosen and hard at work are the 22 blue and white Klowns, 8 ushers and 3 meisters. These individuals spread the enthusiasm and blue and white spirit symbolic of Oktoberfest and were tapped at Geist's Oktoberfest tapping on Sept. 10. The ushers who will perform traditional German dances are Tom Gonzales and Missy Wagner (freshmen); Todd Bashum and Leigh Ann Goddin (sophomores); Brenda Jenkins and John Todd (juniors); Karen "Bird" Kilmer and Katrina Harlow (seniors). The spirited meisters who will preside over the festivities of the weekend are Mittenmeister Mary Mary Yates, Festmeister Michelle Lewis, and Geistmeister Dennis Southers.

And who can forget those 22 beautiful, bouncy klowns? This year's colorful bunch will perform gymnastic stunts, mimes, and attempt to build Squash, the famous Clown pyramid, in addition to entertaining and delighting all at Oktoberfest. Our Klowns for this year are Mitzi Mason, Kathy Klebert, Jo Jacobs, Sharon Payne, Debbie Mihm, Anne Dempsey, Andrea Simmons, Vicki Nesbitt, Julie Jones, Pam Stanley, Penny Laudermilk, Sara Kengstorf, Patty Carey, Ellyn Friedsam, Lynley Dous, Brenda Barkley, Amy Campbell, Beth Wanamaker, Ann Masi, Tommy Schmelter, Karen Dougherty, and Vicki Beasley.

But these aren't the only people involved in Oktoberfest. The color classes have already been hard at work writing their color skits and having tryouts and rehearsals. Each individual class and participating organization also has a booth on the Midway that will sell items as a money-making project. The classes participate in color rush, a 5-event athletic contest between the Reds and Greens. In addition, the freshmen and sophomores participate in the annual Paint Battle, the first event of the Oktoberfest week that kicks off the color competition.

The color class skits will be performed both Friday and Saturday nights, with judging taking place on Saturday. The skits are the most important part of the weekend's color competition. Much hard work must be put into the writing, directing, costumes, music, and dancing in these skits in order for them to be both entertaining as well as successful.

Other events planned for the week end include the alumni CHI walk, the traditional cake cutting, the Biergarten, Festhouse, athletic games, and various SUN events. Special effort is put into the preparation of the Oktoberfest week end in order to appeal to people of all ages. The variety of events this year range from skits to a moonwalk to paint battle. Oktoberfest is for everyone — plan to participate and catch that Oktoberfest spirit !!!

If anyone has any questions or views on Oktoberfest, please contact Betty Lou Smith, Geist Chairman of Oktoberfest, 2-8307, Box 837, 328 Wheeler or any member of Geist.

Spencer and Frazier Qualify For 25th National Wheelchair Games

By ANNETTE NOCE

Longwood students Debra Spencer, a native of Bumpass, and Bill Frazier from Warrenton competed in the 25th National Wheelchair Games at the University of Washington. The competition took place from June 16th to June 21st. They were sponsored by Longwood College, proceeds from the Therapeutic Recreation Organization Wheelchair basketball game and by the athletes themselves.

Debra and Bill were accompanied by their coach, Frank Brasile, director of Longwood's therapeutic recreation program. Coach Brasile feels that both athletes are exceptional competitors. In addition to their athletic abilities, both Debra and Bill are on the Dean's list and participate on several other activities. Bill is the vice-president of Sigma Phi Epsilon social fraternity and also finds time to play for the Richmond Rim-Riders. Debra is a member on Geist, Delta Psi Kappa (physical education honors fraternity) Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority, a head investigator for the judicial board and was chairman for the Longwood College Muscular Dystrophy Superdance.

Bill qualified to compete in the national games in table tennis, the shot put and the slalom. This was Bill's first year competing in the National games. He competed in the toughest categories and just making it to the games is quite an honor. Debra qualified and competed in the four class 5 swimming events: the 50-meter butterfly, 100 meter freestyle, 400 meter distance freestyle and the 100-meter backstroke. Debra received three second place silver medals, and a third place bronze. She also broke the existing national record in the 50 yard butterfly by a half a second. Bill and Debra were the only wheelchair athletes from Virginia to represent a college.

Market Survey Continues

The first local market basket survey of the 1981-82 year, conducted by the Economic Seminar Class at Longwood College, revealed a pleasant surprise for all. Local food prices dropped an unexpected 3.8 per cent over the past four months.

The food basket cost $60.85 this month, compared to a cost of $63.28 in May. Dr. Anthony Cristo, director of the survey project, states that the cost reductions in Farmville are stores were generally in line with national and state trends, but the percentage of decline locally was much greater than expected.

The table below gives a comparison of market basket figures in the four areas of Virginia which are surveyed:

orange juice, cabbage, celery, onions, potatoes, peaches, corn, peas, tomato soup, coffee, cola drinks, peanut butter, margarine, sugar, and grape jelly.

price of bread, soda crackers, hamburger, pork chops, bacon, hot dogs, eggs, frozen green beans, apples, oranges, carrots, lettuce, tomatoes, and shortening. Items showing no change in price from the May figures were round steak and bananas.

The difference between the high and the low market basket this month was $15.99. If a consumer could locate the lowest prices for all of the items, the cost of the basket would be $52.85. If the consumer purchased only the Bayer aspirin (+9.4 per cent), Bic pens (+8.33 per cent), Pledge furniture polish (+1.37 per cent), Windex cleaner (+4.90 per cent), Jergens lotion (+2.12 per cent), Leggs panty hose (+36.7 per cent), Kodak film (+19.3 per cent), Eveready batteries (+16.05 per cent), 9-Lives cat food (+2.63 per cent), Tide detergent (+8.52 per cent), Lysol spray (+10.37 per cent).

Decreases were found for the following items: Budweiser beer (-8.8 per cent), Crest toothpaste (-8.04 per cent), Dial soap (-3.84 per cent), Bounty paper towels (-3.16 per cent), Hershey candy bars (-7.69 per cent), Band-aids (-5.83 per cent), Kleenex tissues (-2.13 per cent), Downy fabric softener (-2.96 per cent),

	Aug. 1981	Sept. 1981	% Change 8/81-9/81	Sept. 1980	% Change 9/80-9/81
Richmond	$59.72	$58.91	- 1.4	$58.63	+ 0.5
Northern Virginia	58.94	58.65	- 0.5	N/A	N/A
Norfolk-Va. Beach-Ports.	59.88	58.54	- 2.2	58.12	+ 0.7
Farmville	N/A	60.85	N/A	60.88	- 0.5

Food prices in Farmville are still higher than in the three metropolitan areas of the state. It is significant, however, that prices in Farmville have actually declined very slightly from September a year ago, bringing local prices more in line with those in the metropolitan areas. The local basket had the only yearly decrease of all the areas surveyed.

Accounting for the sharp change since May 1981 were deep cuts in the prices of flour, corn flakes, fryers, frozen haddock, tuna fish, cheese, milk, ice cream, evaporated milk, canned higher priced items, the same basket would cost $68.84, showing that it definitely still pays to shop around.

The Economics Seminar class also conducts a "trivia basket" survey. This basket includes items, other than food, which the average consumer normally purchases. The local trivia basket survey is the only one of its kind in the state.

Trivia basket items which have increased in price since May are as follows: Marlboro cigarettes (+4.63 per cent), Arrid deodorant (+12.63 per cent), G.E. light bulbs (+1.37 per cent), notebook paper (-37.74 per cent), Johnson's swabs (-22.1 per cent), and Prell shampoo (-6.37 per cent).

Gasoline prices were generally lower. Imperial and East Coast showed price declines of 4.62 per cent, with Exxon and other major brands showing smaller decreases.

The local survey projects are conducted through the department of business and economics at Longwood College, with financial support by the Longwood College Foundation.

Love For Love

By BRENDA COLEMAN

Rehearsals continue for the Longwood Players — Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts' first production of the fall Love for Love, the 17th-century restoration comedy by William Congreve. This play is a very special production for the Longwood Players student organization because it is the 100th production since the organization of the group as well as the celebration show for the 30th anniversary of Jarman's opening.

Sherry Forbes, a sophomore drama major from the Tidewater area, is the stage manager for this production. Her responsibilities range from overseeing the technical aspects of the production to playing prompter for the actors' lives. Sherry also has an added responsibility because this production is a very difficult play for audience, cast and crew alike. She has brought enthusiasm and determination to a group of actors in need of a guiding force.

"This has been the best group to work with," Sherry states about her job so far. "We have some very new and inexperienced actors who are all learning to work together as a group. They 'flow' together — I can't think of a better term than that. All these people are growing together through this show. Each day of rehearsal shows more maturity on everyone's part. Sure, every show has its problems and I am sure we will have some too. But these guys are pulling closer together to make this show a success — they want that badly."

Sherry noted that quite a few freshmen tried out for Love for Love and got parts in the production. "It is so neat watching all the new people improve as each day goes by. The presence of George Hughes and Frank Creasy (veteran Longwood Players' actors) makes a lot of difference. They

Senior Recital

By RUSTY HURLEY

Ms. Mern McGonigle, a senior music education major from Richmond, will give a senior recital on the bassoon this Friday, September 25, at 8 p.m. A graduate of Manchester High School, Ms. McGonigle will be playing a variety of music from the bassoon repertoire. Works by Bertoli, Beethoven, Hindemith and Ibert will be played. The Beethoven Second Duet in Bb Major will feature Ms. Debi Dewey on clarinet as well as Ms. McGonigle. Accompanying will be Mr. Michael Gould on harpsichord and piano.

Concerning music, Ms. McGonigle is passionately in love with her art. "Music has been personally gratifying to me. It brings me closer to the essence of experience... that is why I want to teach, because I get a personal feeling that cannot be compared to anything else. That is why I want to share my knowledge with students of music."

Ms. McGonigle is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. McGonigle, Jr. of Richmond.

Audience Enjoys "Sound & Silence"

By KURT COFFIELD
Mellow rock ballads, mimes and a good time were all to be had in Jarman Auditorium when Livingston Taylor and Trent Arterberry performed to the enthusiastic Longwood crowd on September 17, in their show entitled "Sound and Silence." Trent Arterberry, performing first, showed his expertise as he pantomimed skits of a cowboy in a bar, a father babysitting, and dramatic impersonation of war.

His final act was titled "disjointed" and Trent portrayed a lost soul who becomes loyal to the smokable cannabis plant. The crowd was thoroughly amused by his mimicry.

After a short intermission the crowd was primed for the evenings main attraction. Livingston Taylor walked on stage dressed in formal attire and immediately informed the audience that he was removing his tie. After this pressure-relieving move he promptly strung and such mellow tunes as "Dance With Me," and "First Time Love." He then showed his versatility and strummed humorous ballads about the familiar Jacques Cousteau and the Soviet Union. Taylor in the summer of 1981 released an album titled Mans Best Friend and sang numerous cuts during Thursday's show. Some of the most recognized and received songs were "Carolina Day", "Sunshine Girl" and "Pajamas On." Throughout the show Livingston, brother of James, played three different instruments, guitar, piano and banjo.

Trent Arterberry and Livingston Taylor put on a well performed show Thursday night and delighted the few in attendance. A gentle blend of soft rock and mimicry were just the right mixture of successful "Sound and Silence."

Link Lynx to Success

By TRACY RICE

S-U-N's presentation of the musical group LYNX held on Wednesday night in the ABC rooms was a tremendous success. To an almost capacity crowd, the versatile group performed original numbers as well as a varied collection of popular favorites.

The first of three sets consisted of hits such as "Amie" and "Two Lane Highway" by Pure Prairie League, "Danny's Song" by Loggins & Messina, "Peaceful Easy Feeling" by the Eagles, and a varied collection of their predominantly Southern-style rocking.

After a short break, the five member band got the crowd rolling with choice songs including "Reelin' the Years" by Steely Dan, "Legend" by Poco, "I Know a Little" by Lynrd Skynrd, "One Way Out" by the Allman Brothers, "Cocaine" by Eric Clapton, "Lyn' Eyes" and "James Dean" by the Eagles. Such songs as "Red Neck Mother" and "Flat Tire" got the audience stomping and flat footing.

Despite the exhausted supply of cold Budweiser, the third and final set was a fitting climax to a "kickass" show. The tunes included "Alabama Get Away" by the Grateful Dead, "Hold on Loosely" by 38-Special, "Sweet Home Alabama" by Lynrd Skynrd and "Green Grass" by the Outlaws.

The well-received encore was an original entitled "She's Been Foolin' Me" featuring the key boardist, Jimmy Jones.

The other band members of LYNX included Tom Jones on lead guitar, Vernon Martin, acoustic guitar, Rick Price, bass guitar and Randy Caffee on drums.

ARA Supporter

Dear Editor,

It seems that the same old crowd of Crusaders are at it again at Longwood. This time the target is ARA Slater, rather than Henry Willet. This group thrives not on what the students know, but what they have heard.

Now, I think it's fine to joke about the food in the dining hall, because it relaxes some of the academic tension and gives the student a common subject to discuss with the rest of the students. But the joke has gotten out of hand and I think someone should stand up and tell the fame seekers who penned this petition where it's at.

I've been there. I have waited on tables for three years now and I think that I can appreciate the improvements that have been made in the dining hall.

For one, look at the nice Ice Cream Machines that we have now. We didn't used to have them, did we? We'd be upset if they took them away, wouldn't we?

For another, look at the present drink variety. We never used to have those nice Kool-aid fountains or tea at every meal.

For another, look at the innovation made last year — opening the downstairs dining hall up during lunch for people who would rather have sandwiches than whatever is being served upstairs. Also, there is milk downstairs now, so that should stifle any complaints about no variety of drinks there.

Finally, in case you haven't noticed, we have Sundaes every Wednesday night now. I don't see too many people walking away from that.

Really, it makes me burning mad to see the number of students, particularly upperclassmen and dining hall workers who have witnessed these vast improvements. True, the food could sometimes get a little better, but the students should take into account what they eat when they are at home. No, they don't sit down to three hot meals a day, rather, they eat whatever they can find.

Whoever made out that neat little petition failed to take into account that a choice of two or three main course items is offered at each meal. In other words, if you don't like the veal, don't gripe. (Incidentally, when we have veal, I am sent back for more of it than the alternate items.)

But Mr. Pronesti deserves a lot (Continued on Page 8)

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

What's Best?

By KATHI AGNEW

Rush is an exciting and busy time of the year. The preparation is a long process, with many greeks working together to make the event a success. Many hours are spent practicing songs and skits. Grey skirts, green shirts, and red dresses are just a few of the outfits worn to symbolize each sorority. Greek letters are seen throughout the campus.

Each sorority is put in the same awkward position of proving they are the best. They may base it on having the prettiest girls, being the most unified group or having the most athletes. Whatever the case, the object is the same, strive for quota and show the rushees that your sorority is the best.

Unfortunately this is a very difficult and tense period as well.

There is little time for scholastics, sports, much less a boyfriend. Concentration is on the rushees. Late night voting, wondering which way the rushees will walk, and wearing sorority clothes constantly, begins to take its toll on each of the members. The fact that a sorority can take a complete turnaround with one pledge class only increases the tension.

Each sorority on Longwood Campus is different, just as every individual is different. Each person is an important part of the group and there is a place for everyone. Let us remember that we are unified as Greeks, each striving to be the best we can become. Rivalry is expected and competition is healthy, but let all remember to keep it in perspective.

Article Clarified

Dear Editor:

I want to thank the Rotunda for bringing the information regarding my role in working with students with handicaps on campus. The article is well written, but there are two things I would like to clarify. Dr. William Peele is responsible for the enforcement of the Rehabilitation Act, Section 504. All of the work that has been done on campus at this point, particularly in the area of physical barrier removal has been accomplished through Dr. Peele's Office. I am not responsible for any enforcement of the law or for dealing in this area of removing physical barriers. Secondly, Dr. Salters is in the process of setting up this committee and will look forward to hearing from any people with suggestions.

Again, thank you for your continuing coverage of the Counseling Service and its programs.

Sincerely,
Jennings G. Cox

Art Films Slated

By LORI RANDALL

"Shock of The New" is the newest set of flicks to hit the Longwood campus; this film series "focuses on the art of the 20th century," according to the news release given out by the Longwood art department. They're sponsoring the series in conjunction with the Virginia Museum.

These films are narrated by Robert Hughes, the Time magazine art critic and senior writer. They explore "social history as seen through the lens of art . . . It starts with modernism, at state of mind which first surfaced in Europe around 1875. It was a feeling of a new age and a new kind of history."

All films will be shown in the Bedford Auditorium at 7:30 p.m., and all are free to the public. Each film is 52 minutes. The films will be shown as follows:

Monday 12 October: "The Mechanical Paradise" — a film dealing with the era from 1870 to 1914.

Monday 19 October: "The Shapes of Dissent" — deals with the post WWI era.

Monday 26 October: "The Landscape of Pleasure" — a tour of French landscapes.

Monday 2 November: "Trouble in Utopia" — deals with the visions the German and Italian architects had of glass palaces in the Alps.

The European Tour:

Students Share Insights

By JOE JOHNSON

"There was so much to take in, just the fact we were able to see as many places as we did was phenomenal. It was an experience I'll never forget," said Jennifer Selby an Art History student at Longwood and one of the six students who participated in Dr. Flynn's European Tour course.

The trip, which took place over this summer, lasted for thirty five days and covered London, Stonehenge, Salisbury, E. Canterbury, Amsterdam, Paris, Chartres, Versailles, Rheims, Venice, Florence, Pisa Siera, Tivoli, Rome and more. Dr. Flynn, the lecturer, tourguide and interpreter for the trip led the students through the museums and cities to view the different artworks found there. She kept the students active through most of the day (up at 8:30 a.m. to bed at 9:00 p.m.) with lectures, individual analysis of paintings and sculptures, critiques and sketches. However, even with the busy schedule the students managed to learn of the different cultures and people they were visiting.

Elizabeth Jones, one of the students, attested to the hurried schedule, "Dr. Flynn kept us walking all the time, but I loved every minute of it...I even learned to read a city map. We tried to use every mode of transportation possible, ferry, taxicab, double decker bus, subway, train...oh, and I'll never forget the Gondola ride in Venice. Even with the busy schedule we saw the Opera "Leta" in Rome and "My Fair Lady" in London. We also met a lot of interesting people."

The students, Elizabeth Jones, Susan Kelly Jones, Jennifer

Selby, Debbie Williamson, Karen Brosi and Alva Moore were all impressed with the marked difference between European culture and American culture. "In England and France everybody dresses so strange...and at the beaches they wear skimpy, skimpy bathing suits...we looked like a bunch of nuns in our one piece suits. The guys over there are really casual about everything...I mean everything, its like 'would you like a drink...would you like a cigarette...would you like to go to bed,' especially the Italians."

The students were also treated to an event or two that wasn't on the schedule. "I couldn't believe it, we went to Stonehenge and there was a rock concert near by...it was like Woodstock revisited with Teepees and campers all over the place." A lot of strange people were there, this one guy in a three piece suit and tie was walking around chain smoking cigarettes and trying to measure Stonehenge with his own arm span. We also saw the Druids all dressed in white monk robes and... We didn't take them too seriously, though because of the sneakers and sunglasses they wore."

Transportation was also different in the European cities. "Everybody rode bicycles and mopeds, you didn't get run down by cars, you got run down by bicyclists. In France we rode in overnight trains and lived in compartments called couchettes. They were little 8 by 10 foot rooms with 6...that's right six people in each one. We decided to make the best of it though and one night we all got up on the top bunk and ate our dinner of bread, cheese and fruit. It was definitely an experience to remember."

Surprisingly the food wasn't as good as they'd expected it to be. Kelly Jones related an interesting story, "One night, while we were in Florence, some friends we had met took us to Michelangelo's point which overlooks Florence and kept talking about a great new fruit they'd discovered. They described it as really sweet and pink on the inside." Naturally we asked to see some of this exotic fruit and when they bought some for us to eat, we thought we'd die laughing — it was watermelon.

Although they had no serious problems they did run into a number of inconveniences. "The bathrooms were in really bad conditions and you had to pay for any public bathroom you wanted

The Top 40 Crisis, Part I

First order of business today is to clue you in on some upcoming concerts. In case you haven't heard the Ozark Mountain Daredevils will be among us October 25 in Jarman, and I. B. Dent promises to announce ticket sale dates as soon as the final contract is signed. (These things are like football games, folks, you never know the outcome until the final gun.) Foreigner will also be appearing October 25 but at Capital Centre in faraway Landover, Maryland.

David Bowie, The Stones, a reborn Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, Simon and Garfunkel, The Who and Pink Floyd have all announced upcoming concert dates in the Big Apple. A tantalizing prospect for the winter season of tours, though it is too early to tell which ones will get near us (the closest the Stones will get is Philadelphia), so Rockcorner will do its best to keep you posted. One final note, Paul McCartney and Michael Jackson have co-written about five tunes which will appear on each one's newest disc... should prove interesting, if not good music. Now that's out of the way, onto this week's column.

For years, the major record companies used the "Top 40" as their main source of determining album sales. The theory is simple: if they like one song, they'll buy the album (they being John Q. Public). For years this formula worked beautifully and until the early 1970's the record companies could determine album sales from how well their singles did. So how come the record companies lost one-half billion dollars in sales from 1979 to 1980? How is it that Top 40 listeners are turning off?

The answer to Top 40's problems is multi-faceted, but a few fundamental problems can be easily cited, the most basic one being the music itself.

Back in the 1960's and early 1970's the Top 40 contained a variety of music. On any given week there was an incredibly diverse and integrated Top Ten. Groups as diverse as Simon and Garfunkel, Lead Zeppelin, The Supremes, The Stones, Gordon Lightfoot and the Allman Brothers could be found there. From country to heavy metal, Motown Sound to folk, Teenyboppers to Art Rockers — it was all big and as a result it was fresh and reached a wide audience. Top 40 stations usually had a play list of over thirty current hits, nothing was (usually) overplayed and Top 40 ratings were always in a constant state of motion. So what went wrong?

Somewhere in the years 1972-74 the record companies started to opt for a more commercial approach, the principles being (1) sell through repetition; (2) stop taking chances on new artists and go with "safe" acts; (3) keep it simple and, (4) cut the variety of music to a simple, marketable product. David Lee Roth of (the group) Van Halen probably said it best: "The idea is to keep it as simplistic, as innocent, as unassuming and as stupid as possible." Any business major can give you a textbook reason for the move, if a corporation can cut its peripheral non-moneymakers and consolidate them into one huge success they will get more return on investment. Thus, so the story, is told, disco was born.

What the record moguls failed to realize was the inherent disaster in their plan.

Commercials, as we all know, are aimed at a twelve-year-old's mentality, and twelve and fourteen-year-olds loved disco. Now disco may be (barely) tolerable on the dance floor, but not as many people are going to buy it for listening (especially at $6.98-$8.98 per disc). So in the final analysis, the record companies alienated those people who have the money for albums, especially the over 22 crowd.

Playlists as well were cut back, sometimes in half. You are lucky to find a Top 40 station now that has a current playlist of over 15 or 20 tunes. The result is that you have overkill of certain records (the most recent example being "Endless Love"). This trend discourages even more buyers. It sends white listeners into the album-rock stations and black listeners to militantly black stations. Variety has gone the way of the Dusenbergs.

The most basic problem is the music. Since variety is now anathema to Top 40 more middle of the road (MOR) music has hit. MOR is slush, at best it is elevated Muzak (excuse the pun). Ninety-nine per cent of the tunes out on Top 40 are forgettable from a musical standpoint — mediocrity is now the vanguard. Faceless artists now come and go all selling basically the same product. The air is stale and fresh air doesn't seem to make it through the stagnation. It gets choked.

Melody is now simple (as opposed to simplistic), adventure is now eliminated and the variety and fun are gone. The lyrics, when not overtly sexual, tend to be written on a sixth-grade level. The thrill is gone from Top 40.

The Gyre Manifesto

Students of Longwood Awake! There are worlds to be won. Unleash the shackles and chains on your imagination and create. The time is now, the chance of a lifetime is here, at your doorstep. All you need do is bend over and pluck the opportunity from its nesting ground.

A specter is haunting Longwood. The specter of the Gyre Longwood's literary and art magazine. Let the complacent tremble at the minds expression and let the apathetic cringe for fear of ridicule. Rid yourself of the bondage of monotony. Express yourself and enlighten others who surely swim in a sea of ignorance.

Dig through your cluttered desk drawers and closet cabinets. Finger the short stories, pause for the poems, delight in the one act plays or essays, grasp the satires and grip the black and white photographs. Lay your hands on the sketch mounted on the wall, pick up the etchings and silkscreens and hurry them down to the Gyre's box 1135 in Longwood's post office. You have nothing to lose but complacency. You have fame to win. Students of Longwood... create!

Hockey Team Ties For Fourth

Longwood finished in a three-way tie for fourth place in the third annual Longwood Invitational Field Hockey Tournament Saturday as a goal by Mary King (Virginia Beach) gave the Lady Lancers a 1-0 win over Maryland and a 1-3-1 record for the tournament. Davis & Elkins, 1979 tournament champ, finished on top this year with a 4-0-1 mark.

The Lady Lancers had trouble scoring in the tournament as evidenced by 2-0 losses to Appalachian St. and Davis & Elkins, a 1-0 loss to North Carolina and a 0-0 tie with Duke. Defensively, however, Longwood played well against strong competition.

This week Coach Bette Harris' team hosts always strong Virginia Tuesday at 3:00 and travels to Harrisonburg Friday

Case Honored As Player Of The Week

By GARY THORNHILL

Sophomore defender Darryl Case (Cincinnati, OH), who was voted the Most Valuable Defender in the Longwood Invitational Soccer Tournament September 11 & 12, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week. This honor is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Case's selection covers the period September 11-September 18.

A transfer from the University of Cincinnati, Darryl was also selected to the All-Tournament team.

In the first-round double overtime 5-4 victory, he used his quickness to disrupt Richmond's offense much of the night. Case was all over the field in both of Longwood's tournament contests.

A graduate of Madeira High School in Cincinnati, he scored the most points in a season with 28 in 1980. Also, as captain he scored 22 goals with 6 assists.

Darryl scored his first goal as a Lancer this past Wednesday in a 3-1 victory over homesteading North Carolina Wesleyan.

A business major and cousin of Longwood soccer star Dana Gregg, Case is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Case of Cincinnati.

Longwood Volleyball Team Inexperienced

By RONNIE BROWN

The Longwood women's volleyball team will be headed by first-year coach Joyce Phillips, a recent Temple University graduate. The Lady Lancers will try to improve on last year's 10-15 mark, despite the presence of many inexperienced players.

Six of last season's team members are returning, including co-captain and senior Julie Petefish (Stanley), and junior co-captain Kathy Gunning (Severn, MD).

Other veterans include: sophomores Jeannie Breckenridge (New York, NY), Bonnie Lipscomb (Brookneal) and juniors Joyce Pool (Brookneal) and Elaine Olay (Patchogue, NY). Senior Frannie

Osmer (Southold, NY), who sat out last season after playing in 1979, will also provide depth.

Newcomers to the team are seniors Vicki Nesbitt (Mamasquan, NJ) and Lynn Hatch (Annandale), freshman Becky Norris (Middlebrook) and sophomores Lynne Gilbert (Richmond) and April Poleski (Palmyra).

VCU Ties Longwood on Penalty Kick

Longwood's 2-2 overtime tie with VCU Saturday afternoon has to rate as at least a moral victory for the Lancers, who had lost to the Rams 2-0 in the Longwood Invitational a week earlier. Leading 2-1 late in the game, Longwood had to settle for the tie when VCU scored on a penalty kick with 26 seconds left. Neither team scored in two 10-minute overtime periods.

Coming on the heels of VCU's 1-1 tie with Virginia Thursday, Longwood's effort in Saturday's rematch with the Rams pleased Coach Rich Posipanko.

"We played well enough to win and we should have won," said the coach. "We made a mistake at the end and they (VCU) converted the penalty kick to tie us."

Steve Kern (Warminster, PA) tied the game 1-1 with a header at about the 10-minute mark and Bill Foster (Newport News) booted in a shot with 2:40 left to put Longwood on top. In the penalty area, VCU's Mike Montiero was fouled and the Rams tied it with a penalty kick just seconds away from the final whistle.

Longwood's standout midfielder Dana Gregg (Cincinnati, OH) sat out the entire game with an injury, but cousin Darryl Case (Cincinnati, OH) filled in well, drawing praise from Posipanko. Forward Gus Leal (Rockville, MD) was ejected early in the first overtime period, but the Lancers held on for the tie despite having just 10 men on the field to VCU's 11.

Posipanko praised midfielder Joe Parker (Hatboro, PA) for his play in the contest.

"Joe was all over the field," said the coach. "It was one of his best games ever. Randy Neimeyer (Montrose, AL) also played well filling in for Darryl."

Longwood hosts Maryville Thursday at 4:00 on First Ave. Field and takes on Roanoke Friday night at 7:00 on Iler Field.

Longwood Women Netters Open Season

Phyllis Harriss when she announced her decision to give up her coaching duties, is a Longwood graduate and former Lancer netter.

The team is a young one, featuring only two returnees from the 1980 fall team: sophomores Pam Cauley (Richmond) and Leslie Robertson (Winchester). Bruce is hoping that the team can improve last season's overall

Marshall Wins Golf Tournament

By MIKE LYNCH

In golf, there are no excuses. The sun, the weather, the course and other factors cannot be used as reasons for poor performance, simply because every other competitor has to play under exactly the same conditions. It is because of this fact that the Longwood Lady Lancers golf team can only blame their disappointing fifth place in the fifth annual Longwood Invitational Tournament at the Longwood golf course on themselves. It is for the same reason that Marshall University, winners of the tournament for the third straight time, can be proud of themselves for displaying some excellent golf.

After a first round total of 307, Marshall was ahead to stay. Not only did they eventually finish the tournament with a very comfortable 31 stroke advantage, but no team could even beat them on any one day, although Penn State tied them once during their worst day of play. All five of Marshall's players finished in the top fifteen, individually, with three making the top five.

While Marshall stormed off to an early lead, the other teams produced an exciting and competitive race for second place honors. Taking second place in such a prestigious event as this would still be a very noteworthy achievement. In impressive fashion, Penn State University, Longwood, the University of North Carolina at Wilmington and William and Mary College, finished the first round with team scores of 325, 326, 327 and 328 respectively. James Madison University, looking a little outclassed by the strong field, finished the first round with a 341.

The second round showed much more aberrant scores as Longwood slipped a notch in the standings to fourth, shooting a deplorable 333. It could have been even worse, had not Lanie Gerken shot an 82 to follow up Robin Andrews' 80. Penn State took a firm grasp of second place shooting 313 for the day in much improved fashion from the previous day. Also improved was UNC-Wilmington with a 321 that put them in third place.

The last day of the tournament came up cold and windy. While Longwood's men's golf team, in its first of three fall tournaments, slipped from seventh to ninth in the final round of the Washington & Lee-VMI Invitational at Lexington Country Club Sunday afternoon.

Virginia won the title in a field of 18 teams with rounds of 292-297 for a 589. Longwood's 310-326-636 was good for ninth, ahead of such teams as VMI and Hampden-Sydney.

Senior Tim White (Richmond) had an opening round 73 but slipped to an 82 the second day for a 155. Other Longwood scores included: Bryant Reese (South Hill) 77-83-160; Rick Currier (Milton, PA) 77-80-157; Glen Bugg (Chase City) 93-89-172 and Stan Edwards (Bedford) 84-81-165.

The next action for Coach Steve Nelson's team will come October 12-13 in the Ferrum Invitational. The Lancers will host Lynchburg, Mary Washington, Hampden-Sydney, Ferrum and Newport News October 23 in a one-day match at Longwood Golf Course.

In Memorium

"Lisa Winkler always kept everybody going . . . she had great team spirit with a good outlook on things at all times," said Ms. Beth Budd, the Longwood gymnastics coach.

Lisa Winkler, daughter of Ray and Eve Winkler, was killed in an automobile accident this past summer on August 8, 1981. She was a rising junior at Longwood and active member of the Longwood gymnastics team.

Lisa attended Garfield High School in Woodbridge, Va., where she and fellow teammates won the 1977 AAA State Championship in gymnastics. A hometown gymnastics club will be collecting money to donate a trophy in honor of Lisa to be given to the winner of the Division II State Champion. This will be a travelling trophy that will be passed on to every winning team.

Longwood's gymnastic team is going to place a plaque in the Lancer Showcase in dedication to Lisa. They are also going to dedicate their first meet of the season to her "enthusiastic team spirit."

New Volleyball Coach

By RONNIE BROWN

Joyce Mascaro Phillips, a recent Temple University graduate and former varsity cheerleader, has been named the women's volleyball coach at Longwood, according to interim Athletic Director Carolyn Hodges.

A native of Philadelphia who now lives in Dillwyn, Phillips received her B.S. in Health and Physical Education from Temple last May after attending Mount Saint Joseph Academy in Flourtown, PA.

She has been a participant in athletics as a cheerleader at Mount Saint Joseph Academy for two years and later as a cheerleader at Temple, for four years. Two of these years she was the varsity captain.

Phillips replaces Nanette Fisher, who gave up her coaching duties to take the post as the women's assistant basketball coach.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Mascaro, Joyce is married to James Phillips of Dillwyn.

agricultural people for civic or political functions. Dating was determined by projectile points found at the site and compared with studies done by other archeological groups at other sites. These points were found using a step-trenching process which follows the earth's strata or layers. Only one and one-half weeks were devoted to this site; however, Dr. Jordan hopes to spend more time there next summer.

The remainder of the slides were devoted to the Anna's Ridge Site in Cumberland County. The Field School spent 5 weeks there in 1980 and 8 weeks in 1981. The Anna's Ridge Site was determined to be that of an Indian hunting and butchering camp dated about 6000 years ago. Again, age of the site was determined by the dating of the various types of projectile points found. Evidence was also found of an area of the site where nets may have been erected to herd animals into for slaughter to further corroborate the use of this site. Dr. Jordan feels that the Anna's Ridge Site has been exhausted because the Field School began to find the same artifacts over and over. He feels that "it is best to leave artifacts at the site for any future archeological teams who may be more advanced in their detection systems than are currently in use." According to Dr. Jordan, "archeologists are digging up a world that has, in large measure, manufactured us and our present civilization."

But all and all the students seemed to have a good time and Dr. Flynn commended the girls on their enthusiasm and cooperation. "It was a teachers joy just to have students on the spot...especially interested students...we learned a lot of things — how to walk fast, the value of foreign language, the difference between looking and seeing."

The students were equally enthusiastic about the tour. "I really liked opening a book and knowing I've been there and seen the original artwork — it's so much more impressive when you see it in front of you instead of in a photograph or slide...if I ever had a chance to go again I'd go...We learned as much about other people as we did about ourselves."

Slater has come a long way in the last couple of years and students should appreciate that. Causing a mass hysteria with a petition is certainly uncalled for and unnecessary. I encourage the students not to sign and those students who have already signed to remove their names from the list.

Marshall Wins

Marshall, Penn State and UNC-Wilmington simply played out their rounds and wrapped up the first three spots, a combination of William and Mary playing a good round and Longwood playing a bad one allowed William and Mary to take fourth place by just four strokes, 993 to 997. James Madison, with only two really competitive golfers, finished sixth with an obysmal 1032, exactly 100 strokes off Marshall's winning 932.

In the individual competition, Mary Wilkerson of William and Mary managed to retain her title, getting past Tammie Green of Marshall by just one stroke, with a 229. Robin Andrews, the best for Longwood, finished in 11th place with a 244.

After the tournament, Longwood coach Barbara Smith reiterated the fact that her team had played unusually poor. She was pleased, though, with the performances of newcomers, Pam Othen and Lanie Gerken. Despite their finish, the Lady Lancers did play consistently on the first day and hopefully, they will have returned to that form for their next tournament.

Freshman Jenny Fisher (Cumberland, MD) will start at no. 4, and sophomores Terri Justice (Richmond) and Donna Casper (Franklin) will round out the number 5 and 6 positions.

The other members of the team who will be vying for starting positions are junior Cindy Meredith (Tabb) and freshman Holly Green (Charlotte, NC).

The lady netters will host two home matches this week — Tuesday with Mary Washington and Friday with VCU.

The first film of the 1981 Series is "4-Butte-1: How Stone Tools Were Made by Prehistoric Hunters." "4-Butte-1", a title derived from the traditional site-numbering system of American archeology, is a film study of a group of college students, under the supervision of an archeologist, excavating the buried remains of a Maidu Indian village in California. Then the focus shifts to stone tool manufacturing techniques as Francois Bordes, Director of the Laboratory of Prehistory, University of Bordeaux, demonstrates how stone blades were probably made by direct percussion and by the punch technique and Don Crabtree, an expert in lithic technology, demonstrates various methods of manufacturing tools by pressure flaking techniques. In a dramatic conclusion, the film demonstrates that the Valley of Mexico blade made from obsidian has the sharpest cutting edge man has ever been able to devise.

Dr. James William Jordan, Associate Professor of Anthropology and Director of the Longwood Summer Field School in Archeology, will provide a brief introduction to the film. All films in the Anthropology Film Series are free and open to the public.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1981

NO. 5

Harper Refutes Article

By GAIL SHANNON

Mr. Wayne Harper, owner of the Longwood Bookstore, discussed his viewpoints concerning a previous article on September 15, 1981, in the Rotunda during an interview this week.

One of the first things Mr. Harper wanted to clear up was the fact that he was asked by the Bookstore Committee to take over the Bookstore again this year as a favor to them. He had planned on retiring and says he definitely will once this year's contract is up. That was the reason for a one year instead of a three year contract. Harper also said that the reason Mr. Freeman Fox of the Bookworm did not receive the contract had to do with the fact that Fox was a former employee of the college and that the school had laid him off. The reason Mr. Eric Skovgaard of Transfer Junction didn't get consideration was because he didn't have the financial backing it takes to run a college bookstore. In fact, I am surprised Skovgaard would even bid if he didn't have enough money to finance the operation."

According to Mr. Harper, the college bookstore is a leased operation run on the basis of a small business which he owns. He has to pay the college $125 rent every month in addition to the 4% per cent of his gross sales. He estimates that the college receives about $12,000 from him by the end of a school year. In addition to this, he must pay his utilities, $800 to $900 in insurance yearly, a town license fee of $700, plus salary for his workers. He also has to allow for a 4.1 per cent or better shrinkage figure due to theft, and an additional 3 per cent for postage costs. Using only the lowest shrinkage figure, the percentage he pays the college, and the postage figure, Harper is already looking at 11.6 per cent coming out of the 20 per cent profit he is allowed by the publishers. This only leaves him a margin of 8.4 per cent to work with to meet the rest of his expenditures and, hopefully, have some profit left over. Mr. Harper said, "I can't understand Fox's business ability when he agreed to give the college 6 per cent of the gross sales and give the college personnel a 5 per cent discount. These two figures added in with the rest add up to 17 per cent of the 20 per cent margin allowed. How is he going to operate a business on 3 per cent profit? I feel sure the committee realized that no business could be operated in this fashion."

As far as used books are concerned, Harper wanted to emphasize that he would still have to pay 4% per cent of the gross sales to the college off the price of every book sold. This is true of every item sold by him. Even though it is a used book it still cannot be sold without incurring additional expense. Harper does not understand how Skovgaard make the statement that he would give all the profit from used books to a scholarship. He sees it as a losing proposition for Skovgaard because of the costs of handling the used books to begin with.

Until the inception of the Swap Shop, Mr. Harper had handled the used books. He has calculations that show that the college benefitted more from him selling the books than it does from the Swap Shop selling them. The extra money the college made could have been used for a scholarship for the students. Mr. Harper also does not agree with the Swap Shop's policy of retaining a student's money if he forgets to collect it. He feels that this is totally unfair to the students when the Swap Shop members have the box numbers of the students and could simply deposit the money in their boxes. When he bought the used books, the students were assured of getting their money.

Harper also wanted to answer the Rotunda article on the question about employment of college students in the bookstore. When he first began operation of the bookstore, he employed students. They would tell him what hours they would be able to work and he worked his schedule around this. He found, though, that he was unable to rely on students showing up for work. Many times, they would call in at the last minute saying they had a test to study for, a paper to write, etc., leaving him short-handed and with no recourse but to do all the work himself. In order for him to get all the other done and tend the cash register, Harper was forced to hire reliable outside help.

To clear up another point raised by the previous article, Mr. Harper produced a book order request form and a letter concerning ordering of the texts which are sent to the professors. These letters and cards are sent to the professors approximately a month before order forms are due back to Harper. He allows 2 months ordering time for the books from the publishers. This time period allows for vacation slowdown by the publishers, 2 weeks shipment period, plus a time leeway in which any mistakes in orders may be corrected. Harper says, "All bookstore owners are put on a waiting list when the orders go in no matter who they are and it is inaccurate to say Fox can get faster service. Many times students complain when I don't have books in. What the teachers aren't telling them in some of these cases is that they only ordered these books on the first day of class and that there is no way the books can be available, yet. Besides this, I am always at the mercy of shipping clerks, UPS, and Parcel Post."

Harper commented on his policy concerning publishers, "A lot of companies are going out of business or being bought out. There is no way for me to find out the names of the publishers who buy out the old companies unless a professor can give me the information to me. I also have no access to a lot of the small publishing companies' addresses unless the professors furnish them."

Harper said, "Many times I have ordered books for different teachers only to have one-third of the books or less bought by the students. A lot of students simply don't bother buying books or else they buy used ones. I have no way of knowing how many used books are on campus and can make no real estimation of the number of books needed. This makes it very difficult for me. If something happens and a teacher has a shortage of books, then they can let me know and I can order extra books by phone. The publishers and I have a special arrangement in situations such as re-orders so that they immediately ship these books out."

I have paperbacks sitting on my shelf for as long as five years at a time. In order to keep my business running, I have to sell my stock. I also feel I have to say that the professors who buy from the Bookworm aren't supporting the college. Fox certainly isn't paying the college a percentage on the texts he sells!"

In answer to Dr. Miller of the History Department, Harper concluded his interview by saying, "It was in my original contract that I go to the classes at Oberlin College taught by the NACS on how to manage a bookstore, which I did. I had also successfully owned and operated a laundromat and drycleaning business prior to this. I have always been in business management. I would like to know what basis Dr. Miller has for his criticism that I don't have the expertise to run a bookstore."

College Democrats List Activities

By KIM DIGGS

The Longwood College Democrats are off to a brand new start this year. An organizational meeting was held last Monday night, and many plans have already been made.

The Democrats intend to begin campaigning strongly just after Fall Break for the upcoming gubernatorial election. Among other activities, the College Democrats will be working with the Prince Edward County Democrats in their election campaigning. This will include working at the polls, distributing literature, and working with the county's phone-in campaign. In addition, the Democrats are planning a radio debate with the College Republicans. An exact date has not yet been set for the debate, but it should be approximately a week before the election.

The College Democrats welcome anyone who may be interested in joining them in their campaign efforts. Announcements concerning meeting times and places will be posted around campus. If you would like further information, please contact the president of the College Democrats, David Oakes, at 392-5713, or Cindy Thurman, Vice-President, at 392-8367.

Juniors Receive Rings

By TAMMY PORTER

The annual Junior Ring Ceremony was held September 24th, in the sunken gardens at the Colonnade at 7:00 p.m. Dr. Greenwood was the guest speaker.

The ring ceremony began with the singing of "Joan of Arc" by Tafara. While Tafara was singing, the juniors and their little brothers or sisters proceeded down the stairs of the Colonnade into the sunken gardens. Lisa Swackhammer, Chairman of the Ring Ceremony, introduced the speaker, Dr. Greenwood. Longwood's President, Dr. Greenwood spoke briefly about Joan of Arc and Longwood College and then she wished the junior class the best of luck for their remaining years at Longwood.

After the conclusion of her speech, Lisa Swackhammer presented Dr. Greenwood with a class ring. Once the ring was placed on her finger, "Take the White and the Winter Snow" was sung by Tafara as the juniors began lighting their candles. When the song ended, the juniors and their little brothers or sisters exchanged the long awaited for rings and candles. The ceremony concluded with everyone singing "Joan of Arc."

Special regards go to the advisor Dr. Ellery Sedgewick, and to the Ring Committee Members Lisa Swackhammer, Chairman, Jill Pierce, Michelle Lewis, Karen Savarese, Suzanne Fruile, Kathy Wood, and Carol Atkins for all their hard work.

Congratulations class of 1983.

Basketry Lecture Held

By TAMMY PORTER

Bryant Holsenbeck, from Farmville, conducted a basketry lecture demonstration and a one day workshop at Bedford Auditorium on September 25th under the auspices of the Central Virginia Chapter of the Virginia Museum.

The lecture program that was open to the public, free of charge, was divided into two parts. The first half gave an illustrated overview of contemporary container forms of woven origin, while the second half presented a close-up view of nature as a weaver. The workshop was held the following day, September 26th, from 9:30 to 3:30.

Students who missed these programs and are interested in learning more information about them may contact Robin Smith of the Central Virginia Chapter by telephoning 963-3595.

Basketball Coach Cal Luther is announcing varsity and junior varsity tryouts. All men interested should stop by Coach Luther or Coach Schoeffter's office before fall break. Tryouts will be October 15th.

Coach Luther would also like to encourage any males interested in becoming basketball managers to stop by his office.

Your Turn

Yearbook Changes Explained

Dear Editor:

I have heard many comments and gotten a few letters on the issue of the new 1981-1982 Virginian (Longwood's yearbook) and I think it's about time I cleared the air a little concerning this yearbook.

Let's start with the price. We have been selling only about 400 yearbooks per year for the last five years or so. Since there are approximately 2400 students attending Longwood, that leaves about 2000 students who are not interested in buying a yearbook. Why? One reason is because of the price. Last year the price of the Virginian was increased to $14.00. This price was still about $10.00 below the average cost of other college yearbooks. We were given $8,000 from the Student Activities Fees for this year. If we went ahead and published a traditional yearbook, the total cost of the yearbook would be about $16,000 to $17,000. This means that you, the student, would be charged about $20.00 per book, and the administrative office staff would pay about $25.00 per book. If only about 400 students bought a book for $14.00, how many would pay $20.00? Not many.

Now I think I should give some insight on the people who put the yearbook together. They are predominately freshmen, with the editor usually an upperclassman. The enthusiasm abounds in the first few weeks or so, then, little by little, people drop out as they take on other activities and get four or five people putting in much more time than they should with the yearbook. They have to, because there is no one else willing to do it. Very few people have an idea of the heavy task involved in putting a traditional yearbook together. I think that the people who have worked on the yearbook at Longwood in the past know what I'm talking about. Let me tell you, I would love to have a traditional yearbook too but certainly not if only a few people are willing to put in the time and effort that it takes to make a yearbook. I also would not want to pay $20.00 for this book. If more upperclassmen helped out with the yearbook, we just might be able to make ends meet. As it is, we have developed a new kind of yearbook here at Longwood.

This new yearbook would cost about $12,000. That means each student will pay about $3.50 for his or her yearbook. Now, what exactly will be in this new yearbook? It will have the traditional opening section. It will have all the traditional shots of Oktoberfest, Mardi Gras, Spring Weekend, graduation, CHI, Supperdance, concerts, Christmas, and many, many candidis. I have already stressed to my staff that 2400 students here will make lots of candidis, and my photographers are ready and willing to take these many candidis. In addition, we will include features on new faculty here at Longwood, Dr. Greenwood, and the faculty recognition award. We will have a page for each class, as well as sports and department features, such as the art exhibit. In essence, we will include everything that has been in the "traditional" yearbook except class pictures, faculty pictures, and organizations.

This smaller book will allow for more time and enjoyment in putting the yearbook together, and will also allow the traditionally small yearbook staff to breathe a sigh of relief and to get work done in other activities. I might add that if the staff enjoys the work they are doing and has more time to do it, we will put together a better quality book. I sincerely hope this plan will be accepted by you, the students, and by the administrative department. I want to know what you think. Write me at box 1155 and let me know your opinion. Just keep in mind the few people we have working on this book and the price you will have to pay if you want a traditional yearbook. I myself feel that this is an excellent idea and that it will work out for the best, because believe me, I have been there and seen the yearbook almost fold because it wasn't working out at all.

"States" Sends Note To Dent

Dear B,

I just wanted to drop you a line to thank you and all involved at Longwood for having us.

We had a wonderful time. It is always a pleasure to work with not only pros but nice people.

We'd also like to thank all of the students that were at the show, you can be very proud to work with a student body that shows as much enthusiasm as did the Longwood people.

Thanks again and we hope to be able to work with you again. I remain...

Respectfully yours,

Pronesti Discusses Ideas

By ILONA WILSON

Mr. Samuel Pronesti is now the Director of food Service, A.R.A., traveling to different schools and colleges to train chefs. In response to how he liked Longwood, Pronesti said "I love it! The people and students are great. I am not going by last year's menu. I feel we need changes. I am new here. I need a chance to prove myself."

This year we will have birthday dinners as always. New York strip steaks will be served. On October 14 there will be an Italian buffet; October 20 is the date scheduled for birthday dinner. In November, there will be a Steamship Beef Buffet. This hind quarter of beef will be carved to order. November 19, assorted cakes will be served. Of these varieties, the students will cut their own. November 20 will be birthday dinner and each table will have a whole turkey. In December on the 9th there will be an International buffet. December 14 is birthday dinner.

Mr. Pronesti is excited about being here and he has many good ideas. He says that there have been both complaints and compliments. Mr. Pronesti concluded by saying: "If people have suggestions for changes in menu, don't hesitate to come talk to me. I can't impress upon students how much I want input from them!"

Sincerely,
Elaine M. Hughes

Kahoots

To the Editor,

In my past experiences with Longwood College, and its Judicial System, I have found that there is a certain favoritism displayed toward those with the backing of certain facets of the college administration and staff. It appears to some that this may be the case in the recent incident involving Steve Miller. All I ask is could this be another example of a student being victimized by the system.

Bookstore Experience

Dear Editor:

Your "Renewal of t. Bookstore" article last week was very interesting.

I would like to add that Mr. Harper makes me feel like I'm putting him out of his way when he helps me in the bookstore. He does not seem to care at all about students and teachers, the people that support him.

When the bookstore is busy, he can't help students but rather stands at the door and watches for people stealing things.

I regret going into the bookstore unless absolutely necessary. If I do have to purchase something it costs me an arm and a leg.

How did Mr. Harper win the contract with such an awful bid? When will the contract be bid again?

Perhaps you feel the same way I do, if so, please contact Mr. Branscome, Vice President of Finance.

I look forward to the day we have a friendly, helpful bookstore.

Rebuttal to Barker

Dear Editor,

The following is a reply to Mr. Barker's letter in the Sept. 22nd issue of your paper. At first I took to thinking Mr. Barker, that as a dining hall worker your opinion might be slightly biased, for reasons of financial security or perhaps other emotional attachments you may have developed during your long years of service to that facility.

However, after dwelling upon this consideration for some time, I have come to the conclusion that what ails you might not be so much psychological in nature, as it may be physical.

As you are a loyal dining hall employee, you doubtless eat the majority if not all of your meals in that locale. And needless to say if one becomes accustomed enough to anything it may in a short time become bearable.

Take for instance, the case of King Mithridates who could eat endless amounts of arsenic without the slightest sign of disturbance crossing his royal visage.

In short Mr. Barker, what I think we have here is a case of the dead taste buds. (Witness the lack of enthusiasm for your own homestead's cooking — really Mr. Barker what would mama think?) I can only say in conclusion, that perhaps a short sojourn away from the nice ice cream and koolaid machines or sundaes every Wednesday night, might serve to liven your taste buds and hopefully open (indeed, expand) your mind (or whatever it is in your case which serves as a distant facsimile thereof.)

Spotlight Concert Features Alsop

By SUSAN BUTLIN

The Spotlight Concert on October 14 at 8 p.m. in the gold room, will be featuring Peter Alsop. Peter is a nationally known singer-songwriter from Southern California.

He has worked as an actor and production assistant in feature films and television, as well as written and directed musical comedies. Among all this he is also the Director of a residential treatment center for emotionally disturbed adolescents.

Peter Alsop, Asleep at the Helm, and Draw The Line are three of his four record albums he produced and recorded.

Alsop's satirical wit focuses mainly on the changing of traditional sex-roles, with a few pertinent situations such as; single parenting, atomic waste, union reform, homely people and kid's liberation. Musically he does folk, bluegrass, Broadway and rock'n'roll with the aid of a guitar and harmonica to a dulcimer or concertina.

Probably the most unique aspect about Alsop is that his diverse background enables him to tie into the on-going class curriculum with songs and anecdotes, he talks to the students and incorporates their ideas.

The Top 40 Crisis, part II

Last week we had examined some of the problems facing the Top 40 — which had been the standard of the record industry up until recently. Why isn't it the standard anymore?

Top 40 is no longer an accurate barometer of album sales. Oh, to be sure, an album like "High Infidelity" will get more than its share of the market through successful airplay on the Top 40 stations. But such an example is rare anymore. For example, the new Moody Blues album "Long Distance Voyager" was number one for three weeks this summer but they didn't have a single in the Top 40 ("Gemini Dream," the first single, hit the Top 40 after the album had fallen to number two).

"Okay," you say, "but the Moody Blues are naturally going to attract an older crowd, so isn't it natural that their album sales might not be reflected in the singles rating?" That is only partially correct, the main reason is a phenomenon that started around 1974 — the album rock station.

The album rock stations, like XL 102 in Richmond, WAVA 105 and DC 101 in Washington, and 3WV in Charlottesville took their cue from the "underground" and "alternative" stations of the 1960's. When disco and Manilow-ish pop-glop became the rule for Top 40, these types of stations alienated a huge listening audience, the 16-25 year-old male. And then some.

The album-rock station filled a gap — they are a soft-sell, rock only station. No screaming D.J.'s, no blaring contests, no talking until midway through the song and best of all, less repetition of music. Not only "album feature" spots but when a new album comes out, the album-rock station will play three or more cuts in regular rotation rather than playing the same cut every hour, on the hour, like Top 40 stations. When Foreigner put out "4" this summer, WAVA had three cuts off the album in rotation, it was two weeks later before the Top 40 stations even started to play "Urgent" — by that time the album had already skyrocketed to number two. So is Top 40 selling records?

The album rock stations also keep alive good rock and rock groups of the not too distant past. The Doors, ten years after they broke up, are finding a new generation of listeners and the current success of groups like The Who and The Stones is probably (at least in part) due to these types of stations. Groups like Led Zeppelin, Rush, Yes and Emerson Lake and Palmer who have never had a number one hit (except ELP) still have sold a lot of albums due to these stations. And albums, not singles, are where record companies make money in sales. This is why home taping has been such a devastating blow to record companies, but that is another story.

The result is that the album-rock station now has what Top 40 had — freshness. If you hear a cut you don't like just wait and the next one will be better in all probability. Variety is there (this summer WAVA ran specials on The Clash, The Beach Boys and Woodstock) and the FUN is there, and that is what music is all about.

Those who doubt what I am saying, take a look at some figures: ten years ago the top three stations in Washington were top 40 now a Top 40 station is still number one, but two album rock stations lie just beneath and command a bigger advertising dollar because they play to an audience that can spend beavercoup money.

Finally, for all you remaining doubting Thomases, my brother, Ben, played me what he thought was a good "new" song, "The Voice," that was getting air play on a Top 40 station. He asked me what I thought of it and I told him it was good, and that I had played it for him three weeks before and he told me it was terrible.

Of course, there are some who, just like Ben, like top 40 and believe it is good and fun. Ben loves top 40. Ben is eleven years old.

And that is the Top 40 crisis...

Oh's Spark Flame

By SUSAN BUTLIN

The first "Saturday Night Alive" after fall break will feature the Flamin Oh's on October 17. For $2.00, you can see this four-man band perform their style of "punk rock" new wave music at 9 p.m. in the lower dining hall.

Robert Wilkinson, Joseph Behrend, Bob Miede and Jody Ray, known as the Flamin Oh's, have appeared in concert with groups such as: Patti Smith, Molly Hatchett, Kenny Loggins, Eddie Money, and Devo.

The Flamin Oh's can be considered a refined sleek, high octane version of the "American Garage Band."

Elinsky In Showcase Gallery

By ILONA WILSON

Ellen Elinsky is the first senior to exhibit her art work in the Showcase Gallery. Her work is showing in Lankford Building September 22-30. Ellen is an Art Education major. She would eventually like to teach in South Carolina.

Her work includes four pencil drawings, a zinc plate etching entitled "America", a cardboard relief "By The Sea", a wood block edition, and four oil paintings. The wood block edition contains three prints one of which is entitled "Cornflakes". "I named it Cornflakes because someone told me it looked like the picture of the farmers with the pitchfork on the cornflake's box," said Ellen.

Oil takes "forever" to dry and one of Ellen's oils in the exhibit is entitled "Gone Surfing". "It is a shadow box combination of beach objects in a box painted. You paint exactly what you see," remarked Ellen. She worked on it for about three weeks. "It's my favorite," she smiles.

Ellen will be student teaching in Danville this spring semester. She said that her "big thing is to try and convince people that art is desperately needed in elementary and secondary schools."

Soccer Wins One, Loses One New Record Set

By MIKE LYNCH

The Longwood Lancers soccer team split two games, trampling Maryville College, Thursday afternoon by a score of 9-0, but losing to a tough and emotional Roanoke College, Friday night 3-2.

The Maryville game was, as the score indicates, all Longwood. The Lancers dominated both ends of the field, launching 53 shots at the Maryville goal while only allowing two shots at their own. Gustavo Leal, Bill Foster, Tim Brennan and Dave Via each scored two goals apiece, while Ken Harris added one for a new Longwood school record of nine goals.

In a much more exciting game, Friday night, the Lancers outplayed the Roanoke Maroon but lost due to two late scores, one of which Longwood Goalie Brian Sprinkle, possibly thinking that the ball had missed the goal, simply let it roll in, although he could easily have stopped it.

Steve Kern scored the first Longwood goal with Darryl Case getting the assist, but Roanoke evened it up at one apiece by the end of the half. The play was predominantly on Roanoke's end of the field, but the Lancers, who seemed to be having trouble setting up their shots, could only capitalize once.

The second half was well played but no scores resulted until Steve McGurl skillfully headed a Steve Kern corner kick into the Roanoke goal to put Longwood ahead 2-0 with 14 minutes to play.

But just two minutes later, Sprinkle's blunder tied the score and shortly thereafter, a breakdown in Longwood's defense allowed two Roanoke players to approach Longwood goalie, Dave Walters, uncontested and score the winning goal.

The loss was hard to take, especially in the light of the fact that Longwood was far ahead, statistically. The only explanation that Longwood coach, Rich Posipanko could offer was that it was "just one of those games."

Golfers Win Invitational

Longwood's women's golf team, led by junior Robin Andrews (Woodlawn), won the 20th annual Mary Baldwin Invitational Golf Tournament Saturday defeating James Madison 660-668. Andrews won the individual title for the second year in a row with rounds of 80 and 78 for a 158. She is a Junior All-American.

The Lady Lancers, who play in the James Madison Invitational Friday and Saturday at Spotswood Country Club in Harrisonburg, got strong performances from several individuals while winning the Mary Baldwin tournament.

Playing at Ingleside Country Club, Longwood's Pam Othen (Ann Arbor, MI) shot an 86-77-165 for third place and Emily Fletcher (Prince George) was fourth with an 88-79-167. Junior Sharon Gilmore (Patchogue, NY) was seventh with an 84-86-170 while Sue Morgan (Massapequa Park, NY) was 10th with an 86-88-176.

Longwood finished eighth out of 11 teams in the Blue Ridge Mountaineer Invitational Tuesday in Boone NC, as Fletcher (81-80-161), Andrews (84-80-164) and Othen (82-84-166) led the way.

Player Of The Week

By LISA SPENCER

Cited for his strong defense in the 2-2 tie with VCU last Saturday, junior Joe Parker was chosen Longwood College Player of the Week. Covering the period September-September this honor was chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

A native of Hatboro, PA, Parker was also a key defender in Longwood's 9-0 win over Maryville Thursday.

Picked as a tri-captain this season, Parker led his Upper Moreland High School team in scoring his senior year. As a freshman at Longwood Parker was selected to the All-VISA team.

Parker, who plays midfield for the Lancers, has been a moving force on this year's team, which has compiled a 4-2-1 record and achieved ranking in the Mid-Atlantic region.

Joe is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Parker of Hatboro.

Volleyball Team Gets First Win

Longwood's volleyball team, under the direction of first-year coach Joyce Phillips, evened its record at 1-1 last week with a victory over Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

After starting the season with a setback at Hampton Institute Tuesday, the Lacy Lancer spikers were quick to regain a winning form as they downed Randolph-Macon in Lynchburg 7-15, 16-14, 15-10, 10-15, 15-9 Thursday night.

Coach Phillips was pleased with the performances of freshman hitter Becky Norris (Middlebrook) and senior hitter, Julie Petefish (Stanley), but emphasized that the victory was a team effort.

"They all played well tonight," Phillips said of her team. "It was a total team effort."

Showing a 1-1 mark, Longwood will try to keep its winning streak alive with a trip to Lynchburg Tuesday to take on Virginia and host Liberty Baptist. The Lady Lancers will also be matching up with Roanoke Thursday at 6:30 in Salem.

Laps For The Lancers Coming Soon

By RONNIE BROWN

The Longwood College Lancer Club will be sponsoring the first annual Walk-Jog-A-Thon (Laps for the Lancers) on Saturday, October 17, at 9:00 a.m.

"This is the first attempt at a big scale fund raising project to provide support for the athletic program," said Carolyn Hodges, Interim Athletic Director and chief organizer of the event.

The Walk-Jog-A-Thon will start at the front of the Rotunda and encircle the block of High Street, Buffalo and St. George Street.

Participants, who will be sponsored by pledges from students, faculty, staff and members of the Farmville community, will walk, jog or even wheelchair around the four-tenths of a mile course as many times as possible in one hour.

Hodges is optimistic about the potential of "Laps for the Lancers", but admits it will take time to generate interest.

"I think we'll have some community participation, but it takes a while to build up something new like this. Through the Lancer Club members, we will get some support from pledges and participants," explains Hodges.

The athletes, who will benefit from the fund raising event, will also participate as joggers. Coaches expect a big turnout from members of Longwood's 15 intercollegiate athletic teams.

"I'm real pleased with the response of the coaches and the Lancer Club members. Everyone seems to be enthusiastic," said Hodges.

The participants will not go away empty handed after contributing their time and energy, but will receive awards ranging from cash prizes for groups (athletic or non-athletic) to non-cash awards for individual participants. Other prizes include a non-cash award for the male and female with the most laps and for the participant with the highest pledge total.

Interested parties should see a Lancer Club member or call the athletic office (2-3323). Students who want to participate should watch for a message in the Campus Bulletin.

Riding Team Talented

Coach Mary Whitlock's 1981-82 riding team has a blend of youth and experience which has the Longwood coach excited about the season. The Lancers began competition Sunday co-hosting a show at Mary Washington.

"I feel we have a real good, young team," said Whitlock. "With a lot of promising talent and enthusiasm, we hope to have as good a season as last year or better."

Sophomore Pam Svoboda (Oldfield, NY) and Bryan Farrar (Newport News) are back after qualifying for nationals a year ago and leading Longwood to perhaps its best season ever. The team won 67 ribbons, 10 first places and was Reserve High Point College in two shows.

Also back are veterans Beth Wiley (Falls Church), who qualified for regionals last season, and sophomore Carol Gardner (Hillsville). Unfortunately, Wiley will be out of action for several weeks because of a shoulder injury.

Newcomers to the team include: freshmen Mary Brockwell (Bristow), Amy Jo Poor (Alexandria), Elizabeth Chalmers (Newport News) and Elizabeth Thoren (Annandale), and sophomores Amy Shaffner (Petersburg) and Carol Turner (Fredericksburg).

Rugby Loses To George Mason

By MIKE LYNCH

On Saturday afternoon, the Longwood College Rugby Football Club lost to a talented George Mason Club, 18-6. The game was very even until Mason scored three straight tries (4 points apiece) and converted one extra point attempt (two points) to go up 14-0 putting the game out of Longwood's reach.

In a scoreless first half Longwood was the aggressor for most of the time. They appeared to score two tries, but both were called back on technicalities. At the end of the half, Mason was about to score but time ran out, saving Longwood from being scored on in the only drive that Mason mounted for the entire first half.

The second half showed a much better George Mason team. They won most of the scrums and controlled the ball most of the time, although Longwood, led by excellent play from Jeff White, still proved to be a fierce opponent. Finally, on one occasion, they managed to score a try on a long run down the left side of the field. The extra point attempt was good making the score 6-0.

In rugby, the team that is scored on must kick off, and it was a markedly more exhausted Longwood team that kicked off to Mason, which proceeded to score twice more before Longwood's Ross Connors scored a hard-fought try. Greg Forentinos successfully converted the extra points attempt to make the score 14-6.

Mason scored one more time before the game was over, making the final score 18-6, but Longwood can still be proud of themselves because they were at a disadvantage from the start. For while George Mason is a well coached team that receives $7100 in funds from their school, Longwood has no coach and gets no school funds.

At the end of the game, it is tradition for the opposing teams to form lines in such a fashion that every man will shake every other man's hand. As a result of this, almost instantaneously, the two teams that had been sworn enemies on the field, became fast friends. This rarely happens in sports and Gary Cunningham summed it up best by saying, "We leave out hatred on the field." Indeed, the entire experience of rugby at Longwood shows class that is very rare in today's athletic scene.

Starving the Trojan Horse: Profile On Janet Greenwood

By MARK SEGAL

Janet Greenwood was once denied employment in California on the basis of her sex. She was told that one woman in the firm was all that was needed. But she didn't bite back. Bark? Not even a whimper.

"You don't want to be put on a bad list in a certain network", she says. Don't fight the system, work with it.

Indeed. If she were a scrapper she wouldn't be president of Longwood. Perhaps if she was a fighter she would have snapped the neck of the west-coast bureaucratic quoto-crat. In dealing with Longwood's problems, Dr. Greenwood is not as creative as she is intelligent. Last Friday night a visiting author at Longwood said that good writers aren't intelligent, but creative. Like a writer's emotions ink pages, the president's intelligence blanks the irrational.

She prefers the empirical to the emotional and the statistical over the general. The specifics. She sees the Equal Rights Amendment as a political issue, not a moral issue.

"I really look at the E.R.A. amendment (proposed amendment) at this point in time as an interesting case in either a political success because of the organizing that was done or a political failure because of the lack — the gap in the organizing."

I took the opposition:

"I see it as a moral issue."

"In what way?" she had not passed judgement yet. Don't speculate without empirical data. She doesn't. Her best friend would not be a nerve ending, nor the nerve but the nerve beginning — the computer, and she wants to innovate her friend as an educational tool at Longwood.

"Computer literacy to me seems to be as basic as the students learning how to use the pocket calculator," she begins.

"Because where computers are today, pocket calculators were ten years ago. And it seems to me that in the next ten years or so, with all the trends that are occurring and with the tremendous innovations that are being developed — realistically we are all going to be looking at having a computer in our home a decade from now.

"One of my own beliefs about education is that we should be doing as much as possible to individualize education. And through the use of computer based instruction and individualized instruction we are able to again capture what has been shown in the research; which is that with the computer based instruction, of course under the supervision of faculty, you have quicker learning rate. Students learn the material faster and they retain it longer. Which is the way you really have to measure success."

But she has a problem: there are no guarantees that Richmond will allocate money or that a company that may be willing to locate here will do so. "In other words", she says, "it does not have to be a long distance line hooking it up to the main frame." Or, that Longwood would be the main frame. "If we were able to get that as an option that would make it viable by next fall."

This 'main frame' proposal would cut costs to a minimum;

★★★ Play Critique ★★★

By DUDLEY D. SAUVE
Artistic Director
The Waterworks Players

Educational theater should expose both audience and participants to a variety of theatrical styles and types. The 100th play of the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts, Love for Love, did just that. Restoration comedy should be done periodically along with other classics. All in all it was a good production. Richard Gamble's set was appropriately reminiscent of a 17th century stage with proscenium doors and boxes on stage. It was a beautifully functional set, easily changed, easily worked on, and easy on the eye. The costumes harmonized nicely with the set and helped set character types.

Perhaps most difficult for today's amateur actors, schooled in the "torn t-shirt" style of realistic acting is to put across lines that are witty and full of double entendre, lines filled with the beauty of language. In Director Doug Young's program notes, "the play is challenging . . . because of the intricacies of its language . . ." Some of his cast ably met this challenge. The perfect enunciation of George Hughes as Tattle was a joy to the ear. He was almost matched by Faith Lancaster as Angelica and Helen Van Jackson as Miss Prue. The seduction scene between Tattle and Miss Prue, I felt, was the high point of the evening. Frank Creasy as Sir Legend was perfectly cast and his performance, too, was outstanding. He never missed a double meaning, and each line was a gem. Mr. Creasy might do well, however, to learn the difference between projection and shouting. Too much, I felt, was too loud. But perhaps he was trying to play his name. Playwrights of the 17th century were in the habit of using character names as personification, and in so doing, giving a clue as to how the character should be played. I felt that most of the cast used this clue to their advantage.

The production had uneven moments, though. Too many of the players were not up to the enunciation and projection needed for Restoration Comedy. The broad style that is required was often lost in an attempt at realism. The asides should be spoken directly to the audience. That's part of the fun.

Several others of the cast, I felt, did creditable jobs. Tony Russo as Jeremy, Lyman Smith as Mrs. Frail and Cindy Jude as Mrs. Foresight had several nice scenes each.

Also in the cast were Stewart Grant, Jeff McDaniel, Jim Greene, David Wood, Don Bush, Mike Curley, Lisa Bowers and Terri Long.

It's interesting to note that a 20th century audience had no trouble understanding the bawdy humor of the 17th century. Congreere's lines were as well appreciated the night I saw the show as they were when Betterton first spoke them.

Restoration Comedy may not be everyone's cup of tea, but it should be done now and then — and where better than an educational theater?

---Movie Review---

By JOE JOHNSON

It's a quiet night in Philadelphia. A deteriorated Van is brokenly cranked and lights evaporate the omnipresent shadows. Slowly it creeks forward on its last legs pulling up to a guarded warehouse. A sole figure in black pea jacket and turned down stocking cap creeps forward from the vans interior and stalks the lighted guardhouse. He turns checking for a maintenance of silence and possible absences. There are none. A drum beat and lingering bass fill the atmosphere—under the skin in the veins. The figure picks a lock and hunched, crookedly idles into the decrepit edifice. A doberman awaits his approach growling viciously for the taste of human flesh only to be bribed by a Three Musketeer. The music lightens and from the warehouse wearing a particularly well known wide eyed fear Richard Pryor scampers forth.

That's right. Richard Pryor is back in "Bustin Loose" and I would hope to complete the phrase "better than ever". But alas, it is not to be so. Unfortunately in that never never land of Hollywood, they take as a solemn truth, that if anyone can act he should also write. Although Mr. Pryor has achieved a certain brilliance of timing in his comic style, a pen in his hands is a dangerous weapon. In short, Mr. Pryor satisfies all the requirements of writing for television. But that's another story.

The movie relates the epic journey of one five year old counterfeiter, defrauding chicken franchiser, and present day con-man (Richard Pryor) forced a la' Probation Officer to drive an overly sensitive and equally bitchy Miss Vivian Perry (Cycily Tyson) with a dozen (give or take a few) delinquents three thousand miles from bustling Philadelphia into the heart of Washington (the state) in an ancient eight wheeled orange thing slightly resembling a bus.

On the surface the children appear to be one dimensional comic stereotype — a nine year old who plays prostitute and attempts seducing anyone five inches over her; a pyromaniac set on blazing Pryor's hat; a blind boy who won't be satisfied until he, too, has driven the bus "without any help." But after one delves into the story, it is found that they all have very serious problems which are just as one dimensional and just as easily solved with a hug, kiss and grand soliloquy by Richard Pryor saying in a fit of rage "We're not losers — we are somebody — ain't nobody gonna take that away from us!"

The movie of course ends, as could have been guessed by watching the first ten minutes, with Miss Perry and Richard falling madly in love, saving the farm and all the while, children singing joyfully in the

It wasn't all bad mind you, there was some delightful situation comedy — the KKK pushing the lumbering orange heap through mud, a rousing bout of slapstick in a swapshop, and Pryor's own indomitable fast talking, hip jiving, cooled out, con man act. But amongst the sentimental bunk, laughter was a choking situation — rather like gagging on one's own puke

In Memoriam

Kenny Leipertz, a senior at Longwood College, died Sunday, Sept. 27, after suffering severe back injuries in an auto accident the previous Friday.

Born Jan. 27, 1960, Kenny was the son of Robert and Lois Liepertz. He graduated from Manchester High School in Richmond, Va. in 1978.

While attending Longwood he played on the tennis team and also took part in intramural swimming. As a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon he was one of the founders of the fraternity's Big Brother program, a program which worked with the welfare department and social work office to provide fatherless boys with a companion and hopefully a father figure.

Members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon are now accepting any donations to this program which will be dedicated to the memory of Kenny Leipertz.

Help Us Plan Summer of '82

Planning for the Summer Session of 1982 is already underway. The staff of the Office of Continuing Studies would like you, the students, to help us develop a summer program which will meet your needs.

The Summer of 1981 Longwood offered 148 classes during two 5-week sessions, June 1-July 3 and July 6-August 7. We want to try next year to meet as many needs as possible during the summer session.

One suggestion made by several students is to increase the number of courses to be offered during the evenings in order to accommodate the students who hold summer jobs yet desire to attend school. Suggestions from students help us to initiate new programs. To help us plan course offerings for next year, please clip the coupon below, indicate the course(s), and return the coupon to the Office of Continuing Studies prior to October 27, 1981. Let's make the Summer Session of 1982 even better than the 1981 session!

I would like to take the following course(s) during the Summer Session of 1982:

Gifted Students Need Instructors

How would you like to contribute to a young person's development of a special skill? Now's your chance! Your expertise is needed for the Prince Edward County High School students in the Gifted and Talented programs who have specified certain areas of interest which they would like to pursue. Any student, faculty, or staff member who has experience in any of the areas listed below is encouraged to volunteer as a mentor. Each mentor and student would plan individually for their hours and activities together through the semester or the school year. To help with this planning process Mrs. Lydia Peale, Coordinate of the Gifted and Talented programs, will give one or two training sessions.

Several gifted and talented students have requested music lessons, especially guitar and piano. Other students are interested in finding out more about electronic music, reading music, and writing music. In the field of art students would like instruction in photography, filmmaking, and ceramics. Other interests include archeology, theatre, electronics, fashion modeling, automotive repairs, secretarial skills, sports writing in newspaper, and the history and care of horses. Those persons with knowledge of other skills and the desire to be a mentor are encouraged to contact us as well.

Your participation in this project will give these students a great learning experience and well as the personal satisfaction you will receive. Also Longwood students may have volunteer hours recorded on their permanent records through the Social work department which houses the Volunteer Program. Your help is greatly needed for this program to be a success. If interested, please contact Social Work students Donna Jones 392-5605 or Box 437) or Martha Neal (392-6093).

Flamin' Oh's Burn

By KURT COFFIELD

After touring for three weeks the Flamin' Oh's have put together an invigorating show. The four man band out of Minneapolis, Minnesota, rocked the small but receptive Longwood audience. The Rock & Roll band, which patterns themselves after the Pretenders and Rolling Stones, rocked the audience to many original tunes. They played "Shakin with the Bee", "I Won't, She Don't", and "Private Eyes" all written by lead Guitarist Robert Wilkinson.

The Flamin' Oh's have been together for four years and sound like they have been playing together longer. Their imitations of the Rolling Stones "Jumping Jack Flash" and "Satisfaction" were well performed. The four members of the band, Joseph Behrend (Piano & Organ), Robert Wilkinson (Guitar & Vocals), Jim Jodar (Bass) and Bob Meid (Drums) all agree they play Rock & Roll exclusively.

The Oh's have just finished their second album and it sounds hot! Some title cuts off it they played are "Delta Dogs", "Every Day", and "Play to Win". Although they have finished the album they haven't selected a title yet.

The Flamin' Oh's Saturday night live performance was a good one, it's too bad the crowd couldn't have been larger. But you never know, the Oh's new album might propel them to be stars, and the few of us at the Saturday Night Live can say we saw them, "up close and personally."

Jax Cracks

By KURT COFFIELD

Before Friday night's mixer one of the big questions was, who is Krakajax and what kind of music do they play. Most of us had seen them before under their previous name of Sandcastle. Sandcastle performed at Longwood for a Christmas dance in 1979. They have been traveling under their new name since February 1981.

Krakajax played a diverse range of music: Beach, Country and Blues. The five piece band played many favorites: "Lady" and "New Orleans Lady" by

LaRue, and "Run like the Wind" and "Sailing" by Christopher Cross, and "Soul Man" and "Gimme Some Lovin'" by the Blues Brothers. They also played the Rolling Stones new hit song "Start Me Up."

Although, Friday night's show in the lower dining hall was a very entertaining one. Krakajax selected a good list of songs that Longwood students could really relate to, making the crowd much more lively. Cheers, to the S-UN for this well timed performance and for their half-a-dollar Budweisers.

Jones Displays Art

By TAMMY PORTER

The showcase gallery in Lankford at Longwood College presents the art exhibit of Elizabeth Jones. The display sponsored by the art department and the student union may be observed in the reading room from October 12 to October 21.

Elizabeth Jones, a senior, is majoring in studio art with a concentration in painting, while minoring in art history. Some of her previous awards include the Alumni Purchase Award which she won during her junior year, and her tie for "Artist of the Month" last year on her art history term paper.

The types of work hanging in the showcase include watercolors, an oil painting, pen and ink, scratchboard, weaving, and a linoleum print. Although most of Elizabeth's works being displayed are school projects, she worked busily over the summer. Some of her favorites include the linoleum print named Stubbs 216, a weaving, and her pencil drawing she completed this summer of a house near her own entitled Hannah House. Other paintings that Elizabeth created on campus comprise of the watercolors of the Lancaster Library, the Longwood Hallway, and the Rotunda.

After graduation, Elizabeth plans to study textile design.

Musicians at Oktoberfest

By RUSTY HURLEY

A traditional part of the Oktoberfest weekend is the performance of Longwood's Concert and Jazz Bands. Though frequently overlooked, these bands are as much a part of the atmosphere of Longwood's Oktoberfest as the clowns and midway booths.

The Concert Band, under the direction of Darrell Harbaum, opens the midway celebrations with Polkas, Waltzes and assorted festive pieces at 2:15 p.m. Saturday. The Jazz Ensemble, under the direction of Allen Butler continues to grow in size and ability. They will perform at 11:45 a.m. on Saturday.

Both ensembles work incredibly hard for Oktoberfest and, if you have time, sit down and give a listen to them. They're sure you'll enjoy it.

from Springfield, Missouri, and are known throughout with such hits as, "If You Wanna Get To Heaven" (their first single), "Jackie Blue" (the number one song in the country in the spring of 1979) and "Chicken Train" (from their "greatest hits" album). The Ozarks as a group are nearly ten years old. Interling into the eighties the group carries their label with Columbia records. They have changed their style somewhat. They have aimed their songwriting and performance at the heart of America's musical taste and teamed up with producer John Boylan (whose own credits range from work with Linda Ronstadt. The Charlie Daniels Band to Boston).

Because of changes in styles of music as well as band members themselves it is quite difficult to classify or typify exactly their tempo of music. They do, however, substantially bear tinges of both the hard-driving Southeastern rock and roll of the Outlaws, and the jazzier, multiharmonized Bablo Cruise.

Artist of the Month

Lisa Cumbe is a Senior at Longwood College working toward a BFA degree with studio concentrations in Drawing and Printmaking Graphic Design.

Inspired by her Eighth Grade Art teacher, Myrna Dworsky, Lisa has been working in Art since 1973. She has won numerous ribbons and cash awards in competitions judged by noted artists and curators such as Clarence MacNelly, Barclay Sheaks, Anthony Radich and the late Dick Cossitt. In 1980 she was awarded the Longwood College "Art Department Purchase Award" and "Best in Show" title at the 17th Annual Walter Cecil Raul's Museum Five-County Art Show in Southampton County. She was named "Artist of the Month" for February 1981 by the Longwood College Art Department, and in May 1981 won third place in Graphics and a Merit Award in Photography at the Annual Heart of Virginia Festival.

For the past two years, Lisa has been Art Editor of the Gyre, Longwood's Literary and Art Publication, and in 1980-81 was the Student Director of the Showcase Gallery. Currently, one of her works is included in the Inter-School Council for Student Activities traveling exhibit at Hollins College. She recently completed a mural for the Campus School at Longwood.

Lisa is a 1977 graduate of Southampton High School and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cumbe of Courtland.

Midway Plans Announced.

By KIM DIGGS

With Oktoberfest just a few days away, many committees and organizations are busy preparing for the big event. One of the most traditional parts of Oktoberfest is the Midway, and "Everybody seems to be working hard towards the best Midway ever!" says Marcia Fastabend, one of the co-chairmen of the Midway committee.

This year, the Midway will be in the Lankford parking lot and will be open from 2:15 until 4:30 on Saturday. There are forty booths and thirteen tables planned for this year's Midway, and Cheri Williams, co-chairman of the Midway committee, is "very pleased with the turn-out." The booths on the Midway will feature games, food, drinks, crafts, and various other items for sale. The Freshman class will be selling pom-pom people and bulletin boards, the Sophomores will sponsor a dart game, the Juniors will be selling Oktoberfest mugs, and the Senior class will be doing caricatures. Many other organizations will also be participating. The rain location for the Midway is Iler Gym and the ABC Rooms of Lankford.

Judging of the booths this year will begin at 1:00. The class booths will be judged as part of the color class competition, and the other booths will be judged for a first, second, and third place prize. The winning booths will display their ribbons while the Midway is open.

Witchcraft Film

The second set of films in this year's Anthropology Film Series will be screened Wednesday, October 21, beginning at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium.

The two films to be shown October 21 are THE FEAST and MAGICAL DEATH. THE FEAST shows the formation of a military alliance between two hostile Yanomamo Indian Villages in Brazil. The total population of the Yanomamo is about ten thousand Indians scattered on one-hundred twenty five independent and militarily hostile villages in the Amazon Rain Forest. THE FEAST shows how one village gives an elaborate ritual meal in an attempt to keep the enemy from attacking them. The film MAGICAL DEATH depicts the use of hallucinogenic snuff in the practice of witchcraft by men in one village against the children of an enemy village. Each film is in color and lasts thirty minutes. All films in the anthropology Film Series are free and open to the public.

Oktoberfest: A Wishful Elegy

The red and whites are on the run.
Oktoberfest is here again.
The green and whites are having fun.
Oh my God break out the gin.

In rush the reds are far ahead,
As the ever loyal classmates cheer.
The green and whites are almost dead
While browns are bombed on beer.

The balding parents come from far and wide
To witness the wondrous time.
By midday they had screamed and cried,
Such torture is surely a crime.

The booths are lined in perfect sets.
Two thousand people in ruthless flow.
A lost child cries out for help,
Crunched by people losing dough.

Upon Jarman's colorful stage
The twenty-two Klowns lay dormant.
The pyramid had tumbled down.
An audience, relieved of torment.

Weeks spent perfecting a skit,
Too bad the time was wasted.
Everyone was bored as shit,
Wishing the end be hastened.

The Chi's in cloaked solemn robes
Walk the paces around the pony.
A sole senior stood back and watched
A mongoloid by the name of Tony.

The cake sits all ready to cut.
It's been sitting for nearly a day.
Someone cries "I'll not eat that muck"
Made by ARA Slater, they say!"

Oktoberfest is here again
Retreat, faithfully do hide.
Rumour leaks it's just the same
No doubt, cut and dried.

Forgotten pest, spirit diminished.
Laid to rest. It is finished.

Players to do Godspell

By RUSTY HURLEY

The Phi Mu Alpha - Sigma Alpha Iota production of the highly acclaimed musical Godspell, is now in high gear. Costumes are being made, music is rehearsed and set plans are being made.

This is no ordinary production. The cast and crews have to be in top condition, because Godspell is such an energetic play, requiring a surprising amount of audience rapport.

If you want tickets, they are available in the music secretary's office, 9-5 p.m., Monday through Friday, at a cost of $3.50 a ticket. The production is in Jarman, Nov. 4, 5, 6, but don't be lazy — seating is limited to 240 people a night and it is expected that few, if any tickets will be left for at the door sales.

Circle K

By ELAINA DAY

College is more than scholarship. It is a good time; it is getting to know others; it is finding out who you are; it is trying to make a meaningful contribution in a world that wants you to wait. Circle K provides a unique opportunity for reaching each of these goals.

Circle K is a service organization through which you can help other people. Membership in Circle K allows a person to make an impact on his life and others through the community.

The club was chartered in 1979. Since that time it has made itself responsive to the community through projects such as Big Brothers-Big Sisters, Longwood Phonathon and Senior Citizen birthday parties. As a result of these projects, the club won 1st place for achievement last year at the Statewide Circle K convention in Blacksburg, Virginia.

For this year, Circle K has many new ideas for the club to perform. But to be able to put these into effect, they need people. Are you the kind of person Circle K is looking for? If so, come to their meeting on Thursday, October 22 at 6:30 p.m. in the Red Room in Lankford.

A Romance Revisited

By JOE JOHNSON
and JODIKERSEY

"I've always been accused of being vampiric and portentously romantic...I want to put lay to the idea that I wear a cape!" said Alexander Theroux, notorious...uh...notorious author and self-exiled professor, who gave two selected readings from his novel Darconville's Cat on October 16 in Wygal Auditorium. Alexander Theroux taught at Longwood from 1969-1973. From his sojourn with the institute and surrounding area he developed the romantic plot for his novel, and found suitable satirical material.

"I set myself the task four and a half years ago to write a novel that I intended to write without compromising what I considered to be artistic vision in terms of prose...the plot is simple — I was in love with a woman who left me and married someone else. And I decided to write a novel of love and hate...I satirized Longwood...but this school has really come of age, and I see in point of fact that a lot of my satirical thrust are no longer perhaps legitimate which is an embarrassment to me...sort of like criticizing your wife when she's out of the room and then she enters a beautiful and elegant woman, talking about Milton and drinking a drambuie."

Theroux is not entirely optimistic regarding the sales of his novel. One critic wrote that to him, each page represented a mountain to scale to which Theroux replied "that particular reviewer is just a bad mountain climber who just does not feel the asperity for cognition. Darconville's Cat" continued Theroux "will be read when (John Irving's novel) The Hotel New Hampshire is recycled into

Theroux consented to an interview with The Rotunda editor and Dr. Donald Stuart to be broadcast over Longwood's Radio Station. The following are some excerpts from that interview:

Rotunda: For what reasons did you leave Longwood and how did you really feel about Longwood while you were here?

Theroux: I thought generally the school was a very good school and I left Longwood only because I was offered a job at Harvard University in 1973. I had my ups and downs for personal reasons, some of them which formed the novel Darconville's Cat. Generally I found the students to be quite sophisticated...some of the students lent themselves to caricature or satire but that would have been the case at Yale or Princeton or Stanford...students are generally the same all over.

Rotunda: Why do you return to Farmville in your writing?

Theroux: The town occasionally depressed me, I think there were terrible influences of the town and area on the college... rather than look on themselves as college students, many of these 17-21 year olds I think walked around feeling terribly neglected and I think there was an invidious feeling Farmville had for the college. I'm not sure that's changed at all but I think the College can do something about leading the town — to a kind of wiser and more understanding sense of order.

Dr. Stuart — Who, as prose models do you imitate? Who do you admire as writers? What separates your interest from the Harold Robbins that we can read quickly that don't challenge us?

Theroux — I would say essentially that first off Harold Robbins doesn't have a style and many people writing don't have a style; also that one sees a sort of gray quacomolloy or kind of reporter ease that many hack writers adopt and often try to pass off as an example in prose of clarity. On the other hand my writing style is slightly allusive. My interest in fiction goes back to the encyclopedic novel, a pedantic novel that moves sideways as well as forward, that doesn't hesitate to digress when the book necessitates... to give a kind of education to the reader, not the General Hospital approach to fiction... does she have the baby or does she not...

Dr. Stuart — What is it about the South that is worth satirizing?

Theroux — I think the major point that one can satirize about the South, understand that the North has many facets of it, also, is the tremendous amount of religious phobias — you know grease balls that get on television Sunday afternoon and give sermons, wretched gospel groups that are pretending that there is some evangelical worth in what they sing. I think there's more bullshit, in terms of religion in the South than any place on earth. It's a strange thing because there are many good people who are interested in Jesus and trying to find the meaning of their life through religion.

Dr. Stuart — How is the book a restatement that somehow this whole modern culture has become a waste land?

Theroux — I think a lot of the reason people are so unhappy, miserable, sad and divorced and troubled generally is because they are avoiding a lot of the consolations God has allowed us, especially in the areas of art and nature and when the world is too much with us... I think people get aggrieved and troubled. I made Darconville dissatisfied with the 20th century because essentially in many ways I am McDonald's golden arches, programs like Little House on the Prairie and Dallas, American bread, general incivility of shopkeepers to customers, overcharging for cars... the list could go on. I think sometimes it's more important to make compromises with your health and with your attitudes to live life in a true way, than to just find that life by its mere longevity is valuable. I find the 20th century, generally, uncongenial, a century where there's a terrible kind of marginalization of society, where mediocrity is valued, when you stop and think that Thomas Jefferson was president of the U. S. and then a couple hundred years later a person like Richard Nixon can become president of the U. S. Generally the 20th Century has ignored a lot of the real values — I hope I don't sound like a member of the Moral Majority. I remember Farmville in the late 60's and earlier 70's when poor old black women were carrying huge sacks of groceries because they couldn't afford a taxi and frequently they had to stumble all the way to their houses without any help. I remembered feeling degraded by that.

Dr. Stuart — Do you feel pressure ever to try to write for a broader audience? Could this novel be adapted for television?

Theroux — In my opinion Darconville's Cat is not the kind of novel that could become a best seller precisely for reasons that Kenny Rogers is a popular singer. I know this sounds kind of vain, totally vain perhaps, but I think Darconville wouldn't watch television because television for the most part is a kind of brainless displacement activity for the want of a real attention to the things that good art provides. It's a kind of cassette you can shove into your head and easily identify with. To put aside real concerns with the soul, real concerns with the intellect, real concerns with cognition, leaves you with Barbara Mandrell, Kenny Rogers, Dallas and that sort of thing. How can a serious writer really find the opportunity to write for television — it's a cliché ridden drain that has usurped perhaps potentially good writers and sort of forced them to be thinking for plots to Rhoda or All in the Family. I'm not saying that in a happy moment we shouldn't watch a soap opera or some completely uncerebral television show, what I'm saying they should have is what Hemingway called a kind of built in shit detector. You should know that you are watching rubbish and not pretend it's good.

Dr. Stuart — Do you have any final thoughts, Alex?

Theroux — No, I only have three final questions, asked more rhetorically than anything else — Do people still go to church here with the right intentions... has a black family been encouraged to live in the Greens... and why is the Confederate soldier standing across from the Rotunda, smiling?

Alexander Theroux is currently teaching at Fawcett Academy in Landover, Massachusetts.

Tranter Stresses Storytelling

by Joe Johnson

"I'm a bit terrified of the phrase English literature...you see I'm a Scot." And with that simple explanation, Nigel Tranter prolific Scottish author and historian began his lecture to a packed Bedford auditorium.

His visit to Longwood entailed two lectures, one at 1:00 p.m. on October 13th and the other at 11:00 a.m. on October 14th.

The first lecture entitled "Writer to Reader" detailed several of Tranter's views concerning novel writing or as he prefers to call it "storytelling". "If you are a reader you are looking at a lot of little black marks together and forming words, putting these words together and forming sentences, then paragraphs and all the time you are working, you are building a picture...a moving picture but what I want to get over to you is that each one of you is forming a different picture. I see a wonderful picture but your interpretation of my words are nowhere near that brilliant. My job as storyteller is to build that picture so vivid, that yours comes at least close to mine, and to, of course, tell a story...therefore writer needs reader, and reader needs writer."

Tranter also gave a little biographical information concerning his writing habits. At 71 he is still a "writer on the hoof", that is, one who writes while walking. This habit is a throwback from his army days of World War II, when finding the barracks too noisy and distracting, he would walk and write. Now he walks about 18 miles a day (along the shores of Aberlady Bay near his home east of Edinburgh) writing from 1,200 to 1,500 words, five days a week.

He later gave some short advice to any would-be novelists, "you must have enthusiasm...you must have self discipline...but mostly you must want to tell a story." Tranter warned of the pitfalls of writing workshops and creative writing courses and said that although he had no "formula" there were two main rules he followed while creating 1) retain the interest of the reader...you must write for the public and 2) suspend the readers disbelief...at least till the end of the work.

His second lecture entitled "Reformed Characters" used a storytellers approach in explaining a host of personages from the annals of Scottish streak in the kingdom) John Knox (history is the propaganda of the victors) Mary Queen of Scots (nice creature, mind you, but dreadful ruler) James 4th (a burdensome chain and link with the past).

"A novelist" said Tranter "is more concerned with the delineation and presentation of characters...you don't have to believe everything in history books".

Tranter is author of well over one hundred publications, forty-four of which have found their way into the library of Congress in Washington, D.C.

He has recently published a book entitled "Nigel Tranter's Scotland" which will appear on the market sometime in mid-October. Tranter has been awarded the honor of Knight Commander of St. Lazarus of Jerusalem, the second most ancient honor of chivalry in the world. He was given an honorary degree of arts by Edinburgh University, is honorary president of the Scottish Center of International PEN, and was chairman of the Society of Authors in Scotland. He was just made Scot of the Year by the International Order of Knights Templar.

Mary Wash. Wins Tournament

All tournament selection, Julie Petefish.

By RONNIE BROWN

The Blue Tide of Mary Washington won all four of its matches Saturday while capturing the crown of the first Cindy Smith Memorial Invitational Volleyball Tournament. Named after the late Cindy Smith, a former Longwood student and volleyball player, the round robin tourney provided good competition between VAAIAW Division schools.

Champion, Mary Washington finished the tourney with a 4-0 mark. Second was Emory and Henry, 3-1. Third was Longwood, 2-2. Fourth was Ferrum, 1-3 and Hampton Institute rounded out the field at 0-4.

Longwood finished the day in the middle of the pack, but coach Joyce Phillips was not excited about her team's finish.

"We have problems with good teams," said Phillips. "Either they're (Longwood) on or not. When they play together they're great."

Coach Phillips was pleased with the aggressive play of All-Tournament selection Julie Petefish.

"Julie always plays good. She has been consistent all season," said Phillips.

Petefish felt Longwood would have done better in the tournament if it had been able to win the crucial game.

"We didn't do it when we needed it," said Petefish. Longwood's difficulty at playing in the clutch was evident in the losses to Mary Washington and Emory and Henry. Despite being supported by a roaring crowd of students, the Lady Lancers should not come up with a win against a scrappy and talented Emory and Henry team.

Mary Washington was clearly the dominant team in the tourney. The Blue Tide allowed only one match, with Emory and Henry, to go the full three games (15-2, 9-15, 15-11). Coach Connie Gallahan was impressed with Emory and Henry's comeback in the second game, but was even more pleased with the ability of her players to return serves.

"It's hard to hold concentration for that long when you return serves and the other team hits it back. It gets frustrating after a while."

Hitters Anne Means (Most Valuable Player of the Tournament) and Karen Stevenson, an All Tournament selection, received much of the credit with their spikes, but Gallahan did not overlook the outstanding setters.

"They (hitters) can't do the whole job. The setters did a good job setting the ball to our front line."

Runner-up Emory and Henry placed Bronie Reynolds on the tournament team. Ferrum's Cindy Welsh and Hampton Institutes Soyna Daye were also picked.

Currently 7-5, Longwood's next match is at Bridgewater Friday. The game was incorrectly listed as a home game for Longwood in the Cindy Smith Tournament program.

Soccer Defeats Mary Washington

The Longwood College Soccer team awoke in the final 15 minutes of the game to defeat Mary Washington College's Blue Tide 2-1, before a small but verbal verbal field crowd, Friday night. The game was very close and defensive until after Longwood's first goal. At that point, Mary Washington could no longer rely on their defense, which they had been doing, and had to go on the attack, which opened up the last 14 minutes of play.

The first half was very defensive and, consequently, very dull. Mary Washington's game plan was to collapse back on their defense, allowing Longwood no really good shots. Longwood almost had a goal when Gustavo Leal headed a corner kick at the Mary Washington goal. Leal made a great effort, diving in order to head the ball, but the ball hit the top post of the goal and bounced back. Mary Washington should have had a goal on one occasion when they were set up for a shot with Longwood goalie, Brian Sprinkle out of the box, having just blocked a shot. But the ensuing shot somehow missed the mark and the half ended shortly thereafter in a 0-0 deadlock.

The first thirty minutes of the second half were a repeat of the first. Although both teams displayed good skills neither team could get the ball in the goal. Mary Washington was constantly on the defensive, only getting six shots for the entire half. Finally, with 14:46 left in the game, Longwood's Tim Brennan got a goal on a very good shot. After that, the game got exciting. Mary Washington tried to even it up but that is hard to do when the other team is threatening your goal.

Reese Tops at Ferrum

Bryant Reese (SOUTH HILL) became the first member of a Longwood men's golf team to win a tournament last week in the Ferrum Invitational, and for his efforts, Reese has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 9-16. The award is chosen each week by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

A transfer from Chowan (NC) college, Reese put together rounds of 75 and 76 for a two-day total of 151 for medalist honor in the college division of the Ferrum Invitational last Monday and Tuesday at Old Mill Golf Club in Groundhog Mountain, VA. His performance helped Longwood take third place out of seven teams.

"Bryant has been playing well for us this fall," said Lancer coach Steve Nelson. "During the tournament he played an intelligent game and made very good club selections over a tight layout. He played the Old Mill course 16 strokes better than when he played there a year ago for Chowan."

Reese, who plays number two for Longwood in its abbreviated fall schedule, had fired rounds of 77 and 83 for a 160 in the VMI-Washington & Lee Invitational earlier this fall. His 151 was only seven strokes over par at the par 72 Old Mill Course last week.

While Longwood has fielded a men's golf team the past four years, Reese became the first Lancer golfer to take first place in a tournament with his showing in the Ferrum Tournament.

Lancer Cagers in Scrimmage Saturday

Longwood coach Cal Luther will unveil his 1981-82 Lancer basketball team Saturday at 3:00 in Lancer Hall when the Lancers stage their fourth Blue-White inter-squad scrimmage. Admission is free.

Serving as honorary coaches for the Blue-White tilt will be Carolyn Hodges, Longwood interim Athletic Director and Tom Baynham, Director of Employee Relations. Luther and assistant coach Mo Schoepfer will be more than casually interested spectators at the game.

Longwood, 19-9 last year in its first season in NCAA Division II, begin preseason workouts last Thursday. Luther welcomed back eight lettermen from last year's team and two newly recruited players. Tryouts are being conducted this week for the remaining six spots on the Lancer squad, which will be a combination varsity and junior varsity.

"We're small in terms of size," Luther appraised, "but I've been encouraged in our early workouts by the excellent enthusiasm and spirit of the players."

Four starters return from last season. Guards Mike McCroey (ANNE ARUNDEL CO., MD), Joe Remar (ELIZABETH, NJ), forward Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey and center Ron Orr (ELIZABETH, NJ) are returning starters.

Also back from last year's squad are guards Jim Sixsmith (N. BABYLON, NY), Darrell Jenkins (NEW YORK, NY) and Mitch Walker (HOLLIS, NY) plus three-year veteran forward Randy Johnson (RICHMOND).

New recruits are center John Weber (PRINCE FREDERICK, MD) and guard Mike Testa (DAMASCUS, MD).

The Lancers open regular season play November 21 with a game at West Virginia Tech.

Lancer Golfers Host Tournament

Longwood's men's golf team, third in last week's Ferrum Invitational, will host the 18-hole Longwood Men's Golf Tournament Friday at Longwood Golf Course with a seven team field.

Hampden-Sydney, Ferrum, Christopher-Newport, Newport News Apprentice, Bluefield, Mary Washington and Longwood will compete in the one-day tournament at Longwood's 6,042-yard, par-69 layout. The Lancers are defending champs while Hampden-Sydney's Chip King will be back to defend his individual title. Tee-off time for the tourney is 12:30.

"We're looking for a very competitive tournament," said Longwood coach Steve Nelson. "Going in it looks like Hampden-Sydney, Christopher Newport and Longwood should be the tournament favorites."

Longwood finished third in the college division of the 36-hole

Ferrum Invitational last week as Bryant Reese (SOUTH HILL) took medalist honors with a 75-76-151 and Tim White (RICHMOND) was third with a 76-79-155. The Lancers had a 320-325-658 while NC-Methodist was first with a 636 and Greensboro second with a 649.

Other Longwood scores included: Glen Bugg (CHASE CITY) 89-85-174, Robert Lochvar (PRINCE GEORGE) 88-85-173 and Ricky Collier (ANNANDALE) 89-97-188.

Longwood closes out regular season play next Tuesday with a trip to Virginia Tech. The Lady Lancers will compete in the VAAIAW Division I State Tournament at James Madison October 30-31.

Field Hockey Team Visits J.M.U.

Longwood's field hockey team, which split a pair of games last week, visits James Madison, a VAAIAW Div. I foe, Tuesday, hosts VCU Thursday and entertains Duke Saturday at 1:00 in a busy week of action.

Women Golfers in State Tournament

Longwood's women golfers swing back into action this week when the Lady Lancers take part in the VAAIAW State Open Tournament Thursday, Friday and Saturday at Keswick Country Club near Charlottesville.

Individual golfers from Longwood, James Madison, William & Mary and Sweet Briar will compete in the 54-hole tournament at the par-73 Keswick golf course. For the first time in the past 11 years there will be no competition on a team basis for the state title. Longwood has won the team title six times in the past.

Longwood Women's Basketball Outlook

After three straight losing seasons including last year's 12-16 campaign, Longwood's women's basketball team appears set to pull off a big turnaround in 1981-82. The Lady Lancers of new head coach Jane Miller and assistant Nanette Fisher have more depth, more height and more speed than any Longwood team in recent memory.

"We're probably deeper and stronger than last year at every position," says Miller. "We have a very, very quick team. We'll emphasize the running game and play pressure defense."

Miller says one of the big keys to how the season turns out will be Longwood's ability to play pressure defense.

"If we can play pressure defense effectively to go along with our running game and combine the two, things look pretty good," said the coach.

Though Miller is very high on her team's potential, there are questionmarks. Only six players are back from last year's team and seven newcomers are being counted on to play a big role in Lady Lancer plans. With five freshmen and only one senior, mistakes could be a problem.

Longwood's new coach, however, still likes her team's chances.

"So far, this group has worked extremely hard," said Miller. "They're in excellent condition and even though tryouts were very competitive, the players have been unselfish. This indicates we won't have any 'stars'."

Miller won't even hazard a guess as to what her starting lineup will be when the Lady Lancers open the season at home against Hampton Institute November 12.

"We may have a different starting lineup every game," said the coach. "Who starts may depend on who we play."

Heading up the list of returning players are senior Robin Hungate, a 5-10 center, and junior Cindy Eckel, a 5-10 forward. Both were vital cogs in last year's team.

Eckel averaged 15 points and eight rebounds per game while being named All-State, co-MVP in VAAIAW Division II and honorable mention All-American last season. She was Longwood's leading scorer in 14 games and leading rebounder in 15.

Hungate, who made 25 straight free throws over an eight-game stretch to set a school record, scored at just under 10 points per contest and averaged five rebounds. As the team's only senior, Hungate will be counted on for leadership.

Also back from last season are guards Paige Moody, a 5-8 soph, and Patty Lia, a 5-9 junior, forward Theresa Ferrante, a 5-10 junior and center Karen Savarese, a 6-0 game, and Ferrante, 4 ppg. and 4 rpg., played significant roles off-the-bench a year ago. Moody and Savarese also played well last year in a reserve capacity.

Freshman forwards include 5-10 Florence Holmes, 5-10 Valerie Turner and 5-9 Mariana Johnson, a highly talented trio. Holmes averaged over 30 points for King George High, Turner 14 points at Richmond Marshall Walker and Johnson 19 points and seven rebounds at Farmville's Prince Edward Academy.

Robin Powell, a 5-7 guard from Maryland, transferred in from East Oklahoma State after earning High School All-American honors two years. Another junior college transfer, 6-3 center Barbara DeGraff is Longwood's tallest player ever. She's a junior from New Jersey.

Also new to the team are freshmen Lana Hobbs, 6-0 center from Maryland and 5-6 guard Judy Painter from Strasburg.

With so much depth and talent Miller admits she may have

Lady Lancer Co-Captains

Senior Robin Hungate (Vinton) and junior Cindy Eckel (S. Plainfield, N.J.) have been chosen co-captains for Longwood's 1981-82 women's basketball team, head coach Jane Miller announced today. Eckel and Hungate were chosen by vote of their teammates.

Hungate, a tri-captain last season, has scored 586 points and grabbed 336 rebounds in her three-year career. Last season she averaged 9.6 points and five rebounds a game while setting a Longwood record for consecutive freethrows with 25 straight over eight games. She's a 5-10 center.

Co-Player of the Year last season in VAAIAW Division II, Eckel averaged 15.4 points and eight rebounds a game last season. In just two years she has scored 567 points and hauled down 295 rebounds. The American Women's Sports Foundation gave her honorable mention in its Division II All-America selections a year ago. Eckel is a 5-10 forward.

Profile on Greenwood allowing other institutions, at a cost, to tap in to our source. But no papers have been signed yet. "We are in the planning stages."

And so has the student life at Longwood been for the last five years. She has recognized this aspect of the less academic and has begun to take steps.

Concerning sign-in procedures, an irate Resident Supervisor told me that there have been some two hundred infractions this year. He wanted to know when this imposition would stop jeopardizing the academic career of adults.

Greenwood has spoken to the Resident Assistants, Dean Swann and Dr. Salters.

"What I have said (to them) is that I hope there would be more options here for students to be able to pick and choose what is most consistent with their lifestyle."

"I have encouraged the residence hall area to work on providing options for students. Some students have expressed the interest in having a quiet floor, quiet hall. There are varying differences of opinion." But she didn't want one opinion to be the bottom line. "As far as I am concerned there should be varying options for the students to choose what fits their style best."

Of course her feelings on this are based on empirical data. She is well armed with information in this area. She feels that her most important literary work (she has been the editor or author of some thirty five) concerned the extemporaneous counseling services of the R.A.

If a student proposal was written to completely demolish the sign in — sign out procedures, the escort method, and the restrictive hours of visitation, or essentially a 23 hour visitation rule — she would be willing to support it?

"If that is in keeping with the overall college policy as to what the board will approve then it would be approved..."

Would she be willing to violate policy? "... If it is not in keeping with the overall policy then I would certainly see talking with the board about it to change the overall policy."

She has an almost identical view concerning off campus housing for fraternities and sororities. But she would not dive into this before researching the financial ramifications first. She would not want the houses to "look like a ghetto," as she put it. "To me, the ideal situation is a fraternity row," she does not want houses "scattered over a five block area."

Would you be willing to help the fraternities in zoning (procedures)?" I asked.

"If we had a situation where, I had discussed this with the board and they were supportive and we were talking about a row concept, yes."

Beyond the board there is the town to deal with. She wants to build a system of reciprocity between the college, the town and the community. She explains this cannot be done without a slow process of "mending" old wounds. She even has announced having a shopping mall to revitalize the downtown area.

But somewhere with all the yes's and plans she is going to run into the fellow from California. The "no". Flat out and savage will ring in her ears again.

"It will take a good ten years here to accomplish what we'd like to accomplish."

"But at least you are realistic about it," I replied.

"You hear a note of realism though in the financial statements," she quickly warned... "because it can't be ignored."

She is not the Trojan horse. She prefers to starve them out. In 1991 we should know who won.

the Lancers' second goal putting the ball in after a Dana Gregg shot rebounded off the goalpost. Longwood now seemed to be in control of things and got ready to put the second-stringers in. But just 38 seconds after the Longwood goal, Mary Washington got through the defense and put a good shot in making the score 2-1 and putting the subs back on the bench.

Longwood was still one goal ahead, though, and it looked like they might get another, late in the game. They stormed the Mary

Washington goal on offense and stalled for time on defense until the game ended, giving Longwood their first defeat ever over Mary Washington. Coach Rich Pospanko was pleased with most of the aspects of his team's performance.

Political Party Views Discussed

By JOE JOHNSON

Campaign posters whipped by an autumn wind, danced around by colored leaves and in the background the faint rise and fall of voices rhetorically altered to catch the ear of the public. It's election time again. The candidates are Chuck Robb and Marshall Coleman and Longwood's political organizations, the Campus Democrats and Campus Republicans, have taken their part in the battle with a mock election.

The result of the election which was held Tuesday, Oct. 20, outside the dining hall, was Coleman with 179 votes and Robb with 103 votes. However, neither organization was satisfied with the turnout and in hopes that, possibly, they could clarify the issues for Longwood students, they have consented to a dual interview with both of them outlining the ideology of their candidate and debating specific points of contention between the 2 candidates. Thomas Moran, president of the Campus Republicans, and David Oakes, chairman of the Campus Democrats, represented the opposing organizations.

DO — Oakes

TM — Moran

Rotunda — Could you basically outline your candidate's position on taxes?

DO — Robb has stated he will lower taxes if possible, but he does not promise to veto tax increases as Coleman has, because it may be necessary to increase the taxes due to Reagan's economic plans.

TM — The Reagan plan is not to cut the amount of money going to states; it's to cut the increase in the amount of money that's going to states. Marshall Coleman has said that there will be no tax increase in his administration. Therefore, when the General Assembly goes about financing programs in the 1982 fiscal year for some period in the future they will not have the option of a possible tax increase. The Reagan tax plan is to reduce taxes for Americans to invest and save. What good will it do to cut taxes on the federal level only to have them raised on the state level?

DO — Virginia has to move ahead in several areas, developing its coal industry, dredging Chesapeake Bay to make it navigable for larger ships, solar industries... industries that will be on the rise in the next few years, plus there may be some unforeseeable event or development that may come about in the next few years that will make it necessary to raise taxes. Why should we take money away from public education, social programs like that, to finance these new developments?

TM — As far as what David said about dredging the port of Hampton Roads, that is already budgeted by the federal government. Marshall sees that there will be a cutback in the amount of money that we would have gotten due to Reagan's tax plan, and has developed a plan to meet this, he is going to cut the number of state employees by 5 per cent through attrition.

There hasn't been one statement made by Robb to show how a Robb administration would handle budget cuts—except that he won't rule out a tax increase.

DO — Speaking of President Reagan's planned tax cuts and budget cuts, they are not going to affect the states just through the grants to the states, there is going to be far greater impact in terms of education, social services, etc., that the state will need to compensate for. Virginia is a constantly growing state and we have to make allowances for that.

TM — The General Assembly sets tax rates and the General Assembly is dominated by Democrats and we all know how Democrats love to spend money. Marshall Coleman has only said that he'll veto a tax increase if it comes to his desk, if a large enough number of the members of the House of Delegates vote to override a Governor Coleman veto, then a tax increase can still go into effect and those Assemblymen will take the full brunt of that override. In rebuttal to David's statement about attracting industry and utilizing new technology, it's a state with a lower tax rate that will attract this new business.

Rotunda — Could you outline your candidate's position concerning the criminal justice system in Virginia?

TM — Marshall Coleman supports uniform sentencing.

Uniform sentencing is a policy by which all criminals convicted of a certain crime will be sentenced to the same amount of time in prison and will stay there. Although rehabilitation of criminals is justified, the first priority of law enforcement is to keep the streets safe.

DO — Such a program of uniform sentencing would tend to take the humanity out of the state judicial system. You might as well have a jury and a computer up there instead of a judge. There are certain incidences where circumstances justify variations in sentencing. As far as sentencing goes, Robb supports increased mandatory sentences for persons convicted of committing a crime with a fire arm. Robb also believes that Virginia should develop a computer information system to provide judges with detailed information on types of sentences being imposed for specific crimes throughout Virginia. This would encourage uniformity of sentencing of offenders with similar histories without dehumanizing the Judicial System.

TM — I think it's interesting that David said that because of uniform sentencing you may as well have a computer and a jury, and then goes on to say that it's Chuck Robb's position to use a computer to help bring about more uniform sentencing.

Though there must be humanity in the judicial system humanity is what we're trying to protect. Stricter laws and crime control are one of the cornerstones of the Coleman campaign. With Marshall Coleman's experience as Attorney General (the state's top legal office), we can better go about improving our judicial system under a Coleman administration.

DO — Concerning the computer system, in Robb's plan the judge would still have the final say. The sentencing would not be dictated to him. The computer system is just a more efficient method of getting information to the judge.

TM — It seems to me that David and I are arguing opposite ends of the spectrum. I no more would like to see a 9-year-old be sentenced to life imprisonment than I think David would like to see a mass murderer paroled after 3 years. I feel that uniform sentencing is at least a step in the right direction.

DO — First of all, uniform sentencing is not a step, it's a leap; it's not a gradualistic approach, it's jumping in with both feet. The example Tom gave about a 9-year-old is not the only place where compassion could enter the judicial system. There's a difference between a man's stealing because he has to and a man stealing for the fun of it. There's a difference between a man killing someone out of passion and a mass murderer who goes on a killing spree — because he has nothing better to do.

TM — David says that uniform sentencing is a jump with both feet, however, the uniform sentencing plan must be approved by the Democratic General Assembly. David's statement about a man who steals because he has to — In America, no one has to steal, the Government will provide the very basic nutritional and housing needs of anyone who needs it and accepts it. The difference between a person killing out of passion and a mass murderer does not make any difference at all to the dead person.

DO — As Tom has said the uniform sentencing bill has to pass through the General Assembly and they have failed to pass that bill for the past several years.

Rotunda — Could you outline your candidate's position concerning education?

DO — Let's start with student aid for higher education. Marshall Coleman has embraced President Reagan's budget plans including cuts in financial aid to students. Robb has spoken out against this. He has also spoken out in favor of increased state student aid. The reason for these views are that in Robb's opinion a good education guarantees equal opportunity in economic and social advancement. Robb also supports the concept of having a voting student representative on the boards of visitors of the state's colleges and universities. Robb also feels that the overall educational system should be upgraded. One way of achieving this would be to raise teachers' salaries to at least the national

Campers Battle Elements

By BILL BRENT

Fall break is for most students a temporary layoff from the avalanche of academics. For a chosen few it was living life with nature in the George Washington National Forest. For four days students in PE 213 ascended approximately 2,000 feet, on the Appalachian trail, which is northwest of Lynchburg and east of the Blue Ridge Parkway.

On Friday October 2, 36 students and 4 instructors equipped with food, clothing, maps and other back-packing paraphernalia began their journey. As the campers started uphill a crackling wind swirled around their faces slapping them with temperatures in the low 30's. They were climbing 8 miles up hill, their boots crushing the hail that pelted their bodies, while they watched sleet collect on their sleeves. Camp was set up between 4 and 5 p.m., the inclement weather forced the students to chemically induce their campfire. Soon a silencing snow fell on the pup tents of the sleeping students.

After a leisurely early meal, the campers departed and embarked on a 12 mile hike north on the Appalachian Trail up Maintop Mountain. Then Priest Mountain was scaled and then camp was constructed around 4 in the afternoon. That day the group adopted a wild dog as a stand-in pet, that accompanied them for several days. Campers abandoned the campsites around 11 a.m. and back packed to a scenic view on Priest Mountain. The next stop was 7 miles down hill to the Tyre River and the locale for another evening's slumber. As the sun ascended into the Carolina-Blue sky a bus gathered the group and returned them to campus Monday afternoon. Fortunately there were no casualties as very few animals encountered, and one camper suffered a mild ankle sprain. Two campers strayed away from the groups but returned shortly. One group misread their map and went the wrong way but quickly reestablished their location and rejoined the others. They saw few people on the trails but came across a young woman who was hiking alone from Pennsylvania to Georgia. On Sunday LC students were provided with extra water by auto campers who expressed concern of the availability of the precious liquid on the trail.

The Rangers Ride Again

Situation — The United States of America is held hostage by terrorists armed with a nuclear weapon.

Mission — to ambush the enemy terrorists en route to Richmond, Va.

Unit — 20 Longwood Rangers under the direction of Captain Stanford

Location — Fort Pickett where the flowers never bloom and man's best friend is a 155 howitzer. But the Rangers didn't seem to mind, in fact, according to Captain Stanford the trip was a real blast (so to speak). The weekend long camp started on Saturday with classes in survival training and the use of map and compass for navigating in the wilderness. Their afternoon was spent in preparing for the "ambush" "which was a completely hypothetical situation," explained Captain Stanford after a particularly perceptive cadet asked, "is this for real?"

The Rangers, besides completing their mission, were also treated to a close up view of a Marine Artillery Unit located close to their campsite. After the hard work and training, the Cadets, never being ones to waste energy, finished the night telling stories around a bonfire and munching on the only food available, "delicious Army C rations — regular culinary delights," or at least that's what Captain Stanford says.

One of the more entertaining

moments of the trip was when a young Ranger, eager for glory and brave to the end, killed a 6-foot black snake and proudly carried the trophy back to the camp, knife clamped in teeth, snake gripped in hand, proving to the world that a snake in the hand is better than two in the bush. Or is it a Ranger in the bush is better than two in the class?

New Cast Chosen

By G. HUGHES

Many students auditioned last Monday and Tuesday for tryouts in the play Arsenic and Old Lace but only a third could be cast. Dr. Patton Lockwood is the director for this play and says he is delighted with the students in the final cast.

Joseph O. Kesselring wrote a dozen plays but only one became a major success, Arsenic and Old Lace. His first show was done at the Hudson Theatre in New York in January 1941. At the conclusion of its third year on Broadway, the play had grossed a total of more than $4,000,000. Brooks Atkinson, a New York critic, said, "Joseph Kesselring's Arsenic and Old Lace turns murder into fantastic comedy."

The play is about two eccentric ladies who among their many charities rent rooms to elderly boarders. The rental agencies refer these people there, but once they arrive they are never seen again. One of the ladies' nephews, Mortimer, discovers a dead body in the window-seat which begins a sequence of hilarious and dangerous episodes that make up the play.

Some of the students cast in this play have been on stage before. They are: Frank Creasy as Mortimer Brewster; Sherry Forbes — Martha Brewster; Lisa Magill — Abby Brewster; Tracy Rice — Elaine Harper; Stuart Grant — Officer Brophy; Tony Russo — Officer Klein; David Wood — Mr. Witherspoon; Ralph Lemieux — Dr. Einstein, and Mark Winecoff — Officer O'Hara.

The new students are: David Brockie as Jonathan Brewster; Ray York — Teddy Brewster; Bob Mann — The Rev. Dr. Harper; Jim Pittman — Lieutenant Rooney, and William Husky — Mr. Gibbs.

Frank Creasy, who graduates this December has contributed a series of roles throughout his full term here with the Longwood Players and Alpha Psi Omega. His first acting role was in Cherry Orchard, directed by Dr. Lockwood, which started his interest with the drama department. Since then he has played leading and supporting roles in Hamlet, The Monkey's Paw, Good Woman of Setzuan, Carousel, The Mousetrap, Barefoot in the Park, The Rimmers of Eldritch (performed in an outdoor theatre in Ohio last summer), Love for Love and now his final role at Longwood, Arsenic and Old Lace, also directed by Dr. Lockwood.

average. Going back to student aid, Robb opposes the proposal currently under consideration by the U. S. Congress to establish a maximum family income eligibility requirement of 25,000 dollars for federally guaranteed student loans. Any ceiling should take into account family size and the number of family members currently in college. If this proposal were enacted it would put the guaranteed student loan out of reach of many Virginia middle income families.

TM — David said that Marshall Coleman embraces the Reagan plan. At first Chuck Robb did not support the plan (Reagan's) then after it was passed by the Democratic House of Representatives, Robb wrote a letter stating that he supported the measure. Now as election day approaches Robb seems to have changed his tune again. The Reagan plan in cutting some federal student aid is simply stated — someone who pays taxes in one part of the country, including middle income Virginians, should not have to pay for the education of someone in another part of the country regardless of how rich they are. Under the plan that is in effect now, there is federal and state money for those students who need the money to go to college. I might add that we're only talking about governmental sources. Anyone can get a loan from a bank to attend college at a reduced interest rate.

Members of the board of visitors are in almost every instance, highly trained administrators, members of academe and astute businessmen. The idea of putting a voting student representative on the board of visitors without first setting down even the minimal standards needed for choosing such a student, is an insult to the intelligence of those students whose vote Chuck Robb is trying to win and to all those who work to maintain the high standards of excellence in Virginia's colleges and universities. I believe that the results from the statewide college mock elections help to prove this point. As far as teachers' salaries are concerned Robb doesn't say where he's going to get the money for these salary increases.

DO — Of course there are going to be requirements of some sort for these representatives. Who is more affected by the decisions of the board of visitors than the students themselves? So why shouldn't one of their own be allowed to vote on the matters directly concerning them? It has been demonstrated in the past, especially here at Longwood that the governing boards of colleges can be unresponsive to student needs.

TM — First of all, to be on the Board of Visitors you must have a great deal of knowledge about finance and administration, to administer a college, a completed college education is essential. Members of the board of visitors must make long term decisions and with the years of experience, which college seniors or juniors simply do not have, these decisions would most probably be, at best, inept. I think students do have a lot of say in how a college is run, Longwood included, however, the final say must be made by those who truly have the knowledge and ability to make such decisions.

To the members of the ASA sorority, we find the poster advertising your slave sale offensive. It's not the actual auctioning of human bodies, it's the depiction of a black female dressed in 1800's slave attire complete with head bandana.

It's obvious that at this point in time the posters can not be removed from campus. However, it's our hope that your auction and poster does not continue to poison the minds of students. As a college sorority there is placed upon your shoulders a great social responsibility. Although there have been changes in our society racism is still an inherent part of the America mentality. Student Response

To whom it may concern.

I write this letter in reference to your mediocre piece of so called poetry entitled "Oktoberfest: A Wishful Elegy." I am amazed at how you managed to cut down everything about Oktoberfest in only ten short stanzas. Personally, I think that your elegy was in very poor taste and simply reflects your indifference to Longwood and its students. I resent your degradation of those people involved in Oktoberfest. The Green and Whites are by no means dead; far from it. And if you consider the 22 Oktoberfest klowns dormant and the skits boring, perhaps you would be better off spending your time someplace other than on Longwood's campus on Oktoberfest week end.

Your poem is an insult to those who willingly gave their time to promote color class and school spirit. It is also an insult to the rest of the Rotunda staff. I do not consider the printing of profanity at all professional, nor do I see what purpose it served other than to show your lack of a working vocabulary.

I hate to think what alumni and parents who see this publication think of Longwood and its journalism. It can only be seen as a poor reflection on our school and its students. Perhaps, if you spent a minute portion of the time on this newspaper that the students spent on Oktoberfest preparations, you would have a publication worth printing. If this is the best that the editors of the Rotunda can come up with, then I think Longwood could do without it!!

Editor's Turn

Dear Miss Mathewson:

To begin with, the writers of the poem published never assumed that it reached great literary standards. We wanted to write a quick satire on events which we consider juvenile at our college. We could have shortened or lengthened it, that is not the point. It certainly doesn't include everything I think is childish at Longwood, but it is a beginning.

I don't believe stating one's own independent opinion reflects poor taste. What better place for it then in the editorial section? I am giving you the right as a student to express your viewpoint just as I did. You seem to

You seem to think because I don't support many of the Longwood traditions, I am indifferent to Longwood and its students. If I didn't care about Longwood, I would be totally apathetic. I feel that the two leadership positions I hold on campus makes your statement of indifference look ridiculous. Our traditions are immature, outdated, and insult the intelligence of a student in the 80's. Excuse me, but I think college students should be above clowns and balloons. I believe I am close enough to what is happening on campus to make such remarks.

I would love to know what alumni and parents think of Longwood when they see this publication. Perhaps they understand journalism better than you. The fact of the matter is that I don't dislike an Oktoberfest celebration, but I think we could find more constructive activities to work so hard on. Your indifference to opposing opinions is the very attitude which alienates a great percentage of the student body every year because they feel there is no place for them to really vent constructive, independent, creativity among the click of the select few (commonly known as rah-rah's).

Campus Events Trip Provides Activity

By ILONA WILSON

Seven Delta Sigma Phi members and one counselor went camping Friday and Saturday a week ago at Goodwin Lake. With them were seven students from Prince Edward County. These students come from broken homes. Jay Poole, fraternity president, borrowed tents and sleeping bags from R.O.T.C. A football game was planned for Saturday afternoon. Jay, with a smile, said, "We hope to show them a good time. We plan to do this on an annual basis." Jay felt that the activity would be helpful and healthy for the boys and a worthwhile activity for the fraternity.

The Devil Made Me Do It

Dear Everybody,

I didn't want to do it! Jodi made me — she really did! I was just sitting there working diligently on my Nigel Tranter article, when Jodi — God's manifestation of evil on earth — Satan, Beelzebub and Mephistopheles all rolled into one, came looming over — casting her malicious shadows on my innocent features beckoning me towards her. "I want your help with this," she whispered in ominous tones, "we are about to destroy the spirit." I sucked in my breath, my shoulders shivered lightly. "Never!" I cried. "I shall never rebuke the holy name of Oktoberfest, the tradition, the colors! How can I, mere trifling servant of this greater good, ever begin to deny, much less defy, the awesome grace it portends!"

She moved not her stance and said quietly, "Write or your life is the replacement." My spine shivered to jelly and I began to create the blasphemous stanzas.

So now you know: I am ashamed, disheartened, yea, wretched that such sin should befall me. I am disreputable. I am loathesome. And forevermore I shall wear this scar of ignominy on my heart as Hester did her letter.

Signed,
The Unpardonable Sinner

Longwood is a special place with many special people but changes need to be made to unify the student body focusing on a more appropriate school spirit for the future.

A native of Indiana, she is both actress and lyric coloratura soprano. While earning her Master's Degree at Indiana University she studied voice privately and eventually began her career in light opera.

One of her most acclaimed billings, "Some of My Best Friends Like Opera" is designed to attract those not particularly interested in opera.

'Great Museums' for College and Community

By GAIL W. SHANNON

This semester the Longwood Art Department is offering something new to both the college and community in a series on the Great Museums taught by Dr. Elisabeth Flynn. The series began on Oct. 13 and will end on Dec. 8. Eight lectures were scheduled, one for each Tuesday, starting and ending with the previous dates, in Bedford Auditorium.

The first lecture covered the Greek museums and the second covered the museums of Italy. Future lectures will include France, Great Britain, hopefully Russia, the Netherlands, Germany, Spain, and the United States; including the Va. Museum. Dr. Flynn stated that she hopes to cover Russia, but because of the lack of good slides from that country, she may be unable to offer slides on those museums.

The slides shown by Dr. Flynn come from her own personal collection and that of the Art Department. She says that her main problem in preparing the lectures is that "there is so much material. I have to keep condensing down. It's a question of selection. It takes me two days just to prepare for one lecture."

When presenting each museum, Dr. Flynn works within a time chronology. In her words, "I have to have a sense of development. I want to present as broad a picture of the museum as possible."

The Great Museums Series is an "offering on the part of the Art Department to the community and students. It is an experiment in order to give the participants exposure to the art world." Dr. Flynn says that the Art Department is "exploring the possibilities of the Special Topics in the Visual Arts course" of which this series is the first.

The series is being offered as a one credit course but anyone interested in the college or community is invited to attend.

North Star Shines

By KURT COFFIELD

This wild foot-stomping band from Northern Virginia put on a show unequalled by any band seen at Longwood this year. The five-piece band included: Louis Hager, piano-vocals; David Besley, Bass-Vocals; Alan Johnson, Acoustic-Electric Guitar, Harmonica, Vocal; Paul Goldstein, Percussion-Vocals; Jay Jessup, Pedal Steel Guitar, Electric Guitar, Banjo.

North Star played a variety of country and country-rock music. They have recently put out their own album, "Burnin' 'em up" and played numerous cuts off it including, "Redneck Hippie," "Waitin'," "Play born to lose again," and "9 to 5." Besides playing their own music, North Star also did some renditions of popular songs including "Straight From the Heart," by Little Feat, and "Mamas Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up To Be Cowboys," by Waylon Jennings.

By the time the show was scheduled to end the crowd was up dancing and clapping. North Star responded by coming back out for an encore and proceeded playing an old favorite, "Satisfaction" by the Rolling Stones.

"The Circus Rides to Town!"

The world-famous Hanneford Circus will be performing in Lancer Hall on Tuesday, October 27th for two shows at four and eight p.m. Adult tickets are $3.50 and student tickets are $1.50. The seven generation circus is headed by Tommy Hanneford. He has appeared in almost every major circus in the U. S. before starting his own circus. Some of the acts featured are horse acts, clowns, magic tiger routines, trapeze and elephant walks.

Concert Choir Well Received

By SARAH BISE

One event of Oktoberfest that is widely anticipated is the annual "Pops" Concert given by the Longwood College Concert Choir. This year the choir began their program with a soloist, Glennis Jeter, singing the opening verse of "Send in the Clowns." As the rest of the choir, which was scattered throughout Jarman Auditorium, began walking toward the stage and singing along with her. After all of the members had reached their usual position among their peers they finished the opening number and went on to "Can't Smile Without You." This piece was followed by a medley consisting of "Just The Way You Are" and "After The Love Has Gone."

The next phase of the Concert began with Robin Moore singing "Summertime." The solo was followed by the song "Fame." During this number members of the Concert Choir performed a cute routine that they had made up to go along with this particular song. This number was followed by another solo "Out Here On My Own," sung by Amy McGonible.

The program went on with the Choir singing a special tribute to John Lennon. The songs consisted of the ones he performed during the days of Beatlemania, such as: Ob-La-Di, Ob-La, Da, "Penny Lane," "With A Little Help From My Friends," and ending with "When I'm Sixty Four." Following the Beatles'

Medley, Lisa Bowers sang the last solo in the program, "Sometimes." The next two songs were directed by the president of the Concert Choir, Marguerite Roller, and consisted of "Evergreen" and "Ready to Take A Chance Again." The last complete song of the program was "I Write The Songs" which went directly into the middle verses of "Send In The Clowns." Thus, the Concert Choir began to exit the stage in the same manner as which they first appeared. It was during the exit that the crowd really expressed their delight with the 1981 Oktoberfest "Pops" Concert, by giving the greatest gift of all to the Concert Choir, a standing ovation.

All photographers in the Oktoberfest section were taken by Photography Editor Alan Nuss.

Midway opens to Crowd

By GAIL W. SHANNON

A festive atmosphere prevailed despite the overcast skies and chilly 50 degree temperatures as the Oktoberfest Midway opened Saturday, Oct. 24 at 2:15 to a large crowd of Longwood professors, students, families and friends. Strains of music could be heard over the midway as students of the Longwood Concert Band offered selections to entertain the Oktoberfest participants.

The offerings from the booths were varied and plentiful. Most evident were the different types of food and drink. The peanuts, popcorn, and cotton candy were reminiscent of a circus atmosphere as were the clowns that mingled with the crowd. Other fare included bagels with cream cheese, hotdogs, cookies, cakes, pretzels, and candied apples. Items for sale other than food included such things as plants, photographs, portraits, Longwood tumblers, and mugs. There were also several booths which featured games and one, sponsored by the Pre-Professionals, which offered blood pressure readings. One of the truly different games was Wheelchair Bowling offered by the Therapeutic Recreational Organization. The participant sat in a wheelchair while trying to roll a ball to knock down the "pins".

Color Class Skits

By KIM DIGGS

Jarman Auditorium was alive Friday and Saturday nights with the happy sounds of Oktoberfest. On these two nights, the color classes presented their Oktoberfest skits, and the Oktoberfest Klowns entertained everyone with their many antics.

The program began with the traditional German dance and welcome, delightfully done by the ushers. This was followed by the introduction of each of the Meisters: Dennis Southers, Geistmeister, Michelle Lewis, Festmeister, and Mary Yates, Mittenmeister. Following a brief acrobatic show by the klowns, the Green-and-Whites presented their skit, entitled "All Through The Times." The theme of their skit was the spirit of Joan of Arc at Longwood, and how it came to be.

After a brief intermission, the Klowns came back to entertain the audience once more with their acrobatic antics. On Friday night, the Klowns succeeded in building the pyramid, which was cheered with thunderous applause and much screaming. The Red-and Whites were up next with their skit, "I Wanna Be A Clown," which brought the two color classes together to form the spirit of blue-and-white. The program ended with the members of both cast, the members of Geist, and the Ushers singing "Joan of Arc."

IAA Heads Color Rush

Similar to television's "Battle of the Superstars," Longwood College held their annual Oktoberfest Color Rush between the reds and the greens on Saturday in front of Stubbs Mall at 10 a.m. in spite of the brisk weather.

This event sponsored by IAA is the first of three events which permit the accumulation of points towards the Longwood Cup. President of IAA, David Mitchell, and Field Supervisor, Tim Lowery, conducted the various games.

The first event which was won by the greens, consisted of running and eating a cracker before whistling. The second race where the reds were victorious was the three-legged race. The third contest where the reds were triumphant again was the toothpick and the lifesaver pass. The fourth battle, the shoe race, permitted a tie since the greens defeated the reds. However, this tie did not last long. The reds were overwhelmingly successful in winning the last three events — the back to back race, the wheelbarrel race, and the famous mattress race where twenty people lay on their backs on the ground and pass the mattress down the line using their feet as their only source of movement before running and standing on top of the mattress.

At first the competition was stiff, but after the fifth contest the reds were victorious. The reds obtained a total of 25 points while the greens only managed to earn 10. Each event was well organized and well run. David Mitchell, President of IAA, said, "I think that everything went smoothly and I enjoyed doing this since this is the first time ever since I have been here at Longwood that I have actually seen color rush because in previous years I have been away at baseball games."

Oktoberfest Follies

By TAMMY PORTER

The Longwood College Catalina's proudly presented the Oktoberfest Follies at Lancer Hall pool in four live performances on Saturday, October 24, from 2:30 to 4 p.m.

The Catalinas, coached by Nancy Andrews, performed five separate routines including Abstraction choreographed by Judy Luck, Entertainment choreographed by Mo Rogge, Tranquillity choreographed by Denise Goodie, The Beginning choreographed by Chris Tullington, and Jammin' choreographed by Beth Licari. Each act displayed various water movements as the swimmers traveled from one end of the pool to the other both above and beneath the water's surface having little time to breathe in air.

The second routine, Entertainment, presented by Kim Guthrie, Beth Licari, Judy Luck, Laurie Stefaniga, Lynda Stratton, Bernie Tonner, and Frances Vavloukis, received a standing ovation from a crowded audience during their first performance. Also, a pleased applause was given at the conclusion of each show.

As a special treat for Oktoberfest, The Briarwood Anenomes of Richmond, Virginia, George-Anna Moris and Minda Morgan, coached by Pam Mayo and Mary Ellen Carter, exhibited an outstanding production to highlight the show.

Ozarks Conclude Oktoberfest

By MIKE LYNCH

On Sunday night, the Ozark Mountain Daredevils performed before a sparse, but highly enthusiastic crowd in Jarman Auditorium. The A.I.R. band started off the evening with about 50 minutes of music consisting mostly of hit songs and some of their own material.

The lack of a crowd was not so much a handicap to the performance side of the concert as it was to the monetary side. The Student Union clearly lost a lot of money. The ramifications of this, although presently unknown, will probably affect future SUN events. But the people that were there were great spectators. Ozarks members, Larry Lee stated that "the people who were there really wanted to come." He cited other concerts where there was a full house, but less crowd noise than this one because the people were not really enthusiastic. "They just came because it was something to do," stated Lee.

Crowd size aside, both bands played well. The A.I.R. band was little repetitious when they played their own music, but they played a variety of popular songs ranging from tunes like the Eagles "Take It Easy" to the Beatles' "Back in the USSR." Another impressive aspect was that sometimes they played five guitars at once, a rare sight on a Longwood stage.

The Ozarks concert was a pleasant surprise. It was not typical of their live album on which the pace never really got going. The music was various and well chosen and the acoustics were good. Especially appreciated by the audience were many songs off their first album such as "Chicken Train," "Standin on the Rock" and "Wanna Get to Heaven." It was interesting that many of the members switched instruments, including the drums and piano throughout the concert. The crowd brought the band back for two encores, ending the evening as nicely as possible.

The concert was professionally staged and very well run. The sound and lights were as good as you can expect from a 150,000 dollar stage. The band was pleased with the way the Longwood people worked and indeed the Student Union people were good. Possibly too good. They kept catching the Rotunda reporter sneaking around Jarman looking for the Ozarks.

Student Art Displayed

By ILONA WILSON

On Saturday, October 25, 1981, the Annual Student Art Exhibit took place in Bedford Art building and grounds. Demonstrations of pottery, paper making, jewelry making, and the spinning and carding of wool were events of the day. The third annual pot extravaganza, "Feats Of Clay," was also part of the department's wide efforts to support Oktoberfest. All the money received from the selling of the pots will go to purchase new equipment for the students use. All parents and students were welcome to the demonstrations. The Showcase Gallery in Lankford, was also open and the work of Carol Edmonson was showing and will be showing through November 1, 1981. Mr. Randall Edmonson, who was in charge of the day's activities, said, "There are very few times in the year that students have the opportunity to display skills and artistic results at one time. This is an overview of what's going on in the Art Department."

Energy Savings Plan for Longwood

1981-82

An intensive energy savings plan is underway for Longwood. Dr. Greenwood has assigned Dr. William Peele, Mr. Roy Hill and Mr. Melvin Moore with the task of reducing our energy usage 25 per cent. Dr. Peele feels that this goal is "achievable but ambitious and will require the cooperation of students, faculty and all other employees."

Energy waste, which has become a national concern has been and continues to be a priority on our campus. Signs have been posted in buildings on campus which show the estimated energy cost of a particular building during the current academic year. The energy saving team who will direct this program is interested in any creative and innovative ideas the students might have to help reduce electricity costs. Dr. Peele continued that "through cooperation everyone will benefit. The cost of attending college is rising because of the expense of maintaining a college is rising."

The program will use 1980-81 figures as a base of comparison for 1981-82. This first year should reveal the greatest amount of change at 25 per cent. The years following tend to be successful between 10 and 15 per cent reductions.

There will be a series of articles following the energy plan to keep everyone informed on any new programs which may be started to reduce energy costs at Longwood.

1. Weather stripping doors — caulking around windows, stone, brick.
2. College-wide check on size of light bulbs and where they are used inappropriately.
3. Monitoring and curtailing over-lighting.
4. Repairing leaks in steam tunnels.
5. Replacement and repairing of steam traps.
6. Experimenting with a fuel additive in agency owned cars.
7. Emphasizing preventive maintenance practices.
8. Placing plastic covers on windows containing air-conditioners; plywood covers in some cases.
9. Established an Energy Task Force that meets weekly.
10. Campus Police cutbacks in car patrol.

Energy Conservation Measures Planned for 1981-82

1. Add heat controls in Hiner Building, complete capital outlay project on heat controls in Grainger and West Ruffner.
 2. Add additional steam traps in Tabb and Cunninghams.
 3. Insulate attic of dining hall.
 4. Campaign to avoid waste of energy — campus-wide.
 5. Study telephone system for possible savings. (Consultative services)
 6. Zone campus and assign physical plant personnel to areas with daily monitoring and reporting functions. (Mr. Moore)
- Energy Conservation Measures We should Continue Heating Season
1. Set thermostats and other control devices to maintain a maximum temperature in heated spaces of 68 degrees F. Room temperatures must be checked with thermometers rather than relying on the scales of control devices. Reduce temperatures in heating spaces to at least 63 degrees F when area is not occupied or during sleeping hours in residential facilities.

2. Blinds, shades, drapes, or other window coverings should be kept closed at night in order to reduce the heat loss through windows. Advantage should be taken of the sun's heat by opening window coverings to admit sunlight when available.

3. It is imperative that windows and outside doors be kept closed when heating is required.

4. The use of supplemental heating units, such as plug-in electric heaters, should be avoided.

Cooling Season

1. Maintain the temperature of air conditioned spaces at not less than 78 degrees F.

2. When spaces are not in use, space temperatures shall not be maintained below 83 degrees F. by use of cooling cycle or ventilating equipment.

3. Use lights only when necessary as they add to cooling loads.

4. Do not operate air conditioning equipment in spaces that are unoccupied for several hours.

5. Keep outside doors and windows closed when cooling equipment is in use.

6. Blinds, shades, drapes, or other window coverings should be kept closed as much as possible to reduce heat gain through windows.

Year-Round Lighting and Power

1. Lighting for ornamental purposes will be discontinued or reduced to allow for needed security lighting only.

2. Corridor and lobby lighting, as well as in other areas, will be reduced. Lamps or tubes will be removed from fixtures wherever it is possible to do so without reducing the lighting levels below established standards.

3. Low energy consumption lamps will be substituted in both incandescent and fluorescent fixtures.

4. Persons must turn off lights when leaving their work areas.

5. Report outside lights burning in day to Physical Plant or Campus Police.

6. Be alert to savings in water usage: thousands of gallons of water are wasted each month by excessive showering.

7. Cut back on increasing number of electrical appliances; particularly in residence halls.

Rugby Wins Despite Absences

Neither bad knees, The Rolling Stones or the New River Valley Rugby Football Club could stop the Longwood College Rugby Football Club from winning their first game of the season, defeating New River, 10-4, Saturday afternoon.

Key players for both teams were absent. Longwood's Vaughn Oipner was out with a knee injury and Ron Gallough and Gary Cunningham chose to attend a Rolling Stones concert in Florida instead of participating in the game. New River also complained of absences of key players and barely had enough people to play the game.

The game itself started late because of the delayed arrival of New River. But when things finally got settled, the spectators were treated to a very physical game. New River had some very big players and made many hard tackles. For Longwood, the first half was a process of "feeling out." Some players had to be brought up from the B team to take the places of the absent players and in such precise formations as the scrum, where timing is vital, these players had to be adjusted to.

As a result of all this, the first half ended in only a 3-0 Longwood advantage, the points coming from a Marty Nann field goal. Both teams missed one field goal and both threatened to score tries at times. The game, as a whole, was slowed down by a large number of penalties, due to a very efficient referee and the inexperience of the opposing teams. The referee, Doug Bloomfield, plainly termed it "a sloppy game." He cited inexperience as most of the reason for this especially noting the fact that there was too much talking on the field. But he was pleased with the fact that no fights erupted and noted that the players conducted themselves well.

The second half was faster paced and more wide open probably due to the fact that what the players learned in the first half and discussed at halftime they applied in the second half. At one point, Marty Nann had the ball lateraled to him in good position with three men to evade. He utilized good speed to lose the first two defenders, breaking a tackle in the process and faked out the last man to score a try, putting Longwood further ahead 7-0. The play that resulted in the score started as a down-scrum at mid-field and was probably successful due to Geoff White getting the ball out of the scrum quickly and starting a succession of very quick passes out to Nann that caught most of the New River players out of position. The extra points attempt was no good due to a technicality.

Longwood was back on the offensive after the ensuing kickoff and soon after, Kurt Mueller kicked a long field goal on a drop-kick, increasing the margin to 10-0. They made a couple more advances, attempting but missing another field goal before New River finally got back on track and advanced the ball back down to Longwood's side of the field, finally getting a try on a very tough run through many Longwood defenders. The extra-points attempt missed and the score was now 10-4.

All that New River needed at this point was a try with the extra points to tie the game up. After Longwood got one good drive, New River nearly missed getting a try twice. They were deep again and had a great chance to score but time ran out, giving Longwood the victory, 10-4.

This weekend, the Rugby team's opponent is Hampden-Sydney. And maybe, if Gipner's knee heals quickly enough and the Stones don't play a concert, the Club will be at full strength for "The brawl."

Player of Week

Senior Mary King (Virginia Beach) scored three goals in Longwood's three games last week and for her efforts, the fourth year field hockey performer has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 16-23. The honor is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Leading scorer and captain of the Lady Lancer field hockey team, King scored two goals in a 5-0 win over Virginia Commonwealth Thursday. She was a major force in the victory, according to coach Bette Harris.

King has scored 12 goals this season and has 18 for her career. Only four players in Longwood field hockey history have scored more goals than the senior Business major.

Also a standout in lacrosse, King was the second leading scorer on last year's Division III state champion squad with 17 goals. She received honorable mention to the Virginia teams at the State Lacrosse Tournament last spring.

An outstanding prep athlete at Kempsville High School, King was captain of the field hockey and soccer teams.

White, Lancers Win Tournament

Longwood's top four golfers all shot in the 70's and senior Tim White (Richmond) took medalist honors with a 73 as the Lancer golfers won the second Longwood Men's Golf Tournament Friday afternoon at Longwood Golf Course by six strokes over second place Hampden-Sydney.

White compiled a four-over-par round despite a triple-bogie seven on the final hole as Longwood compiled a 305 team total. Hampden-Sydney was next at 311 followed by Mary Washington 332, Newport News Apprentice 334 and Ferrum 353. Tiger golfer Chip King was second behind White at 75 along with George Riefler of Newport News.

Longwood's Glen Bugg (Chase City) and Robert Lichvar (Prince George) both had 77's while Bryant Reese (South Hill) ended up with a 78 despite a slump on the back nine. Bugg and Lichvar tied for fourth place while Reese finished eighth. Lancer Stan Edwards (Bedford) finished in a two-way tie for 10th with an 80.

The tournament concluded the fall season for Longwood's men golfers and Coach Steve Nelson feels he could have another strong team in the spring. The Lancers were 12-2 in match play last season.

VOLLEYBALL TEAM FALLS TO BRIDGEWATER

Longwood's volleyball team fell to Bridgewater Friday night in an Eastern Division contest as the Eagles took a 6-15, 15-6, 15-3 triumph. Coach Joyce Phillips' team stands 7-6 overall and 1-2 in division play.

This week Longwood visits Virginia Tech Tuesday night for matches with the Hokies and Concord (WV) before returning home to host Sweet Briar Thursday night at 6:00.

Lady Lancer Netters Look to Future

By RONNIE BROWN

Longwood's women's tennis team has taken its lumps this season due to youth and inexperience, but first year coach Carol Bruce hopes this year's experience will pay off in the future. The Lady Lancers, currently 1-8, posted their only win over Ferrum 5-4 and were edged by Christopher Newport 5-4, Saturday.

Bruce has only eight participants during the fall season, but hopes that interest will increase for the spring season.

"I'm looking forward to spring when I hope we'll have more players," said Bruce. "I feel that there are some good tennis players here at Longwood who did not participate this fall."

Longwood has faced tough competition from AIAW Division III opponents. For example, Mary Washington lost only two players from last year's team which was ranked seventh in the nation.

Coach Bruce's team of three freshmen, four sophomores and a junior has been forced to play against more experienced opponents. In one case this season, an opposing senior was paired against a Longwood Freshman. The freshman was Barbara Cathey.

Cathey, who played on the tennis team four years in high school, has played the top three positions for Longwood this fall. She says that Coach Bruce expects a lot from her players.

"After every match the players write down what they learned, why they learned, why they won or lost, what they learned from the opponent and what they have to work on," said Cathey.

The players are expected to keep a record on their running each day in addition to the three hours of practice. During the season and off-season the players also are involved in a weight training program.

Cathey proclaims that these programs are beneficial to the athletes, but there is no substitute for on the court practice.

"I can do better if I practice. Everybody on the team will improve with practice," she said.

Coach Bruce feels that Cathey, Pam Cauley and Leslie Robertson have a lot of potential. Other team members are Jenny Fisher, Terri Justice, Donna Casper, Cindy Meredith and Holly Green.

The Lady Lancers may not have an impressive record this fall, but with the combination of a hard working coach and dedicated players, Longwood may have a team worth shouting about in the future.

Women Golfers 3rd

Longwood finished a disappointing third in the 12th VAAW State Women's Golf Tournament at Keswick Country Club near Charlottesville which was held Thursday, Friday and Saturday. James Madison (996) was the champ while William & Mary (1000) was second.

The Lady Lancers were in the thick of things with scores of 331 the first two rounds, but a final round 345 proved costly. Longwood finished with a 1007 total as Robin Andrews (Woodlawn) carded an 82-80-81-243. Andrews tied for second place but had to settle for third when she lost a playoff to Anne Bierman of William & Mary.

Other Longwood scores included: Sue Morgan (Massapequa Park, NY) 82-84-86-252 (8th), Emily Fletcher (Prince George) 81-88-87-256, Pam Othen (Ann Arbor, MI) 86-79-91-256, Sharon Gilmore (Patchogue, NY) 92-88-92-272, Cheryl Dufort (Waterford, NY) 91-89-93-273 and Donna Turner (Chapel Hill, NC) 98-96-96-290.

This week Longwood takes part in the Tar Heel Invitational Friday, Saturday and Sunday in Chapel Hill.

Whites get by Blues 108-106

Longwood's sophomore sensation Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey poured in 40 points and snared 14 rebounds to lead a furious second half comeback for the Blues, but balanced scoring from four White team players helped hold off the rally in a 108-106 White victory in the Lancers fourth Blue-White inter-squad scrimmage Saturday afternoon in Lancer Hall.

Kersey, who averaged 17 points and nine rebounds for Longwood a year ago, hit 17 of 22 shots from the floor and added eight steals for the contest. He helped the Blues rally from a 63-48 first half deficit. For the Blues, Joe Remar added 22 points and nine assists, John Weber 18 points and Mitch Walker 14 points.

"Laps for Lancers" Raises Nearly $6,000

Longwood's first major fund raising project for athletics, a walk-jog-a-thon billed as "Laps for the Lancers", has accumulated $5,838.35 in pledges as of Tuesday, October 20.

Sponsored by the Longwood College Lancer Club, "Laps for the Lancers" was held Saturday morning on a 4 of a mile layout adjacent to the Longwood campus. One hundred and four participants completed as many laps as possible in one hour with varying amounts of money pledged for each lap completed.

Longwood's interim Director of Athletics Carolyn Hodges was pleased with both the turnout of participants and the amount of money raised.

"I'm very pleased with the response," said Hodges. "It was a cooperative effort involving many different people. It was especially pleased with the prevailing atmosphere Saturday. The participants were encouraging each other and having a good time."

"We have had a lot of positive comments," she continued. "We're looking forward to next year when we hope to have even more participants."

Hodges thanked the Lancer Club, in particular, for its support. Nineteen Lancer Club members participated and raised in excess of $1,500. Eighty-five athletes also walked or jogged. Sponsors of the walkers-joggers included Longwood faculty and administrators, students, parents, friends and Farmville area residents.

Dr. Elisabeth Flynn of the Longwood Art Department was the top walker in the event with 12 laps completed. Top female runners were athletes Mary Milne and Cheryl Dufort, Longwood women's tennis coach Carol Bruce and Lancer Club Board member Kitty Hubbard, all of whom completed 22 laps.

The top male runner was David Jones, a Longwood faculty member in the Therapeutic Recreation Department, who completed 26 laps. Lancer wrestler Edward Betzel was a close second with 25 laps.

The individual leaders in terms of pledges acquired are Dr. Barbara Smith, Longwood women's golf coach, and field hockey player Emmie Butterworth. On a team basis the women golfers are running ahead in money pledged with field hockey-lacrosse in second place.

Prizes, donated by local merchants, were given to the top walkers-joggers. Donating prizes were: Perini Pizza, Baldwin's, Martin The Jeweler, Pairets and Smitty Brothers Electric Co.

Monies raised from the walk-jog-a-thon, with the exception of less than one per cent of the total which was restricted by sport, will be used for athletic scholarships.

Team in

State Tourney

Longwood's field hockey team, 6-9-1 overall, will play in the VAAW Division I field hockey tournament Friday at James Madison after a Tuesday trip to Blacksburg to take on Virginia Tech.

Longwood, which blanked VCU 5-0 Thursday before falling to Duke 2-1 on penalty flicks Saturday, will play the winner of Tuesday's game between Virginia and William & Mary at 12:00 Friday in first round action. James Madison will play the loser of Tuesday's battle in the first game at 10:00.

"I'm pleased with the way we've been playing recently," said Harris. "We're playing with a new system and it has worked well. We have tightened up our defense and are also getting more scoring opportunities."

Harris praised senior captain Mary King (Virginia Beach), freshmen Emmie Butterworth (Richmond) and Robyn Grindle (Annandale) and junior Cherie Stevens (Alexandria) for their contributions on offense. King is Longwood's top scorer with 12 goals while Grindle has four and Stevens 2. Junior Betty Stanley (Alexandria), who has 3 goals, is playing a new position, according to Harris. Junior Betty Jo Casey (Annandale) also has two goals.

On defense junior Janet Long (Alexandria) has been a very dependable performer.

Booters Continue Unbeaten String; Beat Macon 3-1, Tie Va. Wesleyan

Longwood's soccer team beat regional power Randolph-Macon 3-1 and gained a 2-2 tie with Virginia Wesleyan in overtime last week to retain an unbeaten string that now measures seven games. The Lancers, 9-3-3, have a shot at making the NCAA Division II Playoffs for the first time in their five-year soccer history.

Longwood has not lost a soccer game since September 30 when Lynchburg won a 3-2 decision. The Lancers have five wins and two ties since that defeat while outscoring the opposition 27-6. With three home games remaining on the schedule, Averett (Oct. 26), Cabrini (Oct. 30) and arch-rival Hampden-Sydney (Nov. 3), the Lancers are in contention for a playoff spot.

Junior All-America candidate Gus Leal scored three goals last week to push his season total to 17 and break the school record for goals in a season (16) which he set a year ago. Leal now has 35 career goals. In addition, he leads the team in assists with seven.

first win ever over Division II foe Randolph-Macon. Coach Rich Pospinko called the Tuesday victory Longwood's biggest ever.

Friday night heroics by back Steve McGurl enabled Longwood to gain an overtime tie with tough Virginia Wesleyan. McGurl scored with 34 seconds left in the second overtime to tie the score 2-2. Leal, who scored in the second half on an assist from Tim Brennan to send the game into overtime, assisted on McGurl's score.

Sorrentino Awarded Dos Passos Prize

Longwood College has announced the award of the 1981 John Dos Passos Prize for Literature to poet and novelist Gilbert Sorrentino.

The Dos Passos Prize, established last year at Longwood, includes a medal and a cash award of $1000. It commemorates one of the greatest of 20th century American authors by honoring other writers in his name. The winner is chosen by an independent jury appointed by the college each year.

The prize marks the most recent recognition of the varied work of the Brooklyn-born Sorrentino, who has also been recipient of a Guggenheim Fellowship for fiction, and who was nominated for the PEN-Faulkner Award for his 1980 novel Aberration of Starlight.

Sorrentino's Selected Poems 1958-1980 were published this year, and a new novel, Crystal Vision, is due in November.

Sorrentino, who has been called the "Pound of his era," earned the accolade with a wide range of literary activity over the past 25 years: as poet, novelist, critic, editor, and mentor of younger writers.

A classics student at Brooklyn College who served two years as a medic in the Army, Sorrentino was founder or editor of two influential literary magazines: Neon in the 1950's and Kulcher in the following decade. He also worked during the 60's as an editor at Grove Press, whose international list introduced American readers to talents as diverse as Jack Kerouac, Samuel Beckett, and Jean Genet.

A poet in the imagist tradition of William Carlos Williams and Ezra Pound, Sorrentino is the author of six collections of poetry. His poems were represented in what proved to be the most important anthology of its period, The New American Poetry 1945-1960, and his fiction, poetry, and criticism has appeared in such magazines as Tri-Quarterly, Partisan Review, and The Atlantic Monthly.

He has also published six novels, of which the best-known is perhaps the massive Mulligan Stew, a Joycean tour de force that brought him a major reputation as a novelist, according to poet Robert Creeley, who assessed Sorrentino's achievement on August 2 in The Washington Post:

"(His work) reads as a remarkable survival of that appetite (the modern) masters had for language, for what one could make, literally, out of words. Sorrentino is the only writer of the present company whose authority extends equally to the novel (Mulligan Stew brought him international acclaim in 1978) and whose work as a critic . . . was often a daily affair as well as a lifelong commitment."

Creeley's judgment is affirmed in the pages of a new literary magazine, The Review of Contemporary Fiction, whose entire first issue is given over to a study of Sorrentino's work.

Other nominees for the Dos Passos Prize were novelists John Barth and Walker Percy. The 1981 prize jury included novelist Peter Rand, a former fiction editor of Antaeus who teaches in the writing program at Columbia University; novelist, poet and playwright Michael Stephens, who directs writing programs at Fordham University; and novelist and journalist William Crawford Woods, director of journalism and creative writing at Longwood, and administrator of the prize.

The John Dos Passos Prize for Literature will be presented to Gilbert Sorrentino in ceremonies at Longwood College on November 18.

Wells Resigns:

"Fresh Viewpoints" Needed

By BILL BRENT

"I sincerely believe that it is time for the College to bring a fresh viewpoint to academic administration," said Carolyn Wells in her letter of resignation October 13. Wells is vacating her position as Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of the College. She has not disclosed the date her resignation takes effect. She says she will remain at LC but did not say in what capacity.

Wells has worked at Longwood for more than 13 years. She started out as a biology teacher for nine years. Then in 1969 she came to the administration as the Assistant Dean of the College (that position is currently held by Dr. James Gussett). She became Dean of the College in 1975. When asked why she was leaving she replied, "In virtually every administrative office, you need to have fresh blood come in at periodic intervals." She believes it's time to change with the new administration and its ideas.

The college's overall goal is unchanged, although we have a new president; the goal to have the highest quality education possible remains paramount. These new ideas involve an increased size of the adult education student with enrollments in night and week end classes plus summer conferences. The undergraduate population will not grow much and no plans are being made for a new dormitory. Special Education classes and Computer Sciences are two academic programs that are being evaluated for further development. The biggest difference in the administration from Wells' point of view is the renewed interest in private fundraising.

The Performing Arts Series will present The Atlanta Ballet on Sunday, November 8, at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Admission is free.

F'ville Food Prices Soar

Food prices in Farmville area stores increased noticeably over the past month. The market basket survey of local stores in October showed an increase of 3.5 per cent over September prices.

Even more significant was a yearly increase of 5.67 per cent since October of 1980.

Food prices locally are still higher than in the three metropolitan areas of the state where market basket surveys are conducted. The September to October increase was also higher locally than in these three areas, and the yearly increase was almost four per cent higher in Farmville than in Richmond.

Accounting for the overall increase locally last month were higher prices for a total of 22 food items. Fourteen items declined in price, while four items were priced the same as last month.

Increasing in price were pork products, hot dogs, chickens, dairy products, orange juice, fruits, vegetables, coffee, shortening, and peanut butter. Lower prices were found for crackers, beef products, frozen haddock, milk, eggs, cola drinks, and sugar. Showing no price change since September were corn flakes, bread, peaches, and grape jelly.

The total of the highest prices found for all market basket items was $71.97. The total of the lowest prices found for these same items was $54.68, a difference of $17.29.

The local market basket study is a project of the Economic Seminar class at Longwood College, under the direction of Dr. Anthony B. Cristo. The project is financially supported by the Longwood College Foundation.

The Shock of the New Continues

By SARAH BISE

"The series is extremely well done," replied a professor returning from seeing one of the films within the "Shock of the New" film special that has been showing at Longwood over a month now. The last four shows will begin on November 2, 1981, and will continue throughout the month. All programs will be held at Bedford Auditorium and will begin at 7:30 p.m. The first film is "Trouble in Utopia" and deals with the rise of the Bauhaus and the functionalist vision. Architects such as Mies Van der Rohe, Le Corbusier and Walter Gropius will expand upon the merits of the glass-walled international style. Following this film, surrealism is seen as the last revolutionary art movement of the twentieth century and will contain the work of Rousseau, Ernst, Miro, Dali Maglittie, Cornell, and Dubuffet. This program is entitled "The Threshold of Liberty." On November 16, "The Sublime and Anxious Eye" will be presented, dealing with post World War II and the decline of figurative expressionism. The artist of the New York School and the Washington Color School struggled to maintain a mythic-religious imagery against the increased secularization in the twentieth century. After this program, "Culture As Nature" will begin. This film will deal with the different forms of mass media and how pop art came about. The work of artists such as Davis, Johns, and Rauchenburg will contribute to a large part of this film. The last program on November 30 is called "The End of Modernity." This film will discuss how Modernism has turned the art world upside down. The program is intended to raise the question in the viewer's mind as to whether or not we are indeed at the end of a tremendous cycle and anxiously awaiting the coming of the new.

"Shock of the New" was produced by BBC and Time-Life Television, it is narrated by Robert Hughes, art critic for Time magazine and a senior writer. "This series shows how the major works of the twentieth century have enlarged the scope of our experience, taught us to live more fully and dissolve our prejudices about what a work of art can really mean."

Swann Discusses Discipline

By ILONA WILSON

"For discipline to be an educational process, and since we are not out 'to get' them, students need to be educated as to what happens in the disciplinary process," said Miss Terri Swann in an interview Monday, October 26. She wanted a chance to express exactly what the process is in dealing with misconduct.

She went on to explain in general terms the steps involved in handling misconduct. The first incident of misconduct usually results in a letter of warning. The second incident usually causes a loss of privileges. A third incident results in a hearing by the area judicial board. Penalties range from probation to possibilities of suspension. A fourth incident of misconduct most likely will result in suspension for a defined period of time.

For more serious misconducts or for repeated serious violations students appear before the college disciplinary committee instead of their area judicial board.

Miss Swann said that there has been, this year: one suspension for physical abuse, one suspension for verbal-physical abuse and visitation violations, and one suspension for property damage and verbal abuse. There are 8 people on probation for different amounts of time depending on their misconducts. One hundred-thirty four warnings for first offense have been given. There are 18 second offenders, with results being loss of privileges. Third offenders go to board and often receive terms of probation. Two have been to honor board; 7 to area boards; 4 to the college disc. board.

"Students need to be aware of the seriousness of thoughtless actions that result in misconduct. Incidents are written. Then they are investigated by a resident staff member. At that time, the person investigated should give all information pertinent to the situation because (1) it becomes a part of their standard life (2) That information will be used in a disciplinary packet should a student have to appear before a board.

Miss Swann stressed the importance of giving correct information in the investigation report if it is not correctly stated in the incident report. Correct false facts in the investigation report before they get to the board.

"You haven't asked me 'the question,'" she smiled.

Which one is that? I inquired.

"What is the most often reported incident? — Visitation! And what are we doing about it? (1) We are educating people about rules and rule enforcement. (2) We are making plans to have resident life options when you sign up for housing in the spring so that those people who want to have extended visitation can do so and those who desire limited visitation can have it also.

It is recommended that students read page 62 in the handbook so that they will be aware of the range of penalties for various misconduct.

In closing, Miss Swann feels that the educational environment is better than it ever has been. "There seems to be more regard for the rights of other people. Ideally, we will reach a point where we won't have any incident reports. People will be able to study in the residence halls!"

Choral Activities

By CINDY CORELL

If you thought you noticed some unfamiliar young faces around campus last week, you weren't imagining it. Approximately 270 high school choral students gathered in Longwood's Jarman Auditorium last Thursday night to perform a piece of music they had been practicing in their individual high schools for the past several weeks. The event was the Longwood College Fall Choral Festival and the music was Franz Schubert's Mass in G. Although the audience was not large, they were very eager and seemed to enjoy the performance. They greeted the various high school choral directors when they were introduced in the beginning of the program and showed their praise for the performance with the same loud applause.

The young students were joined by Longwood's Camarata Singers and soloists: Pat Lust, soprano, Thomas Williams, baritone, both Longwood faculty members, and Scott Noonan, tenor and a Longwood student. A string orchestra consisting of first and second violins, violas, and violoncellos accompanied the choir. Musicians of various backgrounds including several students and faculty members of Virginia Commonwealth University, professional musicians from South Boston, Virginia and from the Richmond area, a lawyer from Farmville, a former adjunct faculty member of Longwood and a presently adjunct Longwood faculty member, made up the orchestra. Dr. Bruce Montgomery, a Longwood music professor was the manager of the festival. Other faculty members who were involved were Dr. Paul Hesselink, organist, and Dr. Louard Egbert who conducted the Mass.

Art Gallery Exhibition Highlights Collectors

by Ilona Wilson

Imagine gazing through a window and finding a picture of the ocean spread before you. The water appears almost indigo blue far out where its edge hugs the sky. Closer, it becomes clear, electric, emerald green as it breaks upon the shore in a bubbly, creamy foam. The strong rocks, like sleeping giants, arise from the surf which pounds incessantly against those rocks, trying to awaken, but to no avail. Their highest tops are frosted with olive green moss and look soft and plush.

Imagine seeing a sky over with a ripple of fluffy cotton clouds, suspended there looking as if they may slip into the ocean at any moment.

One doesn't have to live by the ocean to experience this view. It can be found in the oil on canvas painting "Seascape" by Alfred T. Bricher. This is quite a dramatic piece of work and is the first one you will see as you enter the Bedford Gallery to view this year's major exhibit entitled "A View of American Paintings from Virginia Collectors." It is sponsored by the Longwood Fine Arts Center and the Department of Art. Last year's show was curated by Pam Mayo, a 1981 Longwood graduate. It was part of her honors project and included the work of Lue Osborn and Cordray Simmons. Other past features include the work of nineteenth century itinerant painter Susan Waters, nineteenth century portrait painter Thomas Sully.

In 1971, the first gift of works by Thomas Sully was given by Gene Sully. West with the understanding that the gallery would be named in memory of Thomas Sully. In 1978 the gallery project became the Longwood Fine Arts Center, which included a gallery moved for Thomas Sully. The collection has grown to include other works of other artists. The Longwood Fine Arts Board of Trustees was also established to give guidance to the ultimate construction and establishment of the Longwood Fine Arts Center.

This year's selection of paintings is on loan from four private collectors including Mr. and Mrs. William E. Wiltshire, III, and Eugene B. Sydnor, Jr. of Richmond and Dr. and Mrs. John L. Moran of Portsmouth, and a private collector.

The paintings run from the early nineteenth century to about the middle twentieth century. The show includes 37 works of 33 artists. The primary subject matter is: landscapes, seascapes and marine paintings. There are two still life and one genre. A genre is a painting that deals with the events of everyday life. This genre is entitled "A Man and His Dog." There is a painting by N. C. Wyeth, "Headlong He Leaped," which was used as an illustration

Nuclear Physicists Visit Longwood

Two nuclear physicists from Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico will speak at Longwood College on Tuesday, November 10.

Dr. Raymond E. Hunter and Dr. Delmar W. Bergen will discuss "Nuclear Weapons Development: Current Topics of Interest from the Scientific Perspective" at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening in the Virginia Room (adjoining the Blackwell Dining Hall at the rear of Longwood's Rotunda).

The lecture, sponsored by the Longwood - Hampden-Sydney Club of Sigma Xi, is open to the public free of charge.

The two scientists will hold a question-and-answer forum for Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students and other interested persons at 10 a.m. on Wednesday, November 11, in Jeffers Auditorium.

At 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, Drs. Hunter and Bergen will speak on "Nuclear Explosives - Testing and Safety" in the Parents and Friends Lounge at Hampden-Sydney College.

From Farmville, the two physicists will go to Washington, D. C. for meetings with government officials.

Dr. Hunter is assistant division leader for the Applied Theoretical Physics Division at Los Alamos. He has produced and tested original designs for strategic and tactical nuclear weapons, including the W76 warhead for the C-4 missile on the Trident submarine.

Dr. Bergen is associate division leader of the Applied Physics Division at Los Alamos. From 1973-1979, he was director of the weapons program there, and for 18 months in 1979-80 he served as special scientific advisor to the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense (Atomic Energy).

The visit of the physicists to Farmville was arranged through the efforts of Dr. Ray Fawcett, director of Longwood's physics and pre-engineering programs, who is a visiting staff member at Los Alamos.

Your Turn Sorority Responds

We would like to take this time to apologize to any individuals who may have taken offense at the posters advertising our slave sale. We would like you to understand, however, that these posters were not meant to be offensive in any way. These posters were distributed by our pledge class without the knowledge of the entire sorority and upon receipt of the first complaint all posters, to the best of our knowledge, were taken down. We felt that we acted quickly enough to prevent the poisoning of too many minds. Our pledges simply meant that they were willing to make themselves slaves for a day. We are certainly sorry for any misunderstanding.

Stealing In Curry

To Whom It May Concern:

As residents in Curry, we find it very discouraging to think that we live among thieves. Now we're not calling everyone in Curry a thief, but we are tired of people who have no consideration for other people's property.

About two weeks ago, a simple cardboard pumpkin (.39) was removed from the wall on 8th Floor Curry by some unidentified person(s). Well, we could deal with the fact that someone else would want to "borrow" such an object to decorate for Halloween, but now things have gone too far. Last Thursday night, someone walked off with a real pumpkin ($3.39) we had decorating our hall. Come on people, where is your respect for other people's property? Obviously, someone is lacking their respect somewhere!

If Dean Swann wants us to build a sense of community in the residence halls then we are going to have to learn to trust other people. How can we do this when someone purposely takes what is not theirs? Well, to the people who took the cardboard pumpkin and the real pumpkin, it's too bad you had to ruin our Halloween spirits just so you could brighten your own. We hope you enjoyed them! Oh, and one more thing, what ever happened to the Honor Code?

Ignorance Killed Diana Taylor?

By KATHI AGNEW

Grandmas' Sewing Circle used to be the place where all the ladies would meet to discuss the various soap operas. They would sit, gossip, and become very involved in certain afternoon favorites. If any of the women would miss one of the episodes, for some odd reason, this was the place to find out exactly what occurred.

Today, a fraternity party is the typical setting in which to find a group of college students discussing General Hospital. It has become a very common sight to see two fraternity brothers arguing over the topic "Who killed Diana?" Other students may be discussing whether Luke and Laura should get married, if Rick and Leslie should get back together, or if Heather killed Diana. Students really get involved in the lives of each of these characters. If a student should miss the show because of class or some other trivial reason there is always someone nearby who can inform him of what occurred.

Watching soap operas could have benefits, one being that it is a time to get together with friends. It also serves as a way to relax after classes. Discussing the different episodes is a great topic for conversation. Nevertheless, it is also a total waste of time.

Students have enough problems without getting involved with the fictitious lives of others. Would it not be more important to pass a history test than worry whether Monica will get her divorce from Allen? Many students feel they can spare an hour of studying in order to watch the "tube". Some even schedule their classes around the various soap operas. There is absolutely nothing educational about watching these programs.

There are many other shows on television that are more beneficial to students other than soap operas. Many students are more up to date on General Hospital than they are on current world events. It would be interesting to pass a survey around with two questions on it:

1. Why should the United States supply arms to Saudia Arabia?
2. Who do you think killed Diana Taylor and why?

Which of these two questions can you answer?

---Movie Review---

By JOE JOHNSON

Ned Rascine — struggling defense attorney; chain smoker; slick back, sunglasses wearing, playboy; is about to sweat on Morrand Beach. He does so with a well turned back and Cagney flair for machoism. And its with that turned back that the audience is introduced to "Body Heat," a Fred T. Gallo production.

The key to this movie is suspense, not the will he catch the crook or will they get back together suspense, just a constant enigmatic wonderment at what in the world writer Lawrence Kasdan's is doing exactly. At first glance one thinks we are in for another "Endless Love" modern romance, but the characters are too gruff, too cynical. Ned Rascine (William Hurt) is the type who will sleep with any old goddess as long as she has a decent body.

He meets one such pulchritudinous peach named Nancy Walker (Kathleen Turner) who plays hard to get and captures his amorous affections with a needed light and abrupt departure, leaving him carrying a flame for her... (sorry, just couldn't resist).

It's kind of a shame really, I was all ready to cut down this movie for trying to revive male machoism (Ned baby throws a chair through Nancy's window and madly grasps her in his arms) and in general disgusting cliches — "I love a strong man"... "Oh, Ned just hold me"... "What type of man do you like?" etc... But Kasdan has a trick or two up his sleeve. And the melodrama, although a little obnoxious, is well worth waiting through.

Apparently, Kasdan had read a little Edgar Allan Poe in his youth, or maybe watched a good number of Hitchcock flicks. His intrigue with almost gothic elements — a fog laden night, a hidden body, the tension of guilt (seen in sweat stained shirts and strained gazes) is obvious.

But even there he does not stop — an unrelenting cop who is dedicated to justice, even for a friend; a happy-go-lucky attorney, whose warnings are not heeded are mixed with the sensuous side of beach night life to keep the audience entranced as the pied piper dances his way through the labyrinths of this story.

Kasdan has done a fine job with setting and camera angles utilizing them to bring about the constant mood of simmering heat and growing psychological pressure. He also does something which is almost miraculous for an R movie — namely not blurring the love scenes, which serves to underline the perfidy of at least one partner.

There is a subtle touch of foreshadowing that isn't too blatant, yet articulate enough for the watchful viewer. In fact the whole movie is an example of tightrope walking with an audience. A certain suspension of disbelief is flung over the rapid scene pace and almost palatable tension, which Kasdan employs to tickle with a feather, rather than club with a bat — something rather novel in cinemaville these days.

There are some minor weak spots in the plot and one questions Kathleen Turner's acting ability at times, but for it, genre "Body Heat" is like laying back with a new Agatha Christie novel — figure that one out.

Shopping List

Yes, even as I write, stockings are being hung, pines are felled and Santa Claus suits are being resururrected from the mothballs. It is Christmas time. The jingle of the cash registers, the warmth of the fake fire in the imitation furnace burning and equally facsimiled Yule log and all the children anticipate the windfall of Dad's raise. Ah, nothing like it...the high point of sacred experience and the ultimate in capatistilic enterprises excesses.

In this bloated market place, there is still a gift that is as eminently obtainable as it is personal — a record album. No, maybe not the latest chart buster, but an album that is personal...that says something.

You know that person that is "hard to shop for", chances are he could use a record album or two for his collection. But you say you don't know who they like? Well frustrated reader, Rusty Roxx will come to your rescue.

I have compiled a list of albums which will please the most discriminating listeners (and many are sale priced). The worst response you could expect if you give any of these albums is a polite "thank you, but I have it", (but he probably needs it, since his copy has been played to death).

Dining Out

Dining away from the Longwood Slop Trough can provide many memorable experiences for the college student. Believe it or not there are even places in Farmville that are less palatable than Mr. Slaters Cuisine Palace.

The restaurants in the Farmville area can be broken down into three categories: family restaurants; pizza places; and the fast food establishments. A five star system is used in rating these places; with five stars being the best place to dine in Farmville and all the rest judged relative to that establishment.

Cedar Brook Restaurant is by far one of the better family restaurants — but not the best. It too is inconsistent in servings and service +++++

The Country Kitchen is by far a student and local favorite for lunches. Hot lunches-cooked like Mom made them-fast service, and very inexpensive prices make this a favorable "house of eats." +++++

Among the most inconsistent and disfavorable is Jacks Nest. Over cooked steaks and a poor house wine. Glad it is all the way up on highway 15. +++++

The Red Lyon has a great salad bar and for a night time bar has great meals too. One of the most unused student dining possibilities. Good Pizza too. +++++

The Royal Garden Restaurant sticks out like Union Blue in southern Virginia. Not to be rated solely on its oriental cuisine relative to say the Washington area. But for Farmville, it is the best all-round food and service for a pleasurable evening. +++++

The Steer can be noted for large, inexpensive portions. The smallest but freshest salad bar in Farmville. Try the hamburger steak with gravy and onions. +++++

Walkers Diner, or Walker's trailer has inexpensive lunches. A cross between "Country Kitchen" and a good "Arbys". +++++

PIZZA PLACES

Perini's Pizza is a step away for the students in French dormitory. Good greasy pizza and an excellent half time shoot-out at basketball games +++++

Pinos Pizza & Subs may not have the best pizza in town, but it is not the worst. The best subs in town. Good prices +++++

Pizza Hut has the best Pizza but the highest prices. Offers a student discount card for pizzas. Inconsistent salad bar. +++++

FAST FOOD

Hardees is by far the best quick burger joint in the area. Poor location to Longwood. Quick service. Free catsup and mustard without a hassle. +++++

McDonalds in Farmville is a disgrace to Ronald. Burned burgers after a fifteen or thirty minute wait. Rude employees at times. +

Jacks Big Beef. Good local establishment. Decent barbeque and excellent 39 cent hamburgers when garnished in lettuce, tomato, onion and mayonnaise. +++++

Last and least is the Blackwell Dining Hall. Why did they get the contract back? At least they have a better salad bar to supplement the starches. Even though you have a digestable hamburger on Tuesdays, I don't think Wimpy would beg for one. Oops, sorry I'm out of stars.

Rugby Dominates Hampden-Sydney 30-0

"The Springboks are next," Geoff White would always yell while coming back from another score on the Hampden-Sydney R.F.C. And it looked like a Springboks game the way the Longwood College Rugby Football Club trounced Hampden-Sydney 30-0.

One of the biggest crowds to watch a Longwood sports event this year was on hand at First Avenue Field Saturday to witness Hampden-Sydney's demoralization. Longwood's players were worked up into a frenzy at game time and surely took a lot of frustration out on their beleaguered opponents. "We were psyched to the max," Gary Cunningham said after the game.

The game started off on a good note as Longwood's Steve Tilley scored a try, with the help of many Longwood players pushing him in, on the first drive. Chris Conners converted the extra points making the score 6-0. The next time down, Dean Driskill took it on to run down the left side of the field. Conners missed the extra points, mainly due to a poor location for the kick.

It became clear, after the first two tries that Hampden-Sydney was in for a long afternoon.

White Selected Player of the Week

Senior Tim White (Richmond), who won the Longwood Fall Men's Golf Tournament with a four-over-par 73 October 23, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 23-30. The selection is made by the Longwood Sports Information Office each week.

Name a Division III All-American his sophomore season, White led Longwood to victory in its one-day tournament. With the Manchester High School graduate leading the way, Longwood defeated four opponents, including Hampden-Sydney, with a 305 total. The tourney finished up Longwood's fall season.

Recognized as one of the top collegiate golfers in Virginia during his career at Longwood, White was recently chosen as a Longwood scored again before the half was over. This time it was Vaughn Gipner, running over Hampden-Sydney defenders instead of around them. Conners converted successfully and at halftime the score was 16-0.

In the second half, Gipner started up where he left off, scoring another try in brutally identical fashion to his first. Many of his other runs helped the team advance and some players started accusing him of hogging that ball, just so he could crunch a few more defenders. The conversion was no good and the score was now 20-0.

It was a total Longwood team effort that made this possible. They constantly pressured Hampden-Sydney runners into mistakes and very effectively covered kicks. According to scrum-half, Geoff White, "We were totally different from last week." (a 10-4 performance).

Chris Conners got the next try, dragging defenders in with him, but missed the conversion, barely. Not long after that, a good play resulted in Dean Driskill scoring his second try of the afternoon, tying Gipner and Conners for high point honors at eight. John Todd converted the extra point, making the final score 30-0.

White, who led Longwood to a record 12-2 season last year, finished 14th in the nation in the NCAA Division III Golf Championship in the spring of 1980 to earn All-America honors and also won the long drive competition. He had a 75.2 stroke average that spring.

Coach Steve Nelson lauded his performance in the Longwood tourney.

"Tim overcame a triple bogey seven on the 18th hole to shoot a 73 and earn medalist honors," said Nelson. "What makes his performance even better is that it was accomplished in bad weather. It was rainy and cold that day."

Petefish Sparks Volleyball Victory

Senior co-captain Julie Petefish led the way as Longwood's volleyball team downed Sweet Briar Thursday night winning three straight games 15-7, 15-10, 15-13. The triumph evened the Lady Lancer record at 8-8.

Coach Joyce Phillips team had dropped a pair of matches to tough opposition Tuesday. Playing at Virginia Tech, the Lady Lancer fell to Tech 15-6, 15-9 and to Concord (WV) 15-3, 20-18.

Petefish had an exceptional week with the following statistics: spikes 25-27 (92.5 per cent), blocks 10-11 (91 per cent), bumps 76-80 (95 per cent), serves 30-33 (90 per cent) and dinks 15-17 (88.2 per cent).

"Julie, a hitter, is an outstanding player," said Phillips. "She has been consistent all season and gives her all to the team at both practices and games. She also tried to help her teammates in any way she can."

Longwood has two more matches before the VAAW Div. III State Tournament Nov. 13-14 at Radford. Tuesday night the Lady Lancers host Mary Washington for a key Eastern Division contest. The match which will be played in Lancer Hall, begins at 6:30. Thursday night the Spikers visit Lynchburg in the regular season finale.

Sticklers Third In State

Longwood's up-and-down field hockey team ended its season on a positive note Saturday morning with a 1-0 triumph over nationally ranked William & Mary in the consolation game of the VAAW State Division I Tournament at James Madison.

Mary King scored for Longwood on an assist from Betty Stanley to give Longwood the win. The triumph, Longwood's second over William & Mary in the last seven seasons, avenged a 5-1 setback in the regular season.

Longwood, which finished with a 7-11-1 mark overall, fell to Virginia 3-0 in the first round of the state tournament Friday. The Cavaliers went on to beat James Madison and win the Division I state title.

King's goal gives her a season total of 13 and a career mark of 19, fourth best in Longwood history.

Longwood had two players selected to the VAAW All-State team. Juniors Janet Long and Mindy Allman were chosen among the select group. Long and Allman have been defensive standouts for the Lady Lancers. Both are third year players for Coach Bette Harris.

Longwood Baseball Has Successful Fall Season

Longwood closed out this year's fall baseball season splitting a double header with VMI 0-1, 7-1 on Saturday October 24. The split gives the Lancers a 10-7 record for the fall and momentum for the spring season. Bolding's squad played five out of six Division I opponents and beat each team at least once.

The fall season is not official, but Longwood Baseball Coach Buddy Bolding feels that it is important to stay competitive in the state of Virginia.

"In order to be competitive in Virginia baseball it (the fall season) is essential," said Coach Bolding. "It is like spring training, but more intense, the teams play to win. It sets the stage for teams you played and builds momentum for the upcoming spring season."

Bolding's main distinction between the fall and spring season is that the fall is a time for instruction and refinement.

"We use the fall especially for instructional purposes," said Coach Bolding. "It gives us a chance to help the young players as well as the returning veterans. The players are allowed to make mistakes, but are encouraged to learn from them so they will be prepared for the spring," said Bolding.

The Lancers will be led by the three captains, who are not only seniors, but are also members of Coach Bolding's original 1979 squad that produced Longwood's first winning season in baseball. David Mitchell (Roanoke), Bruce Morgan (Dillwyn) and Denny Ulrey (Roanoke) were selected to the positions for their playing ability, as well as their leadership qualities.

David Mitchell holds virtually every Longwood career pitching record and has a total of 19 wins during his three years at Longwood. Bolding characterizes Mitchell as a pitcher who will not let an opposing team get a big inning. His fall ERA was 2.38.

First Baseman Denny Ulrey finished the fall with a .333 batting average and also held the second highest on base percentage at .566.

Bruce Morgan, who played much of the season in left field, batted .243 in the fall.

Other leading hitters were catcher Doug Toombs (Chase City) (.344) and outfielder Ron Jones (Bedford) (.388).

Coach Bolding had his best recruiting year landing some outstanding young players. "Dwayne Kingery (Roanoke) (a junior transfer from Ferrum) may be the best player I've recruited," said Bolding. "He has a good attitude, superior instincts and an extremely aggressive swing. He just has it all. He is definitely a pro prospect."

The Lancers needed pitching help last season and recruited two talented newcomers in junior transfer David Brown (Rustburg) and freshman John Domenico (Westhampton Beach, NY). Brown is another product of Ferrum where he was 8-2. Although he did not have a good fall, Bolding expects him to develop through the season. Domenico led the pitching staff with a 2.25 ERA and is expected to see duty as a starter and a long reliever.

Mike Beach (Saratoga Springs, NY), a transfer from Keystone College in Pennsylvania, had a 5.62 ERA and is expected to help the Lancers in long relief situations.

Freshman Allen Lawter (South Boston), who is playing second base behind Rumburg, had the highest batting and on base percentage among the newcomers with marks of .346 and .529 respectively.

Coach Bolding is optimistic about the upcoming season, despite a schedule that includes Division I powers Virginia Tech, Virginia, Georgetown and JMU.

"If we play this spring like we played this fall, we can have the best season we've ever had if everyone stays healthy," said Bolding. We have to be real good to top last year's record."

Longwood Basketball Outlook

Four of the five starters, all double figure scorers last season, are back along with three reserves. It is basically the same

Longwood basketball coach Cal Luther has considerable talent returning from last year's team which went 19-9 and merited consideration for a playoff spot. Luther, however, must contend with a lack of proven depth and overall height in his first season as Lancer boss.

group that won its last five games and helped the Lancers rank ninth in scoring margin (10.9), 12th in field goal percentage (52.4) and 15th in rebound margin (6.5) among NCAA Division II teams.

An exception is senior Kenny Ford, Longwood's first 1,000 point scorer and a catalyst in the late season surge. Ford is academically ineligible at least through the first semester. More bad news came when two-year veteran Darrell Jenkins was knocked out by a knee injury in October.

On the positive side for the Lancers is the return of starters Jerome Kersey, 6-7 forward, Ron Orr, 6-6 center, Joe Remar, 6-1 guard and Mike McCroey, 6-0 guard. Between them the four players accounted for 50 points a game last season. Orr and Remar are two-year starters.

Soccer Splits Two, Sets School Record

By MIKE LYNCH

The Longwood College Soccer team lost 3-2 to a tough Averett College team, Tuesday, but rebounded to an easy 5-0 win over Cabrini, Friday. The win over Cabrini set a new school record of 10 wins in a season.

The loss to Averett could have gone either way. Longwood, as usual, outshot the opponent 26-17 and one of the Averett goals was on a penalty kick. There were many good plays by both sides and the best one, by far, was made by Longwood goalie, Brian Sprinkle, who leaped straight into the path of an Averett player, blocking what should have been a wide open shot.

Averett's team was very emotional and at one time had to be warned by a referee about their comments. The team attained three yellow cards, the bench heckled the Refs, the coach, who was no exception, managed to see every penalty on Longwood and miss every penalty on Averett and in order to keep this level of raucousness quite high they brought along some cheerleaders.

The game itself was a good one to watch. It was slowed some by many penalties dealt out by the referees but the tone of the game was one that required many calls. Longwood's defense had to deal with some very good Averett forwards and generally did so quite well. Darryl Case saved the Lancers quite a bit of work by breaking up many of Averett's transition plays, enabling Longwood to stay upfield instead of having to come back and set up a defense.

The pace was fast and the game was very offensive giving the impression that a goal would have to be scored soon. After the first 15 minutes of the first half, Longwood started getting a feel of things and got down on offense more than before. They really started making Averett's highly touted goalie, Bob Christian, work. By mid-half he had to come out from the goal on some occasions and made some difficult saves. But he couldn't save one shot from Longwood's Randy Niermyer that deflected off another player and went in the goal, putting the Lancers on the board, 1-0.

But just a minute and 30 seconds later, Pekka Koartinen, one of five players from Finland on Averett's roster, was fouled from behind by Joe Parker who attempted to kick the ball away but also took Koartinen's leg out from under him. The ensuing kick was good tying the score at one apiece. The penalty, though was one that had to be made, for after Parker, the Averett player would have had a clear path to the goal and probably would have scored anyway. When later asked if he would repeat his actions he said, "I definitely would have done it again."

The second half was just as good, if not better, than the first. With 29:45 left, Longwood got the first goal of the half on a beautiful direct kick by Bill Foster which first cleared a barrier of Averett players and then barely made it under the crossbar, giving the goalie no real chance to stop it.

Averett responded just 25 seconds later as John Vigouroux, their leading scorer, put in a header off a Koartinen cornerkick. As a result of the score being tied again, play really heated up. Penalties were rampant and it was at this time that Averett's bench got their warning. Dana Gregg nearly put Longwood back on top sliding into the goalie, Christian, and another defender managing to kick the ball at the Averett goal. With injured ribs, Christian went out of the game but Gregg's shot did not go in the goal.

With about 10 minutes left in the game, one of the more appreciable factors of playing on First Avenue Field came into effect. It was getting dark. The game was still tied until very late in the half when Vigouroux got another goal off a set play. It was not over though, Longwood had other chances at goals and the game was exciting, although hard to see, until the end.

On Friday, the loss behind them, the Lancers prepared for Cabrini, which was not hard to do. As many people acknowledged before the start of the game, the Cavaliers would be one of the weaker teams on the Longwood schedule. In order to even this up somewhat, Longwood did not play all their regulars at once. This move did not even it up much, though, since Longwood's second stringers possess appreciable skills also.

The first half had two goals, both of which were by Bill Foster. The first one he got off of a corner kick in a crowd in front of the goal. The second goal he put in after getting a good pass from Tim Brennan which set the defense up quite nicely. In order to spare the overwhelmed Cabrini defense any more suffering Coach Posipanko put the hot-shooting, Foster on the bench, letting the rest of the first-half players continue pouring in 26 shots for the half on the battered Cabrini goal.

In the second half Gustavo Leal, who in the first half had a nice seat on the bench with a warm blanket and a good view of the game, got on the field and scored three goals to crank his season total up to 20. Passes from Dana Gregg and Greg Cherpes set up two of these scores. The third came off a penalty kick by Leal after he was tripped up by the last Cabrini player who could catch him before he got to the goal. Leal started this particular break from midfield.

Next up is Hampden-Sydney for the Farmville Herald Challenge Cup, for continued Longwood dominance over its rival and quite possibly, for a playoff spot.

has in early workouts. Also back from last season are reserve guards Jim Sixsmith and Mitch Walker. Sixsmith played well off the bench and canned 66 of 82 free throws (80.5 per cent) while Walker saw action in 14 games.

New recruits John Weber, a 6-7 freshman, and Mike Testa, 6-0 junior are expected to add depth, but the remainder of the Lancer squad, which is a combination varsity and junior varsity, is made up of former Longwood junior varsity cagers.

Most impressive of the ex-jayvees is guard Walter Taylor, who, Coach Luther feels, could make a significant contribution to the varsity. The remainder of the Lancer squad includes: guards Steve Bianco, Dalany Brown and Bobby Carter and forwards Paul Hatchett, Troy Littles and Tim Zirkle.

Luther points out that one of the biggest unknowns in approaching the upcoming season is how the players will adapt to his style of play. Longwood has been a mostly zone team on defense the past two seasons while the new Lancer boss is an advocate of man-to-man defense.

"It's a big change," said the coach. "We will be much more run oriented and play more man-to-man defense. I'm hoping the players will adjust."

Longwood faces a difficult schedule with Division I Navy and nationally ranked Division II powers Monmouth and District of Columbia ahead as well as tough Virginia foes Radford, Liberty Baptist and Virginia State. West Virginia Tech is another tough opponent. In addition, Longwood, with 15 road games, must play 7 of its final 8 games away from home.

Miller's Book Praised by British Scholar

Dr. Gilbert John Miller's book, Tudor Mercenaries and Auxiliaries, 1485-1547, has received a very favorable review in one of the most prestigious historical journals.

Miller's book, published last year by the University Press of Virginia, was reviewed by British scholar John Childs, of the University of Leeds, for the October issue of "The Journal of the American Historical Association."

The reviewer states that Miller's "enterprising and important study concentrates upon a subject that, with the honorable exception of C. G. Cruikshank, has been largely ignored."

In addition to giving a detailed account of the English campaigns in northern France during the first half of the 16th century, which Childs says is "valuable in its own right," Miller's book explores the mercenary trade and the often unscrupulous and unreliable behavior of these "soldiers for hire."

Childs concludes his review by stating that "Miller has produced a well-written and worthwhile study that navigates a course through uncharted seas."

Dr. Miller is a member of the history faculty at Longwood College. He has been researching Tudor military history for over 10 years, including two years spent in England conducting original research in the major historical archives there.

In addition to his book on Tudor mercenaries, Dr. Miller has written several articles on the same subject for professional journals.

for James Fenimore Cooper's "The Last of the Mohicans."

"When I set up a show," commented Miss Barbara Bishop, chairman of the Art Department, "I try to give it a setting that is complementary to the work. I tried to pick a warm color scheme because I think the paintings have a nice warmth to them."

One student commented, "The still lifes are really sharp. The Rockwell Kent is nice and so is the set up of the gallery. I feel warm looking at it!"

Another gallery viewer walked in and smiled, "That's beautiful! It looks like a French gallery or something."

This show will continue through November 22, 1981. The Gallery hours are 9-12 and 1-5 Monday through Friday. On Saturday and Sunday the Gallery is open between 2 and 6.

"I think it's a beautiful show," concluded Miss Bishop. "It is interesting to see the judgments, and tastes of four different collectors that when pulled together, complement each other so well."

HPER COURSE OFFERINGS

New Course In Scuba Diving

A class added to the curriculum which may be taken for one credit as part of the General Education requirement in Health, Physical Education and Recreation is Scuba Diving. The course will be taught by Mr. Jim Glasser, a member of the Professional Association of Diving Instructors. Currently an instructor with the W-W Diving Shop in Richmond. The fee for the course is $113.95, which includes the cost of the text, equipment rental, cost of instruction and travel. The class will be taught during the spring semester, 1981-82.

Block Classes

A number of courses are taught in concentrated, short term blocks, four days a week for one-half semester. The activities which lend themselves to the warmer, outdoor climate such as tennis, golf, cycling, archery are taught during the second half-semester, while indoor activities such as bowling are scheduled for the first block. Students must be available to meet these classes four days a week for the one-credit course. Please note that not all tennis, golf, archery, and bowling are taught in a block. Some of these classes are also offered 2-3 days a week for the entire semester.

Classes for Beginners - All Activities

Unless otherwise indicated, all activity classes are being taught for those students who know little or nothing about that activity and who have never developed skill in the sport. For those who have been able to develop some skill, there are classes for intermediate and advanced students. For example, if a student enrolls in tennis, golf, or bowling, the instruction will be structured for those who have never played tennis or golf or who have not bowled. If a class, such as tennis, is labeled as Tennis II, the instruction will be structured for intermediate and advanced level tennis players.

Interview:

With A Witch

By JOE JOHNSON

"The word 'witch' has always had such a negative connotation that merely mentioning it outside of Halloween or movies tends to start a panic. Actually it is derived from the Anglo Saxon word Wicca Craft or wise craft." That's what Paul Perkins, a senior at Longwood College, has to say. And he should know, because Paul is a witch. But a white witch as he is most careful to point out, not a black witch or practitioner of black magic and especially he is emphatically "not a satan worshipper."

Paul, a music education major, became involved with witch craft in his early high school days and has recently (about 1½ years ago) joined the church of Wicca, a bonified religion recognized by the Federal Government, whose cornerstone of faith is, you guessed it, witchcraft.

"Magic is the base of our religion. The church of Wicca teaches that nature is the source of all power. There are 2 things necessary to utilize this power and these two things are what we call magic. First you must learn the natural laws of the universe and how to apply them in specific cases, second is learning to direct raised and dawn power. Raised power is that energy which comes from our being and the natural world, dawn power is really very interesting and is more or less the crux for all the power utilized by us.

It is the energy stored in our god or messiah concepts. "You see," he continued, "all psychic energy is like matter — it can be neither created nor destroyed, it remains stored in the images and the concepts of gods, messiahs, goddesses, etc., ready to be tapped.

To direct raised power one uses the greatest tool that any witch has — his mind. The power is always there, ubiquitous and undifferentiated, ready to be controlled by the transferer which is your mind.

In other words your mind applies it and channels it."

"What about the potions and incantations that much literature has been dedicated to in the field of witchcraft?" "We use materials such as potions and incantations for ritualistic purposes largely. They are aides or crutches to help focus in, to but you in the right frame of mind to become in rhythm with the pulse of energy that you are working with. When people think of potions they tend to think of such infamous ingredients as eye of the newt, leg of the toad, etc. These materials are fine but so is anything that you could buy from a supermarket. When I was younger I thought you needed horrendous spells from ancient Egypt or the pits of Persia, but it's simply not true, in fact if using these chants make you feel ridiculous or foolish then they won't work. The main thing is to find something you are comfortable with, if it takes repeating 'baseball' 2000 times to get your mind in the right frame then that is what it takes, but saying words like abaca-

A witch entreats the spirits.

Paul Perkins holding a ritualistic service to prepare the way for magic.

dabra just won't cut it, to make magic work, it has to be emotional, you have to get involved in it, you can't have anything nagging at you. Be physically satisfied first — eat a large meal, use the bathroom, fool around and then start preparing yourself mentally. It's almost childishly simple to do, so don't have a really heavy attitude towards it, don't start with the idea that intense belief in it is necessary, it's better to have a 'Well, I don't know if this B.S. is going to work or not but I'm going to have a lot of fun trying it' attitude. You can't force your faith in it, the faith will grow after each successful mass or display of magic.

The power you are dealing with is a great force, it can be used for good or evil but it is not intrinsically either. It is energy plain and simple like electricity except on a different level. Our great principle pertaining to its use is 'and it hurt no one — do what thou wilt.'

We are not a negative faith as so many people seem to think, we are not Satan worshippers and we do have something spiritual to offer, just as any other religion. It is a natural simple sincere answer to the question of man's life."

Later, I asked Paul to read my mind. He told me I was thinking of something wicked or evil and an underlying voice kept repeating in his mind "hear me, hear me." I told him I was thinking of my girlfriend. He gave me an enigmatic look and said quietly "be careful."

Godspell Review

By JODI KERSEY

Godspell under the direction of Thomas A. Williams and music direction by Louard E. Egbert, was a dynamic success at Longwood for the three nights of performance on November 5, 6, and 7 in Jarman Auditorium. The musical, presented by Sigma Alpha Iota and Phi Mu Alpha, featured a cast and musical accompaniment of extreme enthusiasm. The enthusiasm and total drain on the actors' and actresses' energies rendered a cast that formed a unity of action and emotional force on stage. It wasn't so much the acting as the display of exhausting emotions which captivated the audience and made them a part of the play. There was an evident bond between the cast members which served to make the play's subject matter refreshing and totally sincere to the viewer. Through the cast's own humorous originality and uniqueness in handling scenes surrounding Biblical context, the cast created a play with an atmosphere so totally self-expressive that the audience had no choice but to be receptive and equally enthusiastic.

Not wishing to diminish the aura of unity displayed by the group, two names should be commended for adding a special significance to the play. They are Scott Noonan as Stephen and Myra Pierson as Sonia.

Scott with his diamond eyes and sublime voice, projected the desired atmosphere of sadness

Former Student Honored

By GAIL W. SHANNON

On Oct. 27 in the Lankford reading rooms, Jackie Knighton, a Longwood graduate with a B.S. in Sociology was honored by the Anthropology-Sociology Department of Longwood. Miss Knighton, who is completing her masters in Sociology at William and Mary, was presented with a certificate, acknowledging her fine career as an undergraduate and her excellent beginning in graduate school, along with 2 bound volumes of classic research in Sociology by Dr. James Jordan.

Miss Knighton spoke to a group of four faculty members and twenty students on how well prepared she had been by Longwood for entering graduate school. She tried to impress upon the students that there was nothing wrong with going to a small undergraduate school if they wanted to enter graduate school. She also said that the main asset they could take with them was a feeling of confidence. Knighton gave her impressions of graduate school and related to the group that her preparations had been for entering it. Miss Knighton was one of ten students admitted to William and Mary to study sociology and after one and a half years of study, she is one of three survivors of the original ten.

Knighton, whose home is in evaporated by the joy of living and a faith in oneself. He had the audience believing in his death as surely as a lance was thrust into Christ's side and just as surely had them throwing confetti and clapping when he rose, dancing on stage, from the dead.

Myra, a veteran actress on Longwood's stage, was up to the usual par excellence in her rendition of Sonia, the prostitute. The tears that traced her cheeks were real — she was crying at the last supper and you could feel her emotion, like a tangible fog, embrace the audience till they too welled with sympathy for the legendary dilemma.

The costumes and lighting of Godspell reflected once again the diverse originality and creativity of the Music Department's production. An exceptional example of this was in the Faculty Colloquium Lecture

The second lecture in this year's Faculty Colloquium at Longwood College will be given by Phyllis G. Wacker on Wednesday evening, November 11, at 7:30 in the Molnar Recital Hall of Wygal Building.

Ms. Wacker, who is associate professor of psychology at Longwood, will discuss "Hippocampus, Habituation and Hyperactivity." The lecture is open to the public at no charge.

A candidate for the Ph.D. degree in physiological psychology from the University of Virginia, Ms. Wacker is engaged in ongoing research on the functioning of the hippocampus, a structure in the cortex of the brain.

The hippocampus is implicated in many behaviors, including memory in humans. In her research, Ms. Wacker has found that damage to hippocampal connections in rats is accompanied by a wide variety of changes in behavior.

She states that many of the behaviors exhibited by hippocampally damaged rats are also characteristic of humans under certain conditions, including hyperactivity in children.

Ms. Wacker holds B.A. and M.A. degrees from the University of Richmond and has been a member of Longwood's faculty since 1965. She received a National Science Foundation Fellowship in 1968 to attend the Institute of Contemporary Psychology in Beloit, Wisconsin, and she presented a paper on her research at the 1976 meeting of the Society of Neuroscience in Toronto, Canada.

Mural Dedication at Campus School

The dedication of the mural "Mother Goose and Friends" by artist Lisa Cumbey took place Thursday, November 5, 1981 at the J.P. Wynne Campus School. Lisa, a 1982 graduate from Southampton, Virginia, finished this elaborate project after one and a half years. The 20 by 8 foot mural is now on display in the Campus School library.

Those that were present and congratulated Lisa during the dedication were: Mrs. Jackie Wall, Director of Art for Campus School, Miss Barbara Bishop, chairman of Longwood's Art Department, Dr. Crayton Buck, Director of the Campus School and Dr. Janet Greenwood. Dr. Greenwood added to the dedication by saying, "the painting symbolizes what I hope for our college, faculty and students joining together".

Lisa explained that Mrs. Cecil Kidd, campus school librarian, was her greatest inspirator because "Mrs. Kidd loves stories; she wanted something that would deal with stories and rhymes the children had read."

There are twenty-five nursery rhymes and a few fairy tales represented in the mural. Lisa discussed the process that led to the conclusion of the mural: "I started with Little Boy Blue and really enjoyed the work, especially at the end. The hardest part is composition. I had painted part of it, especially on the left hand side and then I painted over it to do some position changing. Also, there were so many stories to pick from. I spent two months just reading."

In conclusion, Lisa stated her purpose for the mural "I hope the mural will inspire the children and encourage them to understand what they need, not in TV or movies, but in books. I hope it will inspire them in art, also."

Sterling To Lecture On Marshlands

"The Marsh" will be Thomas Sterling's topic for the national audubon lecture to be held Tuesday, November 7 at 8 p.m. in Wygal auditorium.

"The Marsh" — a quiet mystery — is his attempt to increase public awareness of the value of wetlands. He points out that destruction, or alteration of these wetlands would only result in lower water tables, loss of wildlife, increased flooding, and diminished wildlife populations.

Dance Company Opens Tonight

By BILL BRENT

Tonight is the opening night for the dance company's fall concert in Lancer Hall's dance studio. Twenty-eight men and women working with Dr. Bowman and Nelson Neal have been enduring grueling rehearsals to provide a sparkling show for LC students that will run through Saturday. All the shows are free but tickets must be picked up in advance at the dance studio. The curtain will rise at 7:30 p.m.

For nearly ten weeks, choreographers and dancers have been meticulously scrutinizing various movements and musical compositions to create their dances and express their ideas to the audience. Grace Ann Rogers, a four-year member of the company, explains that "a dance is made up of phrases and phrases are like complete sentences and like a sentence it has something to say". Choreographers are responsible for costuming, patterns of movements and suggest lighting to enhance their performances. Richard Gamble from the Drama Department has provided assistance with technical rehearsals.

No experience is required to dance at LC. The company has tryouts at the beginning of each semester. Dr. Bowman mentioned that more dancers are trying out who are "technically accomplished". More men are members this semester than in Requirements for the applicants included a completion of a minimum of 30 credit hours of work, an achieved overall grade point average of 2.50, a portfolio of 12 pieces of exceptional quality work in a variety of media, a resume, and a statement of goals.

Carol Edmonson is a senior at Longwood College majoring in art education. She has won various other awards for her art including the "Virginia Craftsman Award" at the Virginia Museum, the co-winner at Longwood for "Artist of the Month", the "Art Department Purchase Award" at the Junior Computer Literacy — the way of the future, the frontier to be crossed, . . . the data to be programmed. Yes, computer research saves time, saves man the trivial work of wading word by word through the paper to be corrected, and the Tennyson poem or Milton's Paradise Lost. With a push of a button we can have at our fingertips their syntax, their meter, and yes even their themes, organized, assimilated, resynthesized and regurgitated into 4 short sentences. "Ahh" you say to yourself "die-hards, old fashioned English majors accustomed to the ancient ways, you must learn to give way to progress to allow for the future, to breathe the fresh air of productivity of efficiency and unlock yourself from your dark monastic practices. Listen — No longer will you have to correct your own grammar, now a computer can do it for you. Look — the children of the present, so accustomed to that unique invention known as television, can more easily adapt to a keyboard and screen than a pen in hand. Learn — to put lengthy verbose statements into short easily memorized acronyms as the computers do. It's line and order, to filter and display that is the way of organization — cut the crap and keep the cream. Computers are the commercial art of math, they shall bring our world closer together in that great oneness of conformity and we shall be ever more human to be like computers — for we are rational creatures after all, and we all hate errors don't we? Well don't we?"

Now let's see what that little statement would look like on a hypothetical print out.

Input Data: Computer literacy —

item 1 — corrects paper

item 2 — gives syntax, theme and meter of Tennyson's Poetry and Milton's Paradise Lost item 3 — second person speaks item 4 — English majors give up old ways item 5 — computer corrects papers item 6 — computer will be easily handled item 7 — ex. children with television item 8 — computers more efficient and organized

Output: humans should be more like computers

. . . . Somehow I think it's missed my point.

Unemployment has hit eight per cent, its the highest mark in six years. The severe recession is a contributing factor in the rate which has left 8.5 per cent of the U.S. unemployed.

Only 77 per cent of the 18 year olds in America have signed up for draft registration this year. The Selective Service hopes to reduce the 23 per cent to at least 90 per cent registered by January.

Moscow's "peace policy" was blatantly berated by Swedes and Danes as a Soviet sub believed to have nuclear warheads aboard, was escorted away by a Soviet floating flotilla. Russia has been accused of "hostile espionage," as their credibility in the Baltic has plummeted.

The Camp David Peace Accords may be coming to an end as Prime Minister Menachem Begin is voicing opposition to the U.S. and Europe about the Saudi peace plan, while Saudi Crown Prince Fahd wants the U.S. to support the PLO. Your Turn

Coverage Wanted

Dear Editor,

As a member of the volleyball team, I believe that I should speak out about the coverage we have received in the Rotunda (and elsewhere). No sport or occurrence is so important that it needs to be exclusively covered. Likewise, no activity is so unimportant that it can be ignored.

The lack of coverage was typified in the absence of team photographs appearing in the Rotunda. The paper has been flooded with articles and photographs of a club team and other teams whose seasons have yet to begin. I realize that everyone can not be covered in every issue, but the reporting undoubtedly seems biased in favor of particular teams.

Selective reporting (to this extent) has no place in the Rotunda. The news of all the sports programs should be accurately reported, with the students selecting which articles they would like to read. Volleyball is a valuable part of the sports program and needs to be treated as such by student publications.

Sincerely,
Julie Petefish

Favorite Soap Defended

To the Editor of the Rotunda:

I, along with many others, would like to state a response to an article in the November 3rd issue. The article in question is "Ignorance killed Diana Taylor?" Ms. Agnew stated that watching soap operas is "...a total waste of time." She also attempted to say that by watching General Hospital there could be a possibility of not passing a history test.

Obviously Ms. Agnew does not realize that soap operas only run from 12:30 to 4 p.m. and in this time frame, General Hospital only lasts from 3:00 p.m. until 4:00 p.m. This does not inhibit or take the place of studying after all, there are still 6 to 7 hours left. The soap operas simply give many students a common interest and a chance to get together before or after classes.

In answer to her ridiculous survey questions, I probably know more about the selling of arms to Saudi Arabia than she does! The United States' purpose in doing this is clear to anyone who knows anything about foreign affairs. The U.S. has not only sold arms to Saudi Arabia but also to Israel. It is not a case of the U.S. being on the side of Saudi Arabia but rather acting as a neutral in this entire feud.

The other question she put to us was the killing of Diana Taylor. I personally believe that it is very possible that Heather's mother (Mrs. Grant) killed Diana, but only by accident. If you keep up with G.H. as I do, you would have seen the gun Heather found in her mother's drawer. I believe that it is possible that Mrs. Grant was intending to kill Heather when she saw that Diana's life was endangered, but missed.

Tell me, Ms. Agnew, does that sufficiently answer your two questions? In the future please do not attempt to belittle avid General Hospital fans.

Yours truly:

Computer Research Saves Time

By GAIL SHANNON

If you're looking for information of any kind, if you can't find it, if you're short of time, or you just don't feel like looking, then Lancaster Library has the answer in the form of DIALOG. DIALOG is a computerized information retrieval system installed in the library so that the library's services may be extended for the college and community. The existence of DIALOG makes available much more information in the library by giving access to different types of information. No longer must someone rely solely on the different research guides for information or take the hours of time research usually necessitates.

Ms. Deborah Pearson, the librarian in charge of the DIALOG system, is very enthusiastic about the potential of DIALOG and a little disappointed that it hasn't seen more use since it became fully operational in August. In October she only conducted about 20 searches for graduate and honor students, one undergraduate, and faculty members. She hopes that it will see more use once people learn of its existence. Not only can DIALOG find specific information for the topic a person is researching, but according to Ms. Pearson, "If you search a topic by DIALOG and don't receive any information on it, at least you know there's nothing to be found." This can save a lot of valuable time spent in otherwise useless research.

To use DIALOG, a person must fill out a form stating precisely what he needs information on. Then he must come up with synonyms for the topic. The area of research must also be narrowed as close as possible for the researcher to receive information that will be useful for his specific needs. DIALOG is connected with 125 different databases so the information available is almost limitless.

Since DIALOG is a time-sharing system, the time the computer is on line must be paid for by the user. When asked about the length of time for searches and the cost, Ms. Pearson said, "The average length of time for a search is about 10 minutes. The cost can range from 40 cents a minute to $5 a minute, depending on the database used. Our most expensive search so far cost $60 and our least expensive was $1.13. On the average, though, they cost between $12 and $15. The nicest thing about DIALOG is the fact that it's so up to date. The news Search system can give you information on any article that appeared in a newspaper as recent as yesterday. More systems are being added every day. One of the newest is Career Placement. This gives information on graduates of 1400 colleges and is great for employers looking for someone with specific qualifications. If he wants an accounting major with a B+ average who is living in Virginia, then DIALOG can locate that person. Graduates have to ask their placement offices to give their resumes to the system if they're interested.

Each month DIALOG offers free time on specific topics. According to Ms. Pearson, "Many times these topics are not ones most people would be interested in, however, once in a while they offer a good one. The time offered is usually 30 minutes. We announce it in the Campus Bulletin so that everyone may know of it. Then it's on a first come first served basis as to who gets to use it. It's a great way for someone to be introduced to DIALOG and its usefulness."

The hours to use DIALOG are 8-12 Monday, 8-11 Tuesday, 2-5 Thursday, and 2-4:45 Friday. Other hours are available by special arrangement with Ms. Pearson.

Computer Literacy Defined

By JODI KERSEY

Computer literacy was the subject for the Fireside Chat last Tuesday night, November 3, at the Longwood House. Under the leadership of Mr. Jerry Hill, faculty, administration, businessmen and students joined together to discuss the need for computer education at colleges and in particular, Longwood. Mr. Hill initiated the conversation among approximately twenty-five guests by saying that "students need to be prepared to work in a computer oriented world because statistics show that fifty per cent of technical jobs are going to be computer supported."

Representatives from Reynolds Metal and Phillip Morris were present to give advice concerning the business market and the type of degree holders they look for when hiring in the computer area. They both stressed the idea that people solely educated in the technical aspects of computer literacy were not in unusually great demand. Rather, they preferred to hire degree holders in Mathematics, Psychology, or Business with a concentration in computer science. A generalized well-rounded background will hopefully give an employee a good understanding of other people. A computer nut, many present stated, would not relate well to people and would not understand how others have to adapt to the use of computers.

Speaking for Reynolds Metal, one representative believes that within ten years, almost all employees working for that company will be using some type of computer assistance. Many times employees are hesitant to use computers, but they are an everyday occurrence in all businesses and in private homes.

Dr. Madeline Simpson, who has just designed a handbook entitled "Flying Fingers" — Computer Previews for Non-Math People, added that the first important step to teaching anyone about the computer process is to help alleviate the simple fear of actually using a computer.

The main outcome of the fireside chat was the increased awareness of the need for computer literacy for all students. The need for exposure to computers was agreed upon as the first step in reaching the goal of computer literacy for our college. Through a basic education in computer which would start with basic typing skills, students can be introduced to the terminals. Thus, the definition arises that students will achieve a basic knowledge, understanding the power and limitations involved in using a computer. Obviously, computer literacy should not be a forced activity, as expressed by an administrator from St. Paul's College. Also, all interested in computers should keep in mind that a computer is a tool and can never replace our own reasoning power.

New Wave: Cold,
Hard and Electric

Gather 'round folks and let me tell you a tale of fortune. A tale of four lads from England who were mad. Mad at society, at government, at people and, yea, even mad at themselves. An insane bassist, an annoying lead singer heading a band of rock-dadists who have a self-destructive impulse.

The infamous band is the Sex Pistols and they ushered in a type of rock that is (as Elliott Murphy so aptly put it) "cold, hard and electric." New Wave and Punk Rock suffered a violent, convulsive, Marinettian birth.

Now purists will say "Oh no you don't, punk and new wave are two different things," and that is true, but only semantically. Punk is just the wildest fringe, the ultimate reaction. Throughout history, in all art movements, there have been two groups: those that seek a clean, basic line and those that seek to drive the very art they love to the edge, to the extreme, to exhaustion.

The Sex Pistols represent the first group. By 1976 Art Rock had peaked the most outstanding example being a massive undertaking by the English band Emerson Lake and Palmer which resulted in the album Works I. A piano concerto, a set of songs with full orchestra, a side of fusion and a side of hard rock and another song with full orchestra. A wonderful exhibition by three of the finest musicians ever to plug in to an amplifier — but where do you go from here? Catharsis for the common man is not a piano concerto.

The Sex Pistols saw this excess and it made them angry. They threw away the orchestras, the "wall of sound", the inner meanings, the concept albums and tradition and Pink Floyd were repulsed, at least for the moment.

But this "Invasion" was the least effective of the three, Elvis Costello and Joe Jackson have both established cult followings, but little more. These two are by far the class of new wave solo artists. Their songs are directed but, like most new wave, detached. As unromantic as possible, though true as possible. No phase-shifters, massive synthesizers, just lean, hard, cold and electric.

Maybe they aren't as popular as Manilow, but now the third wave, the new wave was about to take an exciting turn.

In America, Costello and Co. had been received as less than saviors, for Mighty Bruce Springsteen was in power, whose ideals were actually closer to new wave than many (heresy! — shame on me). But others started to listen in America and they heard the shock of the new, and liked it. They listened in Australia.

And now, long-suffering reader, music was ready for Tom Petty, the Cars, the Ramones and possibly the best of them all. Next week: part II of Cold, Hard and Electric.

The group left the fireside chat agreeing that a definition for computer literacy meant introducing students to the computer in very basic steps. And this big break through would only have limitations because of people not adjusting to the spreading phenomenon. The final opinion projected from the knowledgeable group concerning computer literacy and the future promotion of their use and possession was stated in the question: Can we afford not to promote and invest in computers?

Rugby wins again 14-7

By MIKE LYNCH

The Longwood College Rugby Football Club rose up in the second half of their contest with the Lynchburg City Rugby Football Club to win 14-7. The victory evens Longwood's record at 3-3, all three wins occurring on their home field.

At the start of the game, the players and fans were rather passive, the emotions seeming to have been expired in last week's contest against Hampden-Sydney. It might have been this mode of thinking that got Longwood off to a slow start which resulted in just a 4-3 halftime lead. Lynchburg was outpushing in the scrums and could have scored more than they did in the first half since they were on the offensive most of the time. But they never got a try in the half, mainly because Longwood's defense would tighten up whenever they got close, showing Longwood's ability to repel Lynchburg at will, although they did not have a whole lot of will in the first half.

On Longwood's lone drive of the half, they got the first score of the game. After several attempts by various players to get in the Lynchburg goal, Mark Furnari took the ball in for a try, giving Longwood a 4-0 lead. The conversion was no good, leaving the score unchanged.

After this, Lynchburg resumed their constant attack on Longwood's goal and finally got a field goal, having missed one earlier. But for all the aggression and offense that Lynchburg would display in the first half, that field goal was all that they would accomplish before halftime.

In the second half, the situation was definitely different. Longwood's players were in a much more aggressive state of mind and showed this fact by being the aggressor for most of the half. They easily controlled the scrums, forced Lynchburg's backs to make many mistakes and simply pushed them all over the field. Unfortunately, Lynchburg got the first try of the half, having gotten down the field quickly and outnumbering their opponents. After this, Longwood got mad. Real mad! The aforementioned score by Lynchburg would be their last.

Longwood took advantage after the kickoff and started an assault on the Lynchburg goal that

Gymnasts Season Outlook

By LISA SPENCER

Weeks of hard practice will culminate this month as the Longwood gymnastics team opens its 1981-82 season at home November 21. The squad will be hosting the U.S. Naval Academy, a team they defeated early last season.

A major goal for Coach Ruth Budd and this year's team will be to continue Longwood's winning tradition in gymnastics. In the four years that Budd has been at the helm, she has established a 26-13 record.

The going will be tough for the young Lady Lancers, despite the abundance of talent and dedication they possess. The team will be facing such formidable opponents as Duke, Towson, Pennsylvania, James Madison, Radford, and William & Mary, but Budd predicts that matching last season's 9-2 mark is not an impossible task.

"Once again, our level of competition has increased substantially," stated Budd. "However, our own level of skill has also increased considerably."

Longwood will be counting on returnees Kathy Idelson (ANNAPOLIS, MD), Kim Pickel (FLANDERS, NJ), Monica Chandler (STERLING), and Sherri Meeks (VIRGINIA BEACH) to provide much-needed experience. Idelson, and All-American in 1979, was a national finalist in beam last season. Chandler, also a qualifier for nationals, was chosen to the Virginia State All-Championship team.

Budd expects freshmen Kelly Crepps and Dayna Hankinson to make a substantial contribution in all-around competition.

Crepps, from Hampton, and Springfield native Hankinson are both USGF Class I gymnasts with exceptional talent.

Other additions to the team include freshmen Elsa Kretz (MECHANICSVILLE), Kim Owens (VIRGINIA BEACH), Angie Smith (LEXINGTON), Gray Stabley (CHESTER), and Gina Tabone (FAIRFAX).

Overall, Coach Budd predicts that the gymnasts will make a good showing this season, both as a team and individually.

"They are working on skills with a high level of difficulty and risk—skills that only a few years ago I would never have expected to see in college competition," said the coach.

Although the team is a young one, Budd is confident that their enthusiasm and talent will be a big plus.

"Again we have a young team," said Budd, "but they appear enthusiastic and they have an enormous amount of ability."

Golfers 2nd in region

FROMSPORTS INFO

Longwood's women's golf team closed out its fall season Thursday with a second place finish behind William & Mary in the AIAW Division II, Region 2 championship at King Mills Golf Course near Williamsburg.

The Lady Lancers had rounds of 330-355 for a 685 while the host Indians fired a 319-333-652 to take top honors. Emily Fletcher, Robin Andrews and Sue Morgan tied for fourth place in the individual race with 170. Fletcher had a 76-94, Andrews 89-81 and Morgan 80-90.

Other Longwood scores included: Pam Othen 85-90-175 and Sharon Gilmore 94-94-188.

Longwood won the Mary Baldwin and James Madison Invitational tournaments during the past season. The Lady Lancers will be pointing toward earning a berth in the AIAW Div. II Nationals, which will be held in May, when the spring season gets underway in March.

Petefish Player of Week

FROM SPORTS INFO. — Senior co-captain Julie Petefish who turned in two solid performances last week for Longwood's women's volleyball team, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 30-November 6. The honor is chosen each week by the Sports Information Office.

A fourth year member of the lady spikers, Petefish had an exceptional week in which she compiled the following statistics: 57-61 bumps (93.4 per cent), 9-9 dinks (100 per cent), 7-8 blocks (87.5 per cent), 13-14 spikes (92.8 per cent), 2-2 sets (100 per cent) and 11-12 serves (91.6 per cent). The hitter has played well all year while helping Longwood compile an 8-10 record.

"Julie is a great hitter, has a consistent serve and is really a hustler," said first-year coach Joyce Phillips. "She has been a good co-captain and a real asset to our team. She always gives of herself to everyone."

A graduate of Page County High School in Shenandoah, VA, Petefish is a Physical Education major who hopes to coach after graduation. She participated in volleyball, softball and basketball at Page County and was MVP in volleyball two years.

Julie is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Petefish of Stanley.

Award To Honor Dr. Willett

FROM SPORTS INFO

The Longwood College athletic staff has initiated a scholar-athlete award in honor of former Longwood President Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr.

The Henry I. Willett, Jr. Scholar-Athlete Award will be presented to two senior student-athletes (one male and one female) who have outstanding athletic records and who have earned at least a 3.0 cumulative grade point average after seven semesters of college work. The awards will be made only to qualifying individuals. Standards for the award will not be lowered just to present an award each year.

Individual scholar-athlete awards will be presented at the college's annual athletic banquet each spring, according to interim Athletic Director Carolyn Hodges. A permanent award bearing the names of the winners will be displayed in the trophy case in the Lancer Hall foyer.

Volleyball Season Ends at 8-10

By RONNIE BROWN

The Lady Lancers ended the 1981 season by dropping their last two matches to Mary Washington 5-15, 0-15, 16-14, 0-15 Tuesday and Lynchburg 8-15, 14-16, 14-16 Thursday. Longwood's volleyball record stands at 8-10 overall and 1-3 in Eastern Division play.

First year coach, Joyce Phillips felt her team had a successful season considering the amount of participation she received.

"For only 12 people trying out, I felt we played real good volleyball," said Phillips. "There were some games I felt we should have won, but that is to be expected."

Highlights of the season included wins over Division II Liberty Baptist and Eastern Division foe Eastern Mennonite and gallant efforts against Division I opponents Va. Tech and Virginia.

The Lady Lancers will not be looking into the future and Phillips is optimistic that Longwood can have a successful volleyball program.

"Longwood has the potential to go big with their volleyball program," said Phillips. The potential (in the players) is there. For the last three years, there have been three different coaches and it takes time for each coach to develop his or her own program."

Lady Lancer volleyball will be alive and well next season despite the loss of three seniors that include first year player Vicki Nesbitt (MANASQUAN, NJ), starter Frannie Osmer (SOUTHOLD, NY) and co-captain and Player of the Week,

Leal Leads the Lancers

FROM SPORTS INFO

In three short years Longwood's soccer record has done a complete turnabout from 0-14 in 1978 to the current mark of 10-4-3. The rise of the Lancer booters corresponds not only to the arrival of Coach Rich Posipanko in 1979 but also to the arrival of one Gustavo A. Leal, a native of Medellin, Colombia, South America, who lists his current home address as Rockville, Maryland.

Longwood's soccer record has gone up each year right along with Leal's season total of goals. His freshman season (1979) he had two goals and the Lancers finished 4-10-1. Last year Leal had 16 goals and the team went 9-7. So far this season Leal has 20 goals and the Lancers are 10-4-3 and ranked in the Mid-Atlantic Region in Division II.

The first Lancer booter ever to be considered a legitimate All-America candidate, Leal now boasts 38 career goals. This season he also has seven assists.

Coach Posipanko, who built the Longwood program up from square one, feels Leal may have a future in professional soccer.

"Gus has the technique and talent to play in the pros," said the coach, "but he needs to work on his attitude a bit more and work harder than he has, in the future."

"Right now he's one of the top scorers in the state. Gus is our ace in the hole. He comes up with game-winners in crucial situations."

Leal, a junior, has another year to compile even more outstanding statistics and impress the pros. The 5-8, 150-pounder with the magic feet feels he can play in the big leagues. Time will tell.

Gus, who also held down the number one spot on Longwood's first men's tennis team last spring, comes from a family of soccer and tennis specialists. With five brothers, all of whom are skilled athletes, and a father who has been a teaching tennis pro since he was 17, it would be unusual if Gus were not an outstanding athlete.

The Leal family moved to Maryland from Colombia in 1972 as Gus's father Israel took a job as a tennis pro in Rockville. The Leal family lived in the United States until last summer when Mr. and Mrs. Leal moved back to Medellin, Colombia.

Gus is still a citizen of Colombia, and three of his brothers remain in the U. S.

A 1976 graduate of Walter Johnson High School in Rockville, Leal took a few years off to travel and work before his thoughts turned to college. Actually, it was Posipanko who contacted him about coming to Longwood.

"Some of my cousins met Rich (Posipanko) at a World Cup Soccer Camp and they told him about me," said Gus. "He called me up and I decided to give it a chance."

Gus is one of three players who played on Posipanko's first Longwood team in '79. Juniors Joe Parker and Mike McGeehan are the other two three-year veterans. Gus's brother Mario played for the Lancers in '79 but has since left school to work.

With Posipanko bringing in new, talented players each season the Longwood team has undergone much change over the past three years. Leal has

Lady Lancers Host Hampton

FROM SPORTS INFO. — First-year coach Jane Miller will unveil her Lady Lancer basketball team Thursday night when Longwood hosts VAAIAW Division II conference foe Hampton Institute in the season opener for both teams at 7:30 in Lancer Hall.

Longwood, 12-16 a year ago, has won all four previous meetings between the two teams, including last year's battle 77-69. Hampton ended up 10-18 a year ago, but like Longwood, expects to be much improved in the coming campaign.

The Lady Pirates have six freshmen on their roster including two that measure 6-2 and 6-1. Seniors Gwen Jordan (1,173 career points) and Toni Goodman averaged over 15 points per game a year ago. Hampton's new coach James Sweat is optimistic that this year's team can turn in a winning record.

Following Thursday night's tilt Longwood takes the road for a 7:30 clash at Richmond Saturday night. The Lady Spiders are also expecting big things after a 9-11 season. The addition of 6-2 freshman Karen Elsner, a high school All-American, has the Spiders on the upswing. She averaged 19.6 points and 13 rebounds at Holy Cross High School in Rockville, MD. Five starters also return. Longwood leads the series 7-2.

Miller and her players feel they'll be much improved in the upcoming season, but VAAIAW Div. II coaches picked Longwood seventh in a pre-season poll while George Mason and Radford were rated as the top two teams. Thursday night the Lady Lancers will have a chance to start convincing the skeptics.

Miller, who expects tough games from both Hampton Institute and Richmond, points to defense as the key for her team. Longwood will emphasize player-to-player defense and attempt to run a controlled break on offense when the opportunity arises.

Newcomer Florence Holmes and veterans Cindy Eckel, Patty

Lia and Karen Savarese drew praise from Miller for their play in a Friday night scrimmage.

Miller was impressed with her team's shooting in the scrimmage.

Eckel and senior Robin Hungate, Longwood's co-captains, were two of the team's top performers a year ago. Other returning veterans are Lia, Savarese, Theresa Ferrante and Paige Moody.

Holmes heads up a group of seven newcomers. The others are: Mariana Johnson, Judy Painter, Lana Hobbs and Valerie Turner, all freshmen, junior Barbara DeGraff, and sophomore Robin Powell.

Powell, a high school All-American, has been slowed by an ankle injury, but should be ready by Thursday night, according to Miller.

Longwood's new coach won't even hazard a guess as to who will be in the starting lineup for the Hampton Institute contest.

"We've got a lot of players in contention," says Miller.

good 8-7. Chris Connors successfully kicked the conversion, increasing the margin to 10-7. But Longwood was not through scoring just yet. After Marty Mann had one called back, Geoff White scored a try by letting Longwood's scrum formation push Lynchburg in past the goal line and then taking the ball from under Ron Gallihugh's foot, where Gallihugh had purposely placed it, and diving in against no real opposition. The conversion was no good but Longwood was well ahead anyway 14-7.

The rest of the half was marred by excessive violence. A fight almost erupted near the end of the match and some players had to leave the game with injuries, including Longwood's Dean Lakey with ligament damage. The end of the game came with men down instead of play occurring and although battered, Longwood was victorious 14-7.

"Having to adjust to new players each year makes things difficult," Leal admitted, "but the new players are good. This year is the best. Everyone talks it up during the games and we play more as a team now. If one player messes up someone else takes up the slack."

Longwood, which has an outside shot at its first berth in the NCAA Division II Playoffs, winds up its season Monday night at home against rival Hampden-Sydney.

A year ago Gus scored two goals to enable Longwood to beat the Tigers 2-1.

The Lancers will have Leal and nine other starters back next season. Longwood's charge to the top of the soccer world is sure to continue with Gus leading the way.

crucifixion scene, where a strobe light was employed to heighten the intrigue of the movement and lend a fantastic, almost awful atmosphere to this well known story.

The musical talents of the singers and the musicians should be complimented also. They, as well as the actors, played with an outpouring of emotion that could be felt with each strum of David Brooks' guitar and note of Rusty Hurley's organ. And as has been shown in the past, the cabaret setting works extremely well at Longwood.

Review:

Selected Poems 1958-1980 by Gilbert Sorrentino

By MICHAEL STEPHENS

"I've nothing to say to them," Gilbert Sorrentino writes in the first poem of his first book The Darkness Surrounds Us (1960). "I've nothing to say to them, and I won't write." It comes at the end of the poem in a flat, declarative way; there is nothing ironical, except the lapse of time from when it was written until now. Sorrentino, in his fifties today, wrote those lines in the fifties, when he was a young man. In that duration he's published thirteen volumes of poetry and fiction as well as an unclassifiable jewel Splendide-Hotel (1973), and the range of this writing has been extraordinary. Time is the novelist's forte, but Sorrentino, poet and novelist, uses it ironically in "The Fixture", that first poem. It takes more than a score to get the gist of his remark.

The novels — while having nothing to say to them — have a lot to say about them, they being the underground poetasters he lambasts, the unfaithful wives he pillories, the friends who rape their own talent, blue collars out of Brooklyn and Jersey, and all the artsy-fartsy types who people his satires. With the poems it is a different story; they are written for Gilbert Sorrentino. This uncompromising sense of speaker and listener makes the poems his purest expressions, vehicles for "the perfect fiction", which is also the title of one of his poetry books. He has nothing to say, like Beckett, added to the need to say it, and he won't write, — won't write for them.

How Sorrentino wrote for himself in those early poems was with a lean, cantankerous line, and with a humor — which he still possesses in the later poems — almost like a Lenny Bruce nightclub monologue in verse. What is uniquely his in these early selections is not so much a voice as a range of intelligence. This is most clearly manifest in his choice of subjects, especially images from comic strips, "the funnies", and this before Pop Art:

The moon's a little arth pasted on black cardboard just outside the bedroom window, lovely Major Hoople.

("A Classic Case")

Consider "The Zoo", a poem about Goliathus goliathus, "the one banana peeling beetle in the U S A, brighter than a comic strip, is dead" and who Sorrentino described as being bigger than Skeeze.

peeling his bananas for survival, unlike Mamie Mullins, unlike Moon,

Along with this devotion to comic strip art are poems for and about painters like Franz Kline, Philip Guston, and Dan Rice, most of these sadly excluded from this volume. What does remain is a sense of color, which I presume arose from these other poems and relationships, and he brings a veritable palette of colors to every poem:

I am no tree
no dogwood, nor red sumac, not even crabgrass.

Gradually the concern moves away from "language charged with energy and emotion" (Williams) to language as language. Photographic images, or I should say the camera-like, of Black Mountain writers gives way to a painterly touch, but like painting — there are aspects of the two-dimensional. Sorrentino moves from exterior event, like the coal mine disaster in Nova Scotia of 1958 and the American troops killed in Korea — "The Fights", "The Totem" — to interior concerns in the later poems, which are of the mind and imagination in relationship to the word, the poem. Wallace Stevens in Hartford comes to mind.

Sorrentino's fiction can be haunted at times by spectres of James Joyce and Flann O'Brien — they inhabit his last novels Aberration of Starlight and Mulligan Stew — but he has an original voice which is able to find its own groove as innovator, and even attains farcically stellar results. (He does not love his characters so much as he is possessed and obsessed by them.) The poems are less experimental, more conservative, traditional; there are many traditions to trace in this selection. As he noted on the jacket-flap of his first book, his influences then were Pound, Williams, and Creeley. In between they include Jack Spicer and even younger writers than himself, like Ross Feld (Years Out; Plum Poems). The later influence is French: Baudelaire, Rimbaud, Mallarmé, Apollinaire. There is even a touch of Auden in the later poems, so full of technical virtuoso and craft, and with the quality of Faberge' eggs.

But this concern with craft and technique is not a new one with Sorrentino; as early as The Perfect Fiction (1968) he dealt with the poems in this way. The

Furnace Explosion Danger

By GAIL SHANNON

On the morning of Monday, Nov. 9, complaints could be heard all over campus about the lack of hot water when students in all but the high rise dorms got out of bed Between 8 and 9 a.m., Coynes Home Economics Building and the Graham Building were evacuated. Iler Field was closed, Madison St. between Venable and Pine Sts. was closed and campus police were posted behind. Hiner to reroute students, personnel and faculty away from the area.

Because there was danger of an explosion by the oil furnace in use in the physical plant, it was felt that evacuations should be conducted as a precautionary measure.

There was also a fire truck on hand from 8:15 a.m. until 3 p.m.

The problem was caused by a fire in the air chamber of the large oil furnace. According to Mr. Roy Hill, Jr., Director of the Physical Plant, "This was a freak accident. It's never happened before and may never happen again." Hill also said that a representative of Riddleburger Bros. of Harrisonburg, installers of the furnace, had told him of the same accident occurring in a furnace approximately 3 months old. Longwood's furnace was installed in 1973. When asked what had caused the fire since age was apparently not a factor, Hill replied, "In some way, oil was blown from the fire chamber into the air chamber where it ignited. We speculate that there may have been corrosion on the oil pipe which interfered with the flow of the oil." Because of the construction of the furnace, there was no way to check the amount of oil in the air chamber. The fire had to be allowed to burn itself out before an inspection could be made.

According to Mr. Bill Brown, Supervisor of the Heating Plant, "The air chamber is made of steel and while the fire was burning, the steel got so hot it glowed white. This chamber normally remains cool and there are plastic electrical circuits and wires on the outside. Because of the heat, these were melted leaving the furnace unusable." It is estimated that the furnace will be brought back on line the first of next week. Insurance will take care of the cost of fixing the furnace.

During the winter months, the large furnace, which puts off approximately 40,000 lbs. of steam per hour, is used for the college's heat and hot water. During the summer, a smaller oil furnace is used for the school's needs. Since the small furnace is inadequate for winter needs, one of the coal furnaces had to be fired up to provide auxiliary power. It requires eight hours to bring the coal furnace on line, resulting in the lack of hot water. Curry and Frazier did not suffer the woes of cold water because of their large capacity hot water storage tanks.

volume consists of one long poem written in a kind of American terza rima, and the effect is quite orchestral. Images are introduced, let slide, phrases picked up, dropped; this occurs throughout the poem, so that quotation is nearly impossible here. No one section is really completed by itself, but rather interconnects with every other piece in the book. It is with this work that Sorrentino's affinities with Black Mountain start to dissolve. Where he catches fire is in the breach, in transit, from Black Mountain to France. This occurs around 1971 with the publication of Corrosive Sublimate, perhaps his finest collection, line by line, poem by poem, where a perfect balance is struck. A poem like "Coast of Texas, 1-18" combines Apollinaire's vision of Texas with the lean colloquial lines of Williams and Creeley, and the poem comes out uniquely Sorrentino's.

Most of the seventies are focused on writing fiction, and he evolves from being a poet who writes the occasional novel — although he'd already published three of them — to being considered a serious contemporary fiction writer. Three books of poetry are published toward the end of that decade, and they continue to employ Sorrentino's own interpretations of Baudelaire's correspondences of images as well as introducing some aspects from the fiction — farce and more satire; the attitude of the Nuclear Weapons — A Deterrent?

By GAIL SHANNON

On Tuesday, Nov. 10 at 8 p.m. in the Virginia Room, Drs. Raymond E. Hunter and Delmar W. Bergen, physicists at the Los Alamos National Laboratory, spoke to a group of 61 people on the development of nuclear weapons and non-weapon research. The group in attendance was comprised of students and faculty of Longwood and Hampden-Sydney and a reporter, John Clement, of the Richmond Times-Dispatch. Dr. James Jordan, president of the Longwood-Hampden-Sydney chapter of Sigma Xi Scientific Research Society, opened the lecture by explaining the background of Sigma Xi and the introducing Dr. Ray Fawcett, professor of physics at Longwood. Dr. Fawcett, who worked at Los Alamos National Laboratory during the summer of 1981, had invited the two physicists to speak at Longwood on their trip to Washington, D.C. In Fawcett's introduction of the two scientists, he stated their credentials, some of their background, and their interests.

Dr. Hunter began the presentation with slides showing pictures of the Laboratory and the surrounding location, and the history of the location. The laboratory was built in 1943 and was used for the Manhattan Project and by the Army until 1945, from 1947-75 by the Atomic Energy Commission, from 1975-77 by the Energy Research and Development Administration and from 1977-present by the Dept. of Energy. Most of the employees at Los Alamos come from universities and the AEC contracted with the University of California to run Los Alamos.

Los Alamos has moved away from pure weapons research and today about one half of its $400 million budget is now spent for non-weapons research. Part of this research is done on energy of which controlled fusion and geothermal is only part. Scientists at the lab are also working with meson research which can be used to kill cancer. Meson differs from radiation in that it decays only the cancer cells and leaves the well tissue intact, unlike radiation which harms all tissue.

According to Dr. Hunter, no new nuclear weapons have been built at Los Alamos since the war. Today, the weapons are designed there based on governmental requirements and built elsewhere.

"Los Alamos has two responsibilities", says Dr. Hunter, "to develop new warheads as the department develops the requirements and the maintenance of stockpiles presently in existence." Los Alamos has to maintain a surveillance of the weapons comprised of spot checks on weapons as a whole and on different parts of weapons. Weapons are taken apart to make sure they are operable, parts replaced, and at times weapons are exploded. According to Hunter, this surveillance is designed to "make certain they don't go off when they're not intended to and do when they are." Hunter admitted that they do not know everything that may occur because they do not know the properties of materials under the extreme heat and fast action the materials undergo. Thus, constant tests and calculations must be kept up.

Dr. Bergen began by stating that the two men were speaking for themselves as scientists and not as politicians. He said that by maintaining the weapons program, the U.S. is doing two things, maintaining a credible deterrent to ensure our political and democratic freedom and avoiding a technological surprise. By not maintaining the weapons program, Bergen feels we would alter the balance between ourselves and Russia, the two world powers. By maintaining our system, he feels we keep up the deterrent against Russia and maintain our technological base which he sees as second to none. Bergen says that since World War II, we have found ourselves in four different categories as far as balance of power is concerned. After the war until 1951, Los Alamos was almost dismantled but was reinstated after the Russians detonated a nuclear warhead. The reinstatement was a countering of the Russian threat. From 1952-76 was the Threat of Massive Retaliation. In 1976 came the Era of Equality which Bergen sees as lasting until 1984 when we will enter the Window of Vulnerability. He sees this as possibly closing in 1988 if we catch up on our technology. The Window of Vulnerability has come about because the U.S. has been engaged in updating its labs and weapons systems in the last few years.

Bergen says that Congress has begun changing its mind about updating the weapons because of Russia's converting to an aggressive role in their sea theater and weapons development.

Dr. Bergen stressed several times in his presentation that the weaponry developed by the U.S. is as a deterrent only. According to him, "Our weapon system is suited for defense purposes only and does not have a first strike capability." After an explanation of the neutron bomb, he said, "I don't want to tear up the country I live in. The weapons I design must be safe in a non-weapon role. I don't want to have a weapon go off that is high yield nuclear and will spread plutonium everywhere."

At the end of the presentation the audience was allowed to ask questions. When asked if we could win at a limited nuclear war, Bergen replied that it would be impossible to hold it to a limited war and no one would win. He also stated that for us to strike first would be suicidal. Bergen stated that our major threat is strictly Russian and from their land forces and armor divisions. "If they can't use conventional weapons in a situation, they'll have to start a nuclear war. The neutron bomb gives us the option of neutralizing forces outside our own country." In answering a question on the Europeans, their reaction to the bomb, and what type of radioactive fallout is involved, Bergen said that the type of radioactivity left behind depends on what the neutrons interact with. When answering a question on the antiballistic missile, Hunter said, "If there is a technological way to prevent another country from doing damage to you, you don't need any strategic weapons." Bergen feels that "the best deterrent to war is to show people how to love each other and get along."

Mrs. Savage, a retired English and Philosophy teacher at Longwood College died Sunday, November 1, at her home in Farmville, Va. She was 65 years old.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ogletree Barnes, Mrs. Savage was born April 13, 1916 in Langston, Alabama.

In 1961 she came to Longwood College and served as a faculty member for twenty years. She was a member of the International Conference of Philosophy Department and the American Association of University Women and American Association of University Professors. She was also a patron of the former Southern Culture Program at Longwood College and was a contributor to numerous professional magazines.

Anthropology Film Features Bushmen

The final film in this year's Anthropology Film Series will be screened Wednesday, November 18, beginning at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium. The Anthropology Film Series, now in its fourth year, is sponsored by the Department of Sociology and Anthropology and is a presentation of classic films focusing on the culture and styles of lives of people in societies other than our own or on people in prehistoric times.

"THE HUNTERS" is a film study of 13 days in the life of a hunting band of Kung Bushmen. The Kung live in the Kalahari Desert in southern Africa. They number about 55,000 and are unique culturally in that they speak a "click" language which contains sounds not found in any other language in the world. "THE HUNTERS" focuses on a chase after a giraffe which the Bushmen have wounded with a small poison arrow. Nearly two weeks are spent tracking the wounded and sick animal until the final scene when it is finally trapped by the hunters.

Dr. James William Jordan, Associate Professor of Anthropology and Director of the Longwood Summer Field School in Archeology, will provide a brief introduction to the film. All films in the Anthropology Film Series are free and open to the public.

Hungate Exhibit

Robin Hungate will be exhibiting her work in the Showcase Gallery November 14-23. Robin, a senior, is an art major with a concentration in drawing. "I got into art in high school," said Robin. "I enjoyed it and decided to make it my major."

Extracurricular activities for Robin include being a member of the women's basketball team all four years here. Also, she has worked on various designs for different organizations. She has done many cover designs on such program covers as Freshman Production, basketball, and orientation. She also did the Oktoberfest logo for the past two years as well.

The types of work Robin will be hanging in the exhibit include prints, drawings in charcoal and pencil, and water color. The pencil drawing entitled "Natalie" is her favorite piece in the show. She said, "It is the best piece I have done in pencil." Most of her work is for sale. The titles of some of her other work in the show include: 'Still Life', 'Basketball', a wood block, 'Pineapple Delight', 'Barn' and 'Rotunda'.

Art Symposium

By TAMMY PORTER

Longwood College's Art Department will be sponsoring a symposium exploring the technical properties and usage of artists' materials on Sunday, November 22, from 6:00 to 9:00 p.m. The demonstration which is open to the public free of charge will be held in Bedford Auditorium.

Ronald Jon Sachs, both an artist and a teacher, will be the guest speaker. He is best known for his work in art conservation and the chemistry of artists paints. Mr. Sachs has worked on America's national heritage of paintings at the National Archives, the United States Senate Building and the House of Representatives. Also, he has worked for various museums and internal private collections.

After attending Grumbacher's laboratory facilities in New York, Mr. Sachs will be teaching with a concentration in art applications rather than style, and he will demonstrate characteristics inherent in the various media available to artists. While introducing the mechanics of problem solving, he will also discuss both standard and esoteric properties of oil, acrylic, and watercolor; supports such as canvas, paper, and other types of board; ancillary materials such as mediums, oil, and varnishes; and proper selection and use of brushes, palette, and painting knives.

Questions may be asked throughout the presentation.

A brand new week end is in store for Longwood this year. The Student Union has spent a lot of time and energy in the planning and organization of the Holiday Week end scheduled for this coming Friday and Saturday.

It begins Friday night, November 20th at 8:00 p.m. with a totally new form of entertainment called the Lankford Party. Featured in this evening will be the talents of Nina Kahle, a brilliant singer composer, and pianist, not to mention comedienne who will be making her third performance at Longwood. Nina's other performances at Longwood, include her appearances with such celebrities as John Prine, Gene Cotton, Tom Chapin and Jose Feliciano, along with hundreds of other college appearances. She has recorded two television commercial ads for Gillette's Silkience Shampoo products which feature the title song from her album, "Deep, Down and Real." This album, released on Lifesong Records in July 1981, received outstanding comments in a review featured in the September 7, 1981 issue of People Magazine, and other such reviews have appeared in Variety Magazine, Cashbox, and Record World. A single released from Nina's album also won Billboard Magazine's "Pick of the Week" in the third week of this past June. Her album's most recent review will appear in the December issue of Stereo Review, where it has won the title of "Album of the Month."

Along with the many talents of Nina Kahle, the Lankford Party will also feature Casino Unlimited in the Green Room. Casino Unlimited is operated like a real casino, but uses play money instead of real money and prizes are awarded to the top winners. The games included in the casino are crap tables, black jack tables, chuck-a-luck tables, and wheel of fortune. There will also be coffeehouse entertainment with Joanne Mosca and Sue Wilkinson in the snack bar where special food items will also be served. There will be a Pub in the Red and White rooms and there will be free bowling and pool in the recreation room as well as other activities. This evening ends with the showing of the Muppet Movie in the Gold Room at Midnight. The admission for the entire evening will be $2.00 for Longwood students and $3.50 for guests.

The annual S-UN Holiday dance will be held on Saturday night. This semi-formal-formal dance featuring the sounds of the Little Big Band, is the only semi-formal-formal dance sponsored each year by S-UN. The Little Big Band has played at parties and concerts up and down the East Coast. Their music consists of revitalized swing tunes as well as many others have promoted people to dancing. Their costumes, music and antics on stage combine to make them a "good time band." Admission will be $5.50 per couple and it will be held in the Lower Dining Hall from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. An optional Midnight Breakfast will be served following dance. The breakfast will be held in the Snack Bar for $4.00 per couple.

Tickets and additional information on the Holiday Week end can be obtained in the S-UN Office. The Student Union Committee is proud to be the sponsor of such a week end and would like to invite all of you to participate in these upcoming activities.

Oriental Art Sale

About 800 art pieces will be exhibited and for sale in the Bedford art building from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Wednesday, November 18, 1981. Marson Ltd., from Baltimore, Maryland is bringing the art pieces from Japan, Tibet, India, China and Thailand. Some prints date as far back as the 18th and 19th century, and some of the artists are Hiroshige, Kuniyosha, and Kunisada. The more recent art work includes woodcuts, lithographs, etchings, serigraphs, and mezzotints. A representative from the company will be at the exhibit to answer any questions about the art work, the artists, and the techniques used.

The art work will be shown in the first floor hallway of the art building, and there is a wide price range on the items.

Viewpoint

It might be interesting to note, that our nuclear defense policy which was originally MAD (Mutually Assured Destruction) has shifted its basis to one of possible limited nuclear warfare. Thus the development of the highly accurate MX missile system and the highly unpopular neutron bomb. Of course military strategists view a limited warfare scenario as so much rubbish, the main point is they think the Russians don't. In fact, if Richard Pipes a member of the National Security Council and Harvard professor is to be believed, the USSR views the use of nuclear weaponry as an extension of politics — just like any other form of warfare, in which low level nuclear exchanges might go on for a considerable period of time.

Now I don't pretend to be an expert on politics and particularly not in the area of nuclear warfare, but it seems to me that if the USSR wanted to acquire some more real estate they would find a more congenial way of doing so, without resorting to the employment of their nuclear arsenals.

Of course I still haven't figured out why they would want any more territory in the first place. Haven't they got enough trouble at home without going out and looking for more problems. I mean look at the mess they got themselves into over Afghanistan — and for what? A bunch of cloaked snipers, who live off of berries and smoke opium for godfakes.

And take for instance the U.S.A. Now, why in the world would the soviets want to rule the U.S.A. We'd make really lousy communists. A pack of hedonistic, self centered, GDI's that can barely decide on a president and when we do he's a jelly bean eating, ex-cowboy, who wears enough make up to put Cheryl Tieggs to shame.

But, just for the sake of this column, let's suppose they really do want a piece of our action. I find it hard to believe that they'd bomb us off the map and then traipse in and claim all those nagging refugee's and downright ugly cities (what's left of them) as their own. No, I think they would find a subtler method of coup d'etat. In fact, following this idea I believe I've developed a plausible theory on how the USSR might actually take over the U.S.A.

It would start with an infiltration of KGB Agents planted in the USA over a long period of time. Slowly the "moles" would work their way into the civil service, and dig their way into the heart of the system. They would spread from this center over the entire arena of Federal Agencies. Then, at an appointed hour (everyone would synchronize their watches) they would encourage waste and solvency in activity. They would let the secretaries gossip over the phone and force everyone to issue memos and do all forms in triplicate. Steadily the U.S. government would grind to a halt. All Brezhnev would

The Art of Being a Redneck

Audience: Anybody but rednecks

By GRAHAM FOWLKES

As time goes by and the disco fad and the preppy rage falls by the wayside and out of style, there stands alone that style of person that has withstood the test of time, the American redneck.

The redneck is a much maligned person in society. Preppies put him down saying that he is "uppy" and "scuzzy," but even they have a little redneck in themselves.

To be a redneck, you must have the right equipment. Clothes would be a good start. For the feet you must have a pair of white acrylic socks bought at your local Dollar General Store, fitted on top by a pair of beat-up cowboy boots or "fishhead" tennis shoes. Faded jeans, preferably with patches at regular intervals, are a must, if you want to be authentic. A flannel or t-shirt must be worn under an old army coat or trucker's vest. Then to top it off, the all-important baseball cap with motor oil on it to give you that air of prestige is essential.

For transportation you will need a Chevelle SS with mag wheels and straight pipes. This car is the ultimate mode of propulsion for a redneck. The paint job must be unfinished, as the unsanded and unpainted spots give the car that sleek redneck look. The car must also be equipped with a very loud stereo system capable of injecting country and western music into anyone's conversation at one hundred paces.

Now you are just about ready to go. After assembling all your buddies together in the car, make sure you take off with tires squealing and tailpipes emitting lots of toxic fumes and oily smoke. The first stop is the local hangout. After making sure everyone is outside in the parking lot, announce your presence by applying the brakes very hard and then proceed to cruise through the parking lot with loud music playing; to look very tough. If the manager comes out to run you off, greet him with obscenities and then pat yourself on the back, for you have succeeded in becoming an American redneck!

IAA Spotlighted

The Intramural Activities Association tries to offer a wide variety of activities extending from basketball to spades.

Each dorm, sorority and fraternity has an IAA representative to keep participants informed on present and upcoming events. Anyone can participate in these events. The IAA meetings have been changed to Thursday nights from 7 to 7:30 p.m., and they're open to anyone who'd like to attend. These are held to discuss the winners of past events, what events are coming up, problems with officiating or rules, or any other IAA topic someone brings up.

Right now, the Volleyball tournament is in progress with 30 teams. Pool is also in progress with 22 men and 14 women participating. Men's bowling finals should be either November 18 or 19.

Swimming Relays are coming up. Entry blanks are due tomorrow (November 18), and a captain's meeting is Thursday (November 19) at 6:30 p.m. The swim meet will be held Tuesday, December 8, from 7-9 p.m.

SEA Reorganization

Cindy Campbell, Liza Meador and Lynn Crumpler are looking over the Longwood SEA constitution. Treasurer Linda Hall is away student teaching this semester.

On Wednesday, November 4, over 40 education majors met in the basement of Hiner to reorganize the Student Education Association. Officers elected were: President, Liza Meador; Vice-President, Cindy Campbell; Secretary, Lynn Crumpler; and Treasurer, Linda Hall. Co-sponsors for the SEA are Dr. Nancy Vick of the Education Department, and Dr. Anita Ernouf of the Foreign Language Department.

The speaker for the meeting was Helen Rolfe, State Consultant for the Student Virginia Education Association.

The SEA is looking forward to sending delegates to some upcoming conferences next semester. The Student National Education Association will be held in Washington, D. C. from February 2-6, 1982. On March 19-21, 1982, the Student Virginia Education Conference will be held in Doswell, Virginia.

A Conversation With W.C. Woods

Q — What is the John Dos Passos Prize?

A — A medal, some money, and an act of recognition.

Q — Can you tell us about the medal?

A — Well, you see what it looks like. It will be suspended from a blue ribbon on a white velvet field, and it's gold — at least, as far as the eye can travel. I might add that it's the only medal for the arts I've ever seen in which some art went into the design, though my judgement in the matter must be suspect. Have you ever seen the Nobel Prize? It looks like a big penny.

Q — Can you explain the symbolism of the medal?

A — I can say what I see in it. In the eagle, a reflection of the national stature we intend for the prize, as well as an echo of John Dos Passos's greatest book. The dome that flows into the wing provides the symbol of the College, and also suggests Dos Passos' lifelong interest in Jeffersonian ideals and architecture. The serpent that rings all this is, of course, an ancient symbol of creativity and rebirth, an archetype. But I must admit that as far as I'm concerned this web of meaning is less appealing than the calculated roughness of the composition itself — like a new look at an old coin.

Q — It is striking. What about the money?

A — What about the money.

Q — How much is it?

A — One thousand dollars.

Q — Is that a lot of money for a literary award and where does the money come from?

A — Well, I think it's a nice piece of change. It's what the National Book Award used to be. On the other hand, the new MacArthur Foundation awards run into the hundreds of thousands each, while in Spain there's a prestigious artistic contest in which first prize is a rose. The College can be proud of backing the prize with a substantial sum, but I think the real value of the John Dos Passos Prize lies in a linking of names.

The 1980 prize was funded by the Longwood College Foundation, the '81 Prize through the Dean's office. That includes the honorarium and other expenses, like the medal and transportation and so forth.

A — Did I understand you to say that the Longwood College Foundation supported the Prize in 1980 but not in 1981?

A — Yes.

Q — Why is that?

A — The best I can tell you is that the Foundation chose to meet other worthy calls on their resources this year. On the plus side, that prompted a very forceful expression of support from both the President and the Dean, who considered the prize important enough to provide alternate funding for 1981. Obviously, we will need a more stable base for the future, which I'm confident the developing success of the prize will attract.

Q — By success you mean...

A — In this instance, I mean success for the College. One must be both cautious and candid here. A prize founded primarily to enhance the reputation of the donor is rightly an object of scorn. That's why the independence of the jury is so important, and it's why a controversial choice might be welcome. But Longwood is not a large or wealthy institution, and I think we're quite entitled to the benefits the prize will bring us.

Q — What are they?

A — The immediate benefits include (1) the presence on campus of an important writer who will not only give a reading, but also perhaps be available to students in classes and at social occasions; and (2) the kind of national attention that little else we do is likely to gain us. Last year, with no more than a quickly improvised public relations effort, the story of the prize was featured in news stories all over the country and in Europe as well. This year, we have had a much more massive distribution of information and are no doubt enjoying concomitantly larger coverage. Which I'm delighted by. I'm sure all of us are.

Q — What else do you see us doing?

A — Redefining our existing writing workshops in fiction, non-fiction, and poetry to meet both student needs and this stated ambition; establishing a summer creative writing program along the lines of the Bennington workshops; and founding a literary magazine like, say, Shenandoah or the Virginia Quarterly Review.

Q — What's the actual merit of literary prizes — I mean commercially, as well as for writer's egos?

A — The jury seems to be out on that. Back in August, the Washington Post published an interesting article that looked into the question and came up with mixed results. Publishers seem unanimously agreed that prizes, even the most prestigious prizes, do little or nothing to enhance sales. Writers who win then tend to enjoy them and those who don't always have good reasons why they didn't. But it seems to me that prizes for writers that are named for writers may have a special value, the linking of names I talked about. The new PEN-Faulkner Award is another example. Of course, it depends on the winner. Frankly, I thought that giving the Dos Passos Award to Graham Greene — last year's winner — was overkill: a little like establishing the Plato Award and giving it to Aristotle, all proportions kept.

Q — You consider this year's winner a lesser writer?

A — No, but perhaps a better choice: a less famous writer, and thus a more deserving one. It's easy enough to rub two great names together. At the same time, I'm not insensitive to the

---Movie Review---

By JOE JOHNSON

F. Scott Fitzgerald and Ernest Hemingway were once sitting in a bar, chatting amiably on the different aspects of their writing. Fitzgerald, as usual, preoccupied with his study of high society commented that "the rich are different from you and I." Hemingway not looking up from his drink, replied drily "Yes they are different... they have more money."

Hemingway's clear cut response seems particularly applicable to "Rich and Famous," Jacquet-William Allyn production. One might guess, from its title, that the movie is an elevated Flamingo Road or a Dallas without J.R. to some degree, one could even argue, it is. The story contains all the elements for an insipid soap sud, including such notorious events as divorce, an unconsecrated love triangle, and an 18-year-old daughter who runs off with a Rolling Stone writer to interview Fleetwood Mac.

However, John Van Druten, who wrote the original play from which the movie was derived, managed to avoid the common trap falls of monotony or worse mannequinity, by letting the characters tell the story, rather than the story dictate the characters. In fact trying to find a cohesive plot in this movie is like trying to discover who killed Diana Taylor — a futile activity. There is no single thread, but the characters' actions, which are accurately timed and (believe it or not) truthful to their personalities.

Jacqueline Bisset and Candice Bergen play the lead roles of two old college friends reunited in a common field — writing. Liz (Bisset) is a highly polished intellectual authoress, who quotes D.H. Lawrence and T.S. Elliot with a slight English accent. She is famous, but in her own circles, and desires explanations more than glorification. Mary (Bergen) could and should write for National Enquirer. She flaunts outlandish flowered dresses (the ugly American on tour variety) and words from her mouth are like "A snake from its hole" (her husband's brief metaphor aptly describing Mary's darker side — bet you can guess who gets divorced). For her, life consists of cocktail parties and pianos in front of fireplaces.

Director George Cukor has done some interesting work with film splicing. In one memorable scene Jacqueline and a rather despicable "divorce" intertwine limbs in the john of a 747. While the camera shifts, with maniacal swiftness, from landing gear to love scene, from moans of passion to the scream of reverse thrust, the viewer is left with an ultra-vivid impression of the intensity of her life. She is the proverbial egg in a pressure cooker.

Given the opposite directions of the authoress' personalities it is difficult to understand Druken's pursuit in this movie. Is he outlining the classic dilemma of commercialism versus art? Is he ravaging the materialistic goals of 1980 man, and the superficial "means" relationships which spring from such endeavors?

Probably not. Although some of this does come through, Druken is more concerned with humans as humans and Bisset and Bergen do a fine job of bringing this point across. Their roles, which could so easily have fallen into archetypal tirades were elevated, not so much by the lines (although credit is certainly owed to Gerald Ayres for a tantalizing dialogue) but the actresses' characterization, their emotions which were pushed to the very edge of realism, but weren't carried to a melodramatic extreme — in short, their very excellent acting abilities.

What made this movie was what Druken didn't do. He didn't show materialistic values corrupting a childhood

Part II of Cold, Hard and Electric

Last week we talked about New Wave and the conspicuous yet limited beginning of Britain's newest invasion. In America though, Britain's Army of New Wave led originally by Elvis Costello and others, didn't receive the mass welcome they probably expected.

But what the New Wave had was a vibrance, a fresh approach that was sorely needed. In Boston, there appeared a group that almost overnight became a smashing success on one album:

The Cars. Their first album is an absolute delight.

They had, though, the same problem as the group Boston in that a lot of their follow-up albums sounded like the same songs with different lyrics.

But others were quick to pick-up on the cue, notably Tom Petty who crossed Dylanesque vocals with a lean, mean band. Petty's songs range from the scorching number "Woman in Love" to more sedate numbers like "Here Comes My Girl". Billy Joel and Linda Rodnstadt also converted their acts to New Wave (these "conversions" smell of commercialism despite Joel's fine "Glass Houses")

In the process of expansion, New Wave, as it started, got lost. It seemed to lose its original intention. What had started as a blatantly anti-commercial movement was quickly becoming a commercial success, not that success is bad, (in fact I'm constantly amazed at New Wave fans who will dismiss a song just because the artist is popular), but perversion of a good thing is always a loss.

But recently things have begun to change. New groups are coming, but now they have one thing earlier groups like the Sex Pistols, lacked: talent.

As much as some may want to deny it, it takes talent to make a group work, not just a flair for showmanship or anger or a "certain beat." Many of the New Wave bands had begun to sound like (unintentional) parodies of each other. And more often than not, the sound became more and more restricting. The best bands, the strongest survivors, always have a talent and this is why most of the frontal group has not succeeded.

But help is on the horizon, one of them being the Clash, an incredible band out of England.

Not only is the clash one of freshest groups but their songwriting is fantastically well done. "London Calling", their best album to date has got to be one of the most superlative albums of the late seventies. But they are not the best...

The best group to hit America in recent memory is maybe one of the best, most appealing groups ever. No, just not the most appealing of the New Wave, they are possibly the best of 11 bands working today...the band is Split Enz.

Two albums have been released in America: True Colors (which produced the single "I Got You") and their release of this past summer: Waiata. Both are fantastic albums and if you don't own them run, don't walk to your nearest record store and buy them. Then let your ears feast...because you've probably forgotten how well songs can be written.

Split Enz has a freshness with harmony and melody that is reminiscent of the Beatles, a vocal tightness that is unattainable by most groups and their songs range from folly to heartache.

At their best (which they almost always are) they remind people of what rock is about — fun and experience.

Their personnel is unique, including an inventive percussionist and the best keyboardist working today. Their approach takes the best of New Wave and combines it (with stunning effectiveness) good melody — something the B-52's will never comprehend.

Split Enz is easily the best of the New Wave. I could describe all their songs on paper but that isn't nearly enough, you have to hear them. The magic of "Iris" or the emotionally charged "Nobody Takes Me Seriously" can easily transcend paper. Split Enz is the great hope for music, no matter which "Wave". Next week, a talk with a New Wave — mania victim, Part III of Cold, Hard and Electric.

Sprinkle Player of Week

From Sports Info

Freshman goalkeeper Brian Sprinkle (OLNEY, MD) has been chosen Longwood College Player of the Week for the period November 6-13. Sprinkle's outstanding play in Longwood's 4-1 soccer victory over Hampden-Sydney earned him the honor, which is chosen each week by the Sports Information Office.

Sprinkle, who has shared goalkeeping duties with two other Lancer booters, compiled a fine 1.63 goals against average for the

Soccer Whips Hampden-Sydney 4-1

By MICHAEL LYNCH

The Longwood College Soccer team closed out the season with a convincing 4-1 win over the Hampden-Sydney College Soccer team last Monday night before a good-sized Iler Field crowd. The win makes Longwood's final record 11-4-3, preserves Longwood's claim to The Farmville Herald Challenge Cup for another year and keeps the Lancers on top of what has become an intense school rivalry.

The first few minutes of the game certainly gave no indication of what the outcome would be, for Hampden-Sydney started out on the attack. Forwards, Tommy Adkins and Kwasi Bofo were downfield quickly and before Longwood could send the ball back a header had struck the top bar of the Longwood goal leaving notice that before Longwood could come up with the win that they were picked to secure, they must control these two forwards along with the rest of Hampden-Sydney players who were showing their desire for an upset.

The only goal of the half was scored by Longwood's Gustavo Leal, unassisted, when he got possession of the ball on the end-line beside the goal, maneuvered out a couple of yards to where he could take a shot and sent the ball past some defenders where it ricocheted off one of them on its way in, eliminating whatever chance Hampden-Sydney's goalie, Chip Johnson, had to stop it.

After the score, Longwood really started pressing. It was at this time that Leal, Dave Via, Bill Foster and other Lancers sent most of Longwood's 20 first half shots at the Hampden-Sydney goal. A couple of shots hit the post and a Foster direct-kick just barely missed the goal to the left after having gone by four Tiger defenders.

Hampden-Sydney got things going again late in the half and threatened to score before the half ended. On one occasion, the Tigers were set up for a direct-kick and at the moment Longwood's wall was incomplete, giving the Tigers a good chance to score. But the referee would not let play resume due to being conferred upon by Joe Parker while Longwood was quickly setting up its wall. Whether Parker meant to stall for time or not, that is what happened and when play did resume Longwood was prepared for the Hampden-Sydney attack and successfully contained it. The half ended with Hampden-Sydney looking good but with no points to show for their efforts.

Hampden-Sydney took up where they left off to begin the second half, making several quick strikes down the field. Although no really organized attack was involved, they were getting the ball down quickly but once down there, they were usually outnumbered by Longwood's defense. On one occasion, though, this was not the case. Hampden-Sydney's Jeff Mencini caught up with the ball deep in Longwood territory, got past the last defender with his momentum and put in a wide open shot that Longwood goalie, Brian Sprinkle, did not even attempt to block.

What Longwood needed was a score to settle things down. What they got was two goals within a minute and 19 seconds of each other. The first was by Gustavo Leal who took a Dana Gregg pass with his back to the last Hampden-Sydney defender, maneuvered to the side of the man long enough for a shot and smashed one in to end a nice looking play. Darryl Case put the second one in on a long kick that was just plain beautiful to watch, going exactly where it had to to score.

Longwood was now up 3-1 and, in two quick scores, had broken the spirit that had kept Hampden-Sydney going up until that point. The icing on the cake was Tim Brennan's penalty-kick goal that made the score 4-1, and basically wrapped the game up. All that the Lancers had to do now was hold on to the ball and stall for time, the last 15 minutes of the game, and then celebrate "sweet victory!", which they did flawlessly.

It was a good way to end the season and there is no doubt about it that Longwood had a great season. The statistics tell the story. Team shots — 494 (school record), team goals — 62 (school record), wins — 11 (school record), 10 goals in one game (school record), individual goals — Gus Leal with 22 (school record).

"Brian is a freshman with a great amount of talent," said Coach Rich Posipanko. "He should develop into one of the top goalkeepers in the state as he gains more college experience."

Sprinkle had extensive soccer experience before coming to Longwood at Sherwood High School in Sandy Spring, MD and on various club teams. Captain of the Sherwood team last season, Brian also played for soccer club teams from Silver Spring, Olney and Washington.

A Psychology major, Sprinkle is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Sprinkle of Olney, MD.

Ladies Basketball Wins Opener

By MICHAEL LYNCH

The Longwood Lady Lancers Basketball team, although shaky at times, scored 19 unanswered points in the first half and shot 50 per cent in the second half of their season opener to beat the Hampton Institute Lady Pirates 72-63, Thursday night before 400 at Lancer Hall.

Longwood started out the game in a player-to-player defense but after allowing five quick points by the Lady Pirates they switched to a zone that they used for the rest of the game. The Lady Lancers' first few trips down the floor resulted in nothing. Their passes were rather errant, they did not take many good shots and they seemed to have trouble figuring out how to beat a tight Hampton Institute zone. A few more times, later in the game, Longwood would have similar episodes of ineptness, where nothing would seem to go right. Head coach, Jane Miller, probably had these times in mind when she declared her team's overall performance as "a little ragged."

The Lady Lancers eventually found a way to take advantage, though, and for a while they put the Lady Pirates at a standstill, allowing them no more points until more than halfway through the first half. Guard, Robin Powell started regularly beating Hampton's full-court press, mostly on her own, until Hampton abandoned this defense. Thus, improved defense and ball handling, almost total control of the boards and valuable contributions from substitutes, Paige Moody (five points in a very short time) and Florence Holmes (five rebounds) opened up a 19-5 lead which went on to become a 25-11 lead, with 6:20 left in the half, before Hampton started coming back.

Led by Toni Goodman, who came off the bench to get six points and eight rebounds for the half, the Lady Pirates closed to within four points at the two-minute mark and ended the half just eight points down 31-23. It was another episode of Longwood's mysterious missing offense in which they scored only six points in six and a half minutes and turned the ball over numerous times. If things kept going the way they had during the last minutes of the half, Hampton would stand a good chance of a comeback victory.

In the first few minutes of the second half, Hampton charged again. They repeated their first half start, getting five unanswered points and closing to within three at 31-28.

But then, maybe feeling that the Lady Pirates were a little too close for comfort, Longwood got back on track and opened up a 39-30 lead by 16:30 left with excellent play by Florence Holmes who shot 75 per cent from the floor, scored 15 points in the second half and led the team in rebounds and Cindy Eckel with 10 points and five rebounds for the half. After this, the Lady Lancers kept around a 10-point margin for the rest of the contest by shooting 50 per cent from the floor and getting some fast breaks going.

The game was exciting to the end (thank God for that 30 second clock) and the final score was 72-63 Longwood, almost half of their points coming from Cindy Eckel and Florence Holmes (17 apiece). Although they had won the game, the Lady Lancers were still not satisfied with their performance. Robin Powell brought up the suggestion that one reason for their inconsistency might have been some "opening day jitters" and it was generally agreed that passing and defense need work. But when they played well, they showed much ability. And if they consistently play their best basketball in the future, they could have quite an impressive season.

Holmes

Early Leader

From Sports Info.

Freshman Florence Holmes (King George) is the early season leader in scoring and rebounding for Longwood. The 5-10 forward scored 17 against Hampton and 14 against Richmond while grabbing 19 rebounds. Holmes is averaging 15.5 points and 9.5 rebounds while shooting 52 per cent from the floor.

Forward Cindy Eckel (S. Plainfield, NJ) is close behind Holmes in scoring with a 13.3 average.

Gymnasts open at home

From Sports Info

Coming off a 9-2 season a year ago and an 8-1 campaign the season before, Longwood's gymnastics team opens its season Saturday night in Lancer Hall when Navy pays a visit for a 6:00 meet.

Coach Ruth Budd has another young, but talented team. The coach is counting on returnees Kathy Idelson (Annapolis, Md.), Monica Chandler (Sterling), Kim Pickel (Flanders, N.J.) and Sherri Meeks (Virginia Beach) to provide much-needed experience.

Top newcomers are Kelly Crepps (Hampton) and Dayna Hankinson (Springfield), both USGF Class I gymnasts with exceptional talent.

Wrestlers Look For Success

By RONNIE BROWN

Longwood Wrestling Coach Steve Nelson, who is in his second year at the helm, feels that this year's squad has the most talent in the history of Longwood Wrestling, but admits that this season's schedule is also the most demanding.

"We have 10 Division I schools on our schedule," said Nelson. "It is my philosophy that the only way to get talented athletes is to provide a schedule that they can appreciate in the future."

Longwood has only one returnee from last year's 3-12 squad, but Nelson has four new grapplers who could make a significant contribution this season. Sophomore David Dodd (Richmond), 150 pounds, will be joined by freshmen Steve Albeck (Springfield) 142, Charles Campbell (Alexandria 142 or 150, Mike Hackett (Stafford) 118 and sophomore junior college transfer Dana Dunlap (Fairfax)

167.

Nelson's squad has strength in the 118, 142 and 167 pound classes, but like last season will be lacking size.

"We have a hard time attracting big kids," said Nelson. "Last year we had to forfeit a lot of weight classes, and I'm afraid we will have the same problem this year." Junior Bill Klink (Williamsburg) heavyweight, who wrestled for the Lancers two years ago, is Longwood's only wrestler over the 177-pound mark.

Nelson is aware of the obstacles that face the wrestling team, but hopes to better last year's 3-12 record. "We have a young team with no upperclass leadership, but the wrestlers are enthusiastic and want to prove they are winners," said the coach. "We have a lack of depth and cannot afford any injuries."

Coach Nelson feels if the newcomers mature and everyone stays healthy, the grapplers can have a successful season. "I hope we can be at least .500 and beat Hampden-Sydney, who beat us last year," said Nelson. "Last season we sent one wrestler to the Regionals (NCAA Division II) and four of this year's players could have a chance."

The Lancers began the 1981-82 season Friday at the Monarch Tournament in Norfolk and travel to Lynchburg on October 20 for a match with the hosting Hornets. Longwood's first home contest is on Tuesday, October 24, against Richmond at 7:30. All home matches are held in Lancer Hall.

Ailing Cagers Face Tough Opener

From Sports Info

With its two tallest players hobbled by injuries, Longwood will open its 1981-82 basketball season on the road Saturday night against a team that defeated NCAA playoff qualifier James Madison last season.

New head coach Cal Luther will send his team against West Virginia Tech at 7:30 Saturday in Montgomery, WV. A year ago the Golden Bears finished 19-12 with an 82-80 triumph over JMU. Three starters are gone from that team, but the West Virginia school is expected to field another strong club.

"It will be a very difficult season opener for us," said Luther. "Not only will we be facing a rugged opponent, but we may not be at full strength Saturday night."

Luther's concern is caused by a foot ailment which has hit leading returning scorer and rebounder Jerome Kersey (CLARKSVILLE) and a knee problem which has sidelined freshman John Weber (PRINCE FREDERICK, MD). At 6-7, Weber and Kersey are Longwood's tallest cagers.

Kersey, who has not practiced recently, will find out Tuesday if he has a stress fracture. Weber's status for Saturday night is questionable because of an old knee injury.

Should Kersey be unable to play Saturday night sophomore Troy Littles (HALLANDALE, FL) will likely join veterans Ron Orr (ELIZABETH, NJ), Randy Johnson (RICHMOND), Joe Remar (ELIZABETH, NJ) and Mike McCroey (ARNOLD, MD) in the starting lineup. Without Kersey, Longwood's frontline would be 6-6 (Orr), 6-4 (Johnson) and 6-3 (Littles).

Luther expects 6-3 soph Paul Hatchett (PETERSBURG) and 5-10 junior Jim Sixsmith (N. BABYLON, NY) to be his top reserves. Sixsmith was a valuable reserve on last season's team while Hatchett played for the Lancer junior varsity a year ago.

"We have a lot of question marks as we approach the season," said Luther. "I'm not that familiar with our opponents and our players are still learning my system of offense and defense. Judging from practice, I'd say we have a long way to go."

Fortunately for Longwood, Kersey and Weber will get a chance to mend after Saturday. Following the West Virginia Tech contest, the Lancers don't resume play until December 1 when they face Division I Navy on the road.

While the preseason may be filled with unknowns, Luther is certain of one thing.

"While we may have some question marks, the attitude of our players has been super," said the coach. "The dedication and effort they have shown in workouts should pay off for us."

Sorrentino

angry young man changing into the pose of the bitter older one. In this new work readers may find there is not much of a gap between Gilbert Sorrentino and John Ashbery.

What remains from the early poems in a book like The Orangery (1978) are the colorations, now grown more lush. In "1939 World's Fair" there are images of "azure carillons", "mother's blue gloom", and "ice-grey death in Jersey City". Other poems exude colors like these as well, as in "Chez Macadam".

His burnt-orange slack suit glows with an elegance precisely mellow.

A woman in a dress a spanking white releases an enamel smile.

In these later examples I find Sorrentino's intelligence still superior, the craft seemingly etched on the page, and as one from another generation, a younger writer who admires all his work, I wonder why emotion must be gone to make a perfect poem. I leave the typewriter and go back to Yugen (1961) magazine, the former Leroy Jones' operation, and I look at Sorrentino's vitriolic, and mercilessly precise review of Lowell and Snodgrass, and I wonder again, How does all this fit? It certainly does not fit like a glove or shoe. There is too much hiatus from that time to this. The only answer I have is from Pound's Pisan Cantos: what thou lovest well remains; the rest is dross.

Besides his poetry and fiction Sorrentino is a skilled editor; this volume attests to his editorial skill, how he excludes from the early volumes, and rearranges, so that a tendency with the later poems is created. How do these styles fit? There! It happens. The shoe fits. Like his use of serial images, ideas pop up, plunge, and may emerge or not later. Often they don't; some do. In this way, too, Gilbert Sorrentino has built this body of work, and he's done it his own way, as a poet and novelist, so that seemingly disparate movements finally coalesce — correspond. And as I said in the beginning, these are not poems for them, but rather himself. It is an important selection, too, because it is the voice which drives the fiction, and this perhaps is what a novelist should sound like when he speaks to himself. This is what a novelist would sound like, if he were a poet as well. Few American writers are both of these, and none of them can be so cantankerous or self-effacing as this:

I have this enormous faith in dead forms

Especially the catalogue that gets you nowhere.

Although I don't think he'll ever go back to Black Mountain, or for that matter retrace any steps he's taken before, I hope Gilbert Sorrentino will come back from France, because he still lives in Greenwich village. Ah, what a funny, talented, strange man!

institutional wisdom of the initial selection. A prize may have value for the giver, too. What Longwood has done in founding this award is very much to the College's credit. Reflected glory isn't undeserved, and not without its uses.

Q — But the jump is confusing. Graham Greene and Gilbert Sorrentino. What do they have in common?

A — They've both won the John Dos Passos Prize.

Q — Come on.

A — Well, not a great deal. Greene is of advanced years and we must suppose his largest achievement is behind him. He's a technically conservative writer, essentially a novelist with a large popular following, who tends to explore the same problems — political, theological — in book after book. This is not a criticism: much of Mozart sounds alike. Sorrentino is in midcareer, a novelist and poet who's also been editor and publisher, and who sets himself new technical challenges from book to book. They haven't much in common. But what need is there that they should? Year by year, different juries will celebrate differing values in their choices, and in ten years we should have at least two winners who hate each other's work. This prize is a live wire, not a rubber stamp.

Q — All that sounds most interesting, but let me close by returning you to the present. What can you tell me about Gilbert Sorrentino?

A — He is a poet, novelist, and critic who has also been a magazine and book editor. He has achieved distinction in all these fields.

Q — What will he read tomorrow?

A — I don't know. But whatever he writes tends to brilliantly synthesize classical learning and discipline with an intense formalism resolved by street-wise scruffiness. The result is remarkable.

Q — He was a good choice for the prize, then.

A — I think a splendid choice. I can say that without self-praise, because it was the other jurors who led me to a close study of his work, with which I had had — until then — only a superficial familiarity.

Q — Still, his name doesn't seem to be a household word.

A — Which only means that most people get their information about literature from television and textbooks. Join me tomorrow night in changing that.

friendship. He didn't have Mary with mascara stained tears fling a shot glass into a mirror. He didn't have Liz run off with her best friend's husband. What he did do, was present a trailing network of loose ends and disintegrating relationships. Their only common bond being the simple loyalty of a very human friendship, with all the humor, sentiment and, at times, hatred, that accompany any long term intimacy.

Sorrentino Receives Dos Passos Award

Longwood College held its second annual presentation of the John Dos Passos Prize for literature on November 18 in the Molnar Recital Hall. The prize was awarded to Gilbert Sorrentino.

The ceremony began with an expression of appreciation for the support Dr. Greenwood and Dean Wells have given to the prize. Michael Stevens, a juror for the award, gave a brief introduction to Mr. Sorrentino's reading, emphasizing the diversity which is evident in his writing and reviewed his past works including Mulligan Stew which received national and international acclaim.

Mr. Sorrentino's reading was a "conscious attempt to bring into English the prose and technique of the French prose poem" by combining the essential strengths of the French poem with the straightforward prose of American writers. He stresses the objectivity of the poet when creating "pure art."

William C. Woods presented the award, which consisted of a medallion, designed by Pam Woods and a one thousand dollar check which Mr. Sorrentino accepted saying, "I am pleased to accept this in the name of John Dos Passos." Sorrentino concluded the ceremony in praise of John Dos Passos, "a great American author . . . who was very important to me."

Local Food Prices Drop

Local food shoppers enjoyed some welcome relief from inflation during the last month. Food prices at local stores have dropped a large four per cent since October.

This was the largest drop observed in Farmville area stores since the local market basket study was started two years ago.

Food prices dropped in all four areas of the state where market basket surveys are conducted, which followed a general national trend. The decline locally was the largest in the state, but food prices in Farmville are still slightly higher than they were in November of 1980.

Accounting for the sizable drop in the Farmville area were lower prices for bread, soda crackers, hamburger, pork chops, hot dogs, fryers, cheese, milk, ice cream, eggs, frozen orange juice, bananas, oranges, carrots, lettuce, potatoes, peaches, corn, peas, coffee, shortening, peanut butter, margarine, and sugar.

Higher prices were recorded for corn flakes, round steak, frozen haddock, tuna fish, evaporated milk, frozen green beans, apples, celery, tomatoes, tomato soup, cola drinks, and grape jelly. Items showing no change in price from the previous month were cabbage and onions.

The market basket study is a project of the Economics Seminar class at Longwood College. The study is under the direction of Dr. Anthony B. Cristo and is financially supported by the Longwood College Foundation.

worse. Alcohol use while on the job is a third group offense.

According to Swann, she sent Mann three separate letters warning him of his conduct. But, says Baynham, "He (Mann) felt the accusations were mere half truths, innuendos." Baynham asked Mann several times if he drank on duty and Mann avoided the question. Finally, he denied it. But Baynham checked out the allegations.

"I had to go back and double check," says Baynham. "I went to Dean Swann and she presented her documentation. In my opinion the discharge was in accordance with the policies and procedures established (by the state)."

Swann said she felt Mann was "Incompetent to serve in the capacity to serve for the position for which he was hired."

In an interview with an anonymous source that is a peer close to Mann, the source agreed with the decision made by Swann.

The position of Head Resident is currently held by Bill Todd.

Head Resident Dismissed

By MARK SEGAL

Frazer head resident Bob Mann was dismissed Tuesday November 10th by Dean Terry Swann. As all state employees are when first employed, Mann was under a six month probationary period. Any offenses committed during this period do not have "access to appeals", says T.L. Baynham, Director of Employee Relations.

Numerous charges were brought against Mann by his peers and residence hall staff employees. But the charge of drinking while on duty was substantial reason for dismissal, agreed Baynham and Swann in separate interviews. According to the Commonwealth of Virginia, Standards of (Employee) conduct, Mann committed a third group offense. There are three groups of offenses; the third being the

Shields Receives Artist of Month

By ILONA WILSON

The November Artist of the Month Award was presented to Mary Ruth Shields. She received this for her work Poetry Shawl, a four-harness loom weaving. It is done in a pattern weave invented by her using handspun wool, purchased wool blends, and hand-dyed cotton twine.

The second place winner is Guy DeLarente for work in Acrylic painting. Mixed Media Drawing placed Jeanne Pearson third.

Mary Ruth, a junior, won a Performance Scholarship in 1979 with work done in high school, as a freshman entering Longwood. She is a studio art major concentrating in drawing and 3-D design. Mary Ruth has been on the Gyre staff for two years and is now co-Art Editor. She placed third in the April 1981 Artist of the Month competition.

The idea for the weaving Mary did began in the realization that colors evoked poetic moods. Along with that was the idea of the Jewish prayer shawl (a tallis) as a reminder of spiritual awareness. This partially woven pattern with thick wrapped tassels and a nine-foot length of work are consistent with these two images.

Mary Ruth plans to continue her education with work on a project in felting during her senior year. After graduation, she would like to have an apprenticeship in the field of 3-Dimensional Design or fibers, or to begin graduate work.

Thirty suspected Irish Republican Army men were detained by authorities in Belfast. Police leave was cancelled for yesterday's "Day of Action" protest led by militant Protestant preacher Ian Paisley. The Ulster Defense Association, the largest Northern Ireland street army, rallied with the official Union Party who oppose Paisley's Democratic Unionist party.

Twenty-three of twenty-four fundamentalists charged in the alleged shooting of Anwar Sadat are on trial as proceedings opened last week. Three military judges in a heavily guarded courtroom will preside as the prosecution calls for the death penalty of each fundamentalist.

300,000 people protested in the streets of Amsterdam last week against nuclear arms and their deployment. It was the largest demonstration in Dutch history and the biggest in Western Europe this fall.

Congress battled time and each other in drafting an emergency spending bill that may save the government from bankruptcy. Financing of foreign aid and social programs are blocking the way to the White House; negotiations are still in progress.

"The dreaded threat of nuclear war" can be diminished if the U.S. and the Soviet Union reduce European-based missiles, said President Reagan in his speech last week. The oration was accepted in Western Europe although the Soviets accused Reagan of attempting to raise U.S. military superiority.

Justice Department officials have stepped up their investigation of Richard Allen, National Security Advisor. Discrepancies in evidence indicate he may have received $10,000 instead of $1,000 from a Japanese journalist. The cash was to go to an honorarium for Mrs. Reagan but Allen never turned it over to the first lady, but instead locked it up in a safe.

Holiday Weekend

Cold, Hard and Electric, part III
Last week, I had the pleasure of talking to two avid New Wave fans: Ken Gebbe and Fred Metz. Now wait, these guys weren't dressed in leather, they had no safety pins in their cheeks...

F.M.: Punk is what you make it. Sure, sometimes I "punk-out" and dress the part, but why do that all the time!

R.R.: What's going on in New Wave today — where's the action?

K.G.: L.A. is seven months ahead of the rest of the nation. Out there, a lot of bands play movie theatres and people go crazy over them. There a lot of good bands coming out of L.A.: Blackflag, the Go-Go's and X, which is headed by ex-Door's keyboardist, Ray Manzarek. Besides L.A., New York is another major center, and Britain of course.

R.A.: Isn't there a number of bands that are (like the Beatles in Liverpool) seeking a local emphasis?

F.M.: Sure, there are three or four bands in Virginia — like Nerve that are local... in fact last year they sold out at H-SC. The X-Rays are a similar case.

K.G.: A lot of bands don't want a major record company to take in their services under contract. What happens a lot is that the band loses all artistic direction and freedom under agreements with major labels. The Clash is an example, their songs are good but they've been forced to put out so many albums in such a short time that you have to wonder what would happen if they had a lot of time to concentrate on one album.

R.R.: What about New Wave fans that defect once a band gets popular?

F.M.: That's not always the case. Take the Tubes for instance. They're still popular with New Wave fans, so is Rick James, Squeeze and Split Enz. What we do dislike are those bands that aren't sincere, like Billy Joel, Linda Rondstadt. Devo has become a major disappointment and so have the B-52's. It seems they're more interested in the preppies than anything else.

R.R.: What makes good New Wave?

F.M.: "Danceability," a high-energy, exciting to be near. The lyrics also play a big part.

K.G.: New Wave seeks a close identification with the 1960's. If the Who released "My Generation" today, it would be New Wave. A lot of influence comes from the Doors. A number of songs are even becoming political.

R.R.: What new areas are New Wave probing?

F.M.: Well for one, female vocalists have a chance in New Wave. Take Chrissy Hynde of the Pretenders, for instance, a solid singer — she beats Pat Benatar hands-down. The Go-Go's and the Photos with Wendy Wu is another example.

K.G.: Punk plays to essentially the same sensibilities as heavy metal. It's violent, high energy and quite often painfully realistic. We just take a different route, simply because it plays more to us. New Wave, though, has no conscience.

F.M.: A lot of bands are expanding. Dingo-Boingo, for instance, integrates a lot of brass into their sound. Other bands are going to a clean vocal harmony. Cold, hard and electric... if it ever was the rule, it certainly isn't now.

K.G.: To those willing to dig below the superficial bands and search, there is probably some New Wave or Punk that you would like. If the Ramones aren't for you, maybe the Busboys are. But only open-minded people are going to do that.

Next week: The Rox Awards for 1981. Categories include best album, best guitar, best keyboards, best drums, etc. Comeback of the year, surprise of the year and many, many more.

Big Brother Program Underway

By JOE JOHNSON

Webster's dictionary defines fraternity as brotherliness, and it is an accurate definition. But in the past fraternity has taken on a meaning slightly divergent of the original. It has come to mean in many respects kegs drained to the dry bottom and Animal House antics with ridiculous initiations (swallowing twenty raw eggs or walking in underwear to the dining hall) and no particular goal except raucousness and ribaldry. Sigma Phi Epsilon, however, has taken one large step in changing that image. They have started a program which in the words of one elated professor is "the best thing that I've seen a fraternity doing in years."

The program officially titled the Kenneth Leipertz Memorial Fund is known among the fraternity members as simply big brother. It was initiated September 30, 1981 in honor of Kenny Leipertz who was one of its founders. Bill Frazier, a Sigma Phi Epsilon brother, and one of the programs founding members explained how it got started. "We (the fraternity) wanted to do something besides party all the time. We were looking for an idea that would fit in with Dr. Greenwood's theme of joining together with the surrounding communities when Dr. James Crowl (a history professor and advisor for the fraternity) came up with the idea. He had heard of another fraternity doing something similar up in Pennsylvania and he thought we should try it. The idea appealed to me so I brought it up in one of our general meetings. They all liked the idea too."

What we wanted to do was take children who were from single parent homes and provide them with some sort of father figure. We wanted them to know somebody cared about them. We had gotten the names of the children and were going to work with from Miss Eva Wilson (Social Work supervisor at the Prince Edward Department of Social Services). We received donations from Zeta Tau Alpha, Delta Zeta and Pi Kappa Phi and were ready to begin when Kenny was killed in the car accident. He, along with myself, Joe Schork and Rick Groff had done a lot towards making this thing possible so the brothers decided to name the program after him. Kenny's parents were in favor of this and requested that any money which would have gone to the family be given to the program. They also made a large donation at our banquet which signaled the beginning of the program."

George O'Guinn and Joe Schork, two members of Sigma Phi Epsilon who have worked extensively with the children enlightening experience.

First stop was the projects, a series of high rise apartments wisely hidden from route 15 by a strip of pine trees. George O'Guinn and Joe Schork went inside one of the buildings to get the "little brothers". No sooner were they out of sight when children from the surrounding apartments streamed out into the about twelve different states but our favorite was definitely California."

John lifted my camera to his eyes — "How do you work this?" "Wait John, don't do that!"

He took a close-up of the dashboard. "What do you all do in your free time," I asked as the car pulled into Pizza Hut. Paul, the first one out of the car, pulled they are around we try to set an example with our language, how we act toward each other, and things like that. I have even begun to study more, and I have definitely had to tone down my language...right John?" But John won't answer, he struts away thumb in mouth. "It really gives me a good feeling when people come up to me and say, 'that's explained what they've been doing. "We've been taking them up to our hall at least once a week just to talk and goof around. We've also done some special things like taking them trick or treating on Halloween, swimming at the Longwood pool, carrying them to ball games, taking them out to eat, they especially like that. We try to show them a good time, and answer any questions they might have. We also emphasize school work and the importance of getting along with others."

The children come from to families that live in the "Projects" a low rent housing facility across the road from College Plaza. They are Dale Rogers age 13, Loretta Rogers Agell, and Justin Rogers age 10, David Paul Johnson age 9, Mark Johnson age 7, John Johnson age 5. According to George "they are a bundle of ceaseless activity."

The fraternity brothers invited me to go along with them to Pizza Hut to see just what they do for the children. It was an parking lot and circled the car. They wanted to go also. George and Joe returned with the little brothers and squeezed into the surrounded car telling the children who were now shouting "when you gonna take me, huh", "when can I go" that they simply did not have enough room. I asked Joe if that sort of thing happened often. "It happens all the time, we just tell them we don't have enough room and drive away. It is really a shame, but what can you do?"

Dale, the oldest of the Rogers children spoke up: "We've been living there for three years and I hate it, all the ugly people are there and we get in fights a lot. I liked it better when we lived in California with our father." Loretta broke in, "We've lived in my hand — "I dance". And dance he does — the robot, with a mechanical flourish. Dale, however, does not approve — "stuff for the birds." "Dale is the spitball culprit," says George. "He is the one that started the food fight in Perinis the other night." Dale denies it, but the evidence is obvious. His mischievous eyes give him away.

"I'm an artist," shouts Justin as we enter the restaurant. Loretta and Dale follow with rejoinders of "I am too." And John tugs lightly on my camera "let me take another."

Joe orders two large pizzas and we take our seats. "It's kind of funny," said George. "We started this thing off to help the kids and it is turning out that the kids are helping us too. Whenever really great; what you are doing for those kids — it makes me feel good about myself."

A toast is made to the program and everybody digs in. "What do ya'll think of the big brother program," I asked and scanned the table watching the laughter and hijinx. The replies come in a multitude of roars: "It's great," "I really like it," "Best food I ever ate." But one answer seems to stand out from the rest. "It's brotherly love."

Sigma Phi Epsilon is trying to expand their operations. If anyone wants to help with this project, send a letter to Bill Frazier at Box 504, Longwood College, or visit him at his room in Cox 011.

Gymnasts Defeat Navy

Led by the outstanding performances of freshman Dayna Hankinson (SPRINGFIELD), the Longwood gymnastics team defeated the U.S. Naval Academy in its season-opening meet Saturday. The team now stands at 1-0.

Hankinson took first places in all-around (32.30) bars, (7.75), floor exercise (8.10), and balance beam (7.95). Her 8.50 in vaulting took second place.

Coach Ruth Eudd felt that for the opening meet of the season, the team did a good job. "We did all right for the first meet," said Budd. "and Dayna's performance was really good."

Other top performers for Longwood were Kelly Crepps (HAMPTON) and Monica Chandler (STERLING), who placed second and third all-around respectively. Kelly took first place in vaulting with the highest score of the meet — 8.75. She also chalked up second places in bars and floor. Chandler had third places in vaulting and floor.

The Lady Lancers' next meet will be at home December 11. They will be hosting James Madison and Auburn, both of which are Divisions I teams.

Holmes, Player of Week

Freshmen forward Florence Holmes (KING GEORGE) has scored in double figures in Longwood's first four women's basketball contests and for her performance last week the Lady Lancer cager has been named Longwood Player of the Week for the period November 13-20. The player of the week honor is given each week by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

"Florence has been very consistent," said Coach Jane Miller in nominating Holmes for the award. "She was voted as the team 'player of the week' by her teammates last week."

Holmes scored 21 points and had nine rebounds in a 64-57 loss to George Mason and came back with 10 points and 10 rebounds in a 52-48 loss to William & Mary Friday. She also scored 14 points and grabbed nine rebounds in the Richmond game November 14.

An all-everything player at King George High School, Holmes leads Longwood in scoring (15.5), rebounding (9.5) and field goal percentage (46.2) among the regular players. She had been shooting above 50 per cent before an off-night against William & Mary (4-13).

In her high school career she was named All-District, All-Tournament, All-Regional and All-Area three years while averaging over 30 points a game her senior season. Florence was also named Tidewater Region Player of the Year.

Florence is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Major Holmes of King George.

Lancer Grapplers Win

By RONNIE BROWN

The Longwood Grapplers opened play Friday night at Lynchburg College and captured a 35-21 win. Freshmen Mike Hackett (STAFFORD) 118, Charles Sanders (RICHMOND) 126, Steve Albeck (SPRINGFIELD) 142, Charles Campbell (ALEXANDRIA) 150, Robert Clark (ROANOKE) 158 and Junior Bill Klink (WILLIAMSBURG) Heavyweight paced the Lancers with pins.

Coach Steve Nelson was pleased with the outcome of the match, but admits that the team must work harder to be able to beat tougher competition.

Lady Cagers Lose By 4

By BILL BRENT

William and Mary overcame an early Longwood lead in the first half to scamper away with a 52-48 win in Lancer Hall on Friday night. Junior forward Cheryl Yarborough of the Indians poured in 18 points to lead all scorers. Cindy Eckle led the Lancers with 13 followed by teammates Val Turner and Florence Holmes with 10 respectively and Betty Strook of William and Mary added 10 points.

First half action unfolded with both teams rebounding well and playing zone defenses. W&M found difficulty in hitting perimeter jumpers in their "basic set" free lance offense in the opening minutes. This, coupled with four quick fouls on the Tribe, allowed the hustling Lancers to open up an early lead. W&M then employed a 3-2 full court zone press in an attempt to pressure the Lancers into turnovers. The Indians regained the lead shortly after a blocked shot by Chris Turner. Cindy Eckle responded with a three point play that put LC on top again. Then Eckle capitalized on a Tribe turnover with a short hook that put LC up by three, 15-12. W&M's early offensive woes and LC's tight zone defense netted the Lancers back-to-back Tribe turnovers as Longwood ballooned the lead to seven points, the biggest of the game for the Lancers. Following several exchanges of baskets, Betty Strook cut the deficit to five points and Yarborough sliced it to three. Then Robin Powell rifled the ball to wide open Val Turner who put LC atop by five.

Strook and Yarborough answered with buckets leaving the Lancers with a one point lead at the half 25-24. The second half opened with Yarborough hitting two baskets and giving W&M the lead 28-25. The Lancers lost their poise for an instant, that was long enough for Connolly to hit a foul shot, force a jump ball and loss in two points sending the Tribe to a 10 point bulge 41-21.

The next instant, Cindy Eckle scored and assisted "TJ" Ferrante to lead the Lancers roaring back and the Indians retreating to coach Barbara Wetters, who called time. Both teams traded several baskets then LC began using a press that contained W&M ballhandlers and caused three straight turnovers. Florence Holmes hit two free throws then Robin Powell flipped an assist to Holmes closing the margin to four, 44-48. W&M abandoned the zone for a man-to-man defense late in the game to contain the Lancer comeback. The teams traded baskets until time expired with a score of 48-52.

The Lancers second half comeback was tomahawked by a 26.7 shooting percentage from the field and nine missed free throws. The Lady Lancers were out-rebounded by 11 and Cheryl Yarborough collected nine second half boards. "Longwood out-hustled us in the first half," said Yarborough. LC's defense forced 29 W&M turnovers but the Indians played confidently and found the range on jumpers to thwart Longwoods late surge...

Christmas In Bethlehem

Rebecca Nunez is excited about Christmas this year. She says that it will be the best one she has ever had. If anyone else were going to Bethlehem (Jordan, not Pennsylvania), they might be excited, too.

Rebecca Nunez is a senior music education major and voice major at Longwood. She was invited to sing with forty members of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra in Manger Square, Bethlehem for Christmas Eve. She will be the soloist for the the show which will be televised internationally on the Christian Broadcasting Network.

Rebecca, who has been singing since she was three to four years old, was shocked when she heard the news of her solo. "I thought there would be a professional soloist and I would just sing in the choir, but it turned out I was the only one asked. There will also be a seventy-five member choir backing me up. I'll be singing "O Holy Night" at the Manger, and "He Shall Feed His Flock" from Handel's Messiah.

The trip does not stop at Manger Square, however, on the 26th the group will go to Cairo, Egypt, and sing for top officials, from there, they will go to Tel Aviv, Israel and Galileo for a concert at the Dead Sea. They will ride burrows from Judea to Petra — a three hour trip across the desert. Her only reply is "it will be interesting."

"My repertoire for this trip is from 30-35 songs (all solos). They will all be of a religious nature. I'll also be playing piano...to top it all off," she says I'll get free accommodation and transportation to Vienna for New Years Eve."

Rebecca has won the music performance award for the last two years. She has won the Virginia State Junior College Womens National Association of Teachers of Singing Award (1st place) and also first place in the Nationals. Scholarship Established

The Office of Institutional Advancement at Longwood has announced the establishment of a scholarship in memory of Helen Barnes Savage.

Mrs. Savage taught philosophy at Longwood from 1961 until her retirement in May 1981. She passed away on Sunday, November 1.

The scholarship will be awarded to a student who is majoring in philosophy or is active in the department of English, philosophy, and foreign languages. The recipient will be chosen by a committee composed of the chairman of the department and two faculty members.

Contributions to the scholarship fund may be sent to the Office of Institutional Advancement. Checks should be made payable to the Longwood College Foundation — Helen Barnes Savage Scholarship Fund. Contributions are tax deductible.

Simkins Prize Given

By SARAH BISE

The Francis Butler Simkins Prize in Southern History was presented on November 12 to Jacquelyn Dowd Hall, a member of the faculty at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, for her book Revolt Against Chivalry: Jessie Daniel Ames and the Women's Campaign Against Lynching.

The award is given at the annual meeting of the Southern Historical Association in Louisville, Kentucky. It is made jointly by the Association and Longwood College, where Professor Simkins, one of the nation's foremost authorities on Southern History, taught for many years. The Award, which is a $200 prize is given every two years for the best first book in Southern History. This year was the third time that the Simkins prize has been given.

Ms. Hall's book deals with the efforts of a Texas Woman who in mid-life turned her attention to social causes, including the anti-lynching crusade.

The award committee for the 1979-1981 was headed by Professor Betty Fladeland of Southern Illinois University and included as members were Neil R. McMillen of the University of Southern Mississippi and Peter H. Wood of Duke University. Longwood College has been represented on past awards committees by L. Marshall Hall, chairman of the History Department.

Christmas Happenings and older people of the community.

On December 1-3, the Catalinas presented their Christmas show entitled "Holiday Festival." The pool area was beautifully decorated with snowflakes, candy canes, and other Christmas decorations.

Christmas is a time for giving, a time to be joyous, a time for traditions. Last week, many of Longwood's cherished Christmas traditions were carried out, such as the Christmas tree being put up in the Rotunda right on schedule, the first day of December, and then that evening, the crowning of the Freshman Elves by last year's Elves. After the ritual of exchanging of hats, all of Santa's helpers sang "We are Santa's Elves" and proceeded to decorate the huge Christmas tree which now graces our Rotunda.

On Wednesday evening, December 2, the Elves shed their elf costumes for long white dresses and suits as the traditional Twining of the Greens took place. After the Elves had decorated the banisters in the Rotunda, they ended the evening with Christmas Carols.

On Thursday night, they participated in the annual Shower of Pennies, when the Elves were bombarded by the overwhelming generosity of their fellow students. The pennies collected will be used to help others. Also on Thursday night, the elves were busy performing the Freshman Elf Skit. Santa's helpers also spread Christmas joy at the Campus School and Holly Manor when they sang Christmas carols for the children

The annual Christmas Madrigal Dinner took place this past week end, December 4-6. The Cameratas, under the direction of Dr. Louard Egbert, entertained the diners with beautiful Christmas music and colorful Renaissance costumes.

This Thursday evening, December 10, at 8:00, the Concert Choir and the Cameratas will present their Candlelight Christmas Concert at Farmville Baptist church. The two choirs will entertain the Longwood community with a variety of Christmas music.

Perhaps the beginning of a new tradition will occur at the Faculty Dance which will be held on Friday, December 11, in the Lower Dining Hall from 9 until 1 a.m. The music will be provided by False Dimitri, and the dress is casual. The charge for admission will be $3.50 per person with guest.

For additional information, contact the Employee Relations Office at 392-9381. This is an excellent opportunity for the faculty of Longwood College to come and share the holiday spirit with their co-workers.

Arsenic And Old Lace Review

By MARK SEGAL

The Longwood College Players presented Joseph Kesselring's Arsenic and Old Lace from November second to the fifth.

Several fine performances pasted together an otherwise weak play. Kesselring did not successfully bring the audience into the world of Aunt Abbey and Aunt Martha.

It is nearly impossible to keep an audience laughing, let alone interested, in a farce-comedy for two hours and forty minutes.

At one point in the play, when Jonathan and Mortimer were in a dilemma over the dead body in the window seat, the play resembled Shakespeare's A Comedy of Errors. But only at that point did the audience feel the nervous suspense that can easily be transformed into laughter.

Kesselring created characters of importance but never gave them the chance to develop any real character. Elaine Harper placidly sat on the stage for fifteen minutes while her fiancé unraveled a bloody list of murder victims. Yet she just sat, quietly and accepted it all.

Kesselring also inadvertently inserted three policemen and one police lieutenant to supplement discrepancies in the plot that was weakening as the hours ticked by. The belief that a one second bugle burst would necessitate a platoon of policemen just reflects that Kesselring was looking for any vehicle to bring information in to the play and solve structural dilemmas.

The use of minor characters in a play to support the plot and provide information is certainly acceptable. But when the playwright uses the characters over and over again, and fails to let them expand their character, then they are just dead meat standing on the stage.

Regardless, Lisa Magill did an excellent job as Abbey Brewster. Her physical stature filled in her old lace dress perfectly and her feeble scamper around the stage along with her character depiction had the audience ready to drink her elderberry wine.

Sherry Forbes also turned in a notable performance. Ray York lack of control, the audience wondered if he was the police lieutenant or someone that should be arrested. He apparently possesses the raw ability but was too zealous.

David Brockie had fun playing a homicidal maniac with a reconstructed Boris Karloff face. He was also flawless and captivating. His twisting of the played Teddy Brewster/Roosevelt well. He was overly audible, but this seemed to be awkwardly appropriate for a mentally deranged man.

The part of the minister's daughter, Elaine Harper (played by Tracy Rice) was convincing but Ms. Rice can assert herself more.

As always, veteran Frank Creasy always seems to be in charge of his character and the stage. He did not try to steal the show or overly assert his stage presence. And this could be easy for someone of his caliber. But Creasy seems to be more interested in conveying the point and character.

Jim Pittman belched his lines and bewildered the audience. At times, because of his timing and fingers and other idiosyncratic movements held the audience at bay with the rest of his captives in the Brewster household.

Dr. Einstein, not Albert but Herman, was played meticulously by Bob Lemieux — semi-sinister, dust-covered, alcoholic plastic surgeon. Some said his performance was among the best.

The set was a "decaying" living room of a Brooklyn mansion. Richard Gamble successfully recreated the room and antique furnishings. The lighting was very simple and effective. Colored lights created night and day by intersecting sunlight and soft colors.

The costumes were authentic and effectively recreated the dress of the era.

Rangers At Blackstone

Yassar Arafat twines his goatee and his evil eyes spark with vengeance. "I swear that Saudi Arabia will not get the Awacs, I swear by the blood spilled on my land, it will not happen". He alerts the PLO to his secret designs and plans are made to infiltrate the Awacs production plant in Blackstone, Virginia and blow it to kingdom come.

Meanwhile, back at the ranch, Captain Stanford (Head of the Longwood ROTC Rangers) has got wind of their plan through a secret informant "planted" within the PLO. His code name is the mad Arab (he once jumped off a five story building wearing nothing but socks and a map of Yassar's headquarters tattooed on his chest.) With the available information, Captain Stanford went into action.

Sixteen rangers and cadets set off for Blackstone on the evening of November 13th to intercept the PLO. First they went through a night land navigation course with a practice combat raid at the end of the evening. Saturday morning they awoke to the sound of distant gun fire. Classes were given on patrolling the area and construction of rope bridges which would be needed for the ambush set for Saturday night. That evening, clad in camouflage and weapons checked, they scouted the area and set up for the ambush. Every heart thudded gently and the only sounds were an occasional sucking of the breath. The time was drawing near. The first of the PLO were spotted ten minutes later, wearing stocking caps and carrying AK-47's. They walked cautiously through the middle of the ambush, not knowing what awaited. Captain Stanford gave the signal. It was over in less than the 25 seconds. Blackstone was safe, the Awacs would go to Saudi, and Yassar swore dignantly.

Sunday morning classes were held in survival training. David Volz gave a class on snares, Gene Overton on Building Fires, Steve Breeden on telling directions without compass, Chris Corbey on crossing danger areas in formation, and Donna Dix on patrol security. Later that afternoon, they got a chance to try out their survival skills with every two students getting issued a chicken, potatoes, onions, carrots, bisquick and a box of matches.

"They all had a full meal, and learned how to do it on their own," said Captain Stanford, "if any student is interested, enroll in MS 102 or 202 for next semester."

Renaissance Dinner A Success

By CINDY CORELL

The Department of Music presented the college's annual Renaissance Christmas Dinner Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights of this week, bringing feasts, fun and good music to capacity crowds in Blackwell Dining Hall.

The Camerata Singers, directed by Louard E. Egbert, performed traditional Christmas music from the 14th, 15th and 16th centuries. They were accompanied by a harpsichord, trumpets, and a small ensemble including tamborines, recorder, bells, and percussion. All of the performers wore traditional dress from this period.

The menu included stuffed Cornish hen, orange glazed carrots, peas with pearl onions, long wild rice and fruit salad. The desert was the traditional figgy pudding.

The entertainment included many pieces performed by the entire choir as well as several solos, and small vocal ensembles. Selected members also performed several traditional dances, and the jester, Joanne Mosca, ran around the audience entertaining them with her silly antics. Then the audience and stewards joined the choir singing Christmas carols. The program ended as the singers proceed up to the front balcony where selected members performed a simple melody with handbells.

As was the tradition of the original feasting and celebration, a good time was had by all.

Gallery Craft Display

By ILONA WILSON

An exhibit of work by selected Virginia craftsmen entitled, "Craft Collectibles Seven" will be presented in Bedford Gallery from December 4-15, 1981. The exhibit is an effort by the Art Department of Longwood to get craftsmen from various parts of Virginia who work in a wide range of media to bring their work to the L.C. community. The Gallery is set up like a craft shop. Crafts, all of which are for sale, range in price from $2.00 to $100.00 with most items falling in a $5.00-$25.00 range.

The Gallery will feature seven artists' work. Sushila Bales has been working with stained glass for 5½ years. She uses glass from all over the United States for her work. Janice Jones Campbell is a 1977 graduate of Longwood and her pottery is in the exhibit. Randall Edmonson, professor here in Longwood's Art Department, has his ceramics in the Gallery. Edmonson said that most of the work in ceramics is functional. Tray Eppes has been an instructor of ceramics for Longwood during the summer of 1978 and Spring of 1979. He will also be exhibiting his ceramic work. Jim Layne will exhibit his pottery along with the other three artists mentioned. Gretchen Rogers, haphweaver, has some of her fiber pieces in the display. Ann Webb will be displaying pottery also. Kenneth Wills, furniture designer-craftsman has some wood pieces in the show. Lyn Yeatts, assistant professor of art at Virginia Tech, is displaying pieces of jewelry.

"This is the most popular show of the year. There is a high level of interest. therefore, things sell very fast. I recommend that people come early," said Mr. Edmonson. "It is a great place to Christmas shop."

As with other shows, student workers have been instrumental in setting up the show. This gives them the opportunity to see how a crafts display is set up. "There is wide variety ... something for everyone," concluded Edmonson.

Business Appeal Is Uniqueness

"I started this business because I admire art and I can't sing or paint!" began Dr. Maria Silveira. When Dr. Silveira isn't teaching Spanish or World Literature, she can most likely be found at home designing elaborate wedding cakes and every other type of cake imaginable. "I have been interested in cake decorating ever since my wedding in Cuba when I was given a beautiful cake designed as a basket of flowers."

Dr. Silveira tested her interest by attending a cake decorating class given in Farmville and from that start, she has expanded her techniques in leaps and bounds. She has perfected her designs by buying equipment, books and by visiting every pastry shop possible when she took a trip to Europe. This new cake service is rendered from her own home with all the personal touches one could wish for. Dr. Silveira does research for every cake she makes, taking the time to go through books with the customer helping to design a cake that will be unique for whatever occasion. "I don't like to capitalize on someone else's idea" says Dr. Silveira.

Designs for cakes have included baskets of flowers, an ambulance, and the boat pictured which was made for a lady getting ready for a cruise. Nevertheless, the many wedding cakes attest to the fact the Dr. Silveira is definitely a unique artist which takes the decorating of a cake very seriously and succeeds in quite a few masterpieces. If anyone is interested in having a cake made they should contact Dr. Silveira for information

Your Turn Grow up Greeks!

To the Student Body:

This letter in regard to an incident which took place this past Thursday at Jarman Auditorium.

At 8:00 that night, just before the curtain went up on Arsenic and Old Lace, a sorority (which shall remain nameless) decided to give out an open bid to a student who had come to watch the show.

This was totally uncalled for. In addition to blocking two of the main entrance doors and a part of the steps, your screams, chanting and apparent glee was heard all the way backstage!! Not only did everyone in the lobby hear it, the entire audience and even the cast and crews heard it. The students who put on this production had enough to worry about without you making such a racket.

To the members of the Panhellenic Council we have only one question... Is this common practice to have a sorority disrupt such events as a theatrical production? Where will they be allowed to strike next? a basketball game? A classroom? The dining hall? We know — during final exams, right?

Miss Fallis, please control your Greeks.

Respectfully Submitted,

Vandalism Continues

To The Student Body:

There have been numerous so called "accidents" occurring on this campus that I believe the students should be aware of. Citing one incident, some poor soul with nothing better to do, decided to push my car from out of my parking space into the road.

This individual (or individuals) decided to put a nice fat dent on my door. I would certainly hope the students at an "institution of higher education" could find more to do in their spare time than be common vandals. I urge all students who wish to keep their cars intact to either get more insurance, or rent a garage with a combination lock.

A Concerned Student

The Longwood College Company of dancers would like to announce their selection for officers for 1982. President, Eileen Mathes; Secretary-treasurer, Karen Kaiser; Special projects, Rebecca Johnson; Publicity, Whitney Phillips, Dean Lakey.

Editor's Turn

With this final newspaper, I conclude my year as editor of The Rotunda. I could not begin to express the insights I have gained through the experience of trying "to please all the people all the time." One of the major reasons I wanted to become editor of the paper was to show Longwood that having a nice little paper that pleased everyone and angered none was disgustingly boring and ridiculously unprofessional. Our staff this year has not been particularly interested in pleasing or pacifying anyone and that is something The Rotunda can finally be proud of in comparison with past years. Through serious as well as the humorous articles we have printed, we hoped to broaden the ever narrow minds here and lift people out of their cozy ruts into a more enlightened state concerning our campus and the people who dwell here. If we upset people who obviously refuse to see another point of view for reflection, we have no apologies to make for such pathetic immaturity.

As editor, I was disappointed when administrators lied to me as "every office told a different story" whenever a touchy topic would come up. I also had to realize that many of the rules we have to live by here are designed and enforced by many people bordering on the side that doesn't include the intelligent person. And finally, I think the most irritating hassle was when people grieved about lack of coverage, but never to the staff as if we are omniscient at all times.

My sincere thanks go to all those who have been of help through the year and especially those who treated the staff and me as if we are real humans functioning with a brain equal to theirs.

If nothing else this year, I hope I have set a foundation for the next editor that will begin with a greater respect for our paper and what we are trying to accomplish. Possibly the greatest achievement that was made this year simply was the fact that people stopped demanding space and decided it best to request space. Common courtesy does wonders.

Thus, I end my year full of experiences that were extremely worthwhile and people that have added so much to my college memories. Advice for the new editor, Mark Segal, and the assistant editor Joe Johnson: be an extremely good listener with your b.s. detector in mind at all times. Dry your damndest to be objective and don't ever feel you have to promise anybody anything if it is obviously not of interest for the student's newspaper.

Challenge for Responsibility

To the Students of Longwood College:

The recent decision to do away with the sign-in / sign-out procedure on a trial basis and to continue the existing paging escort system is definitely a move towards administrative support of individual student responsibility. For some time now the students have asked to be "treated like adults" on Longwood's campus. The responsibility is now on the individual student to use the paging escort system and comply with the existing visitation hours. The termination of the sign-in / sign-out procedure does not imply leniency in visitation regulation. It is more of a positive movement towards promoting individual responsibility and removing ineffective processes. As an integral part of the proposal, the elected representatives of the Student Government Association have agreed to demonstrate their support of individual responsibility by compliance with the paging escort system and established visitation hours. We challenge you, the student body of Longwood College, to follow our commitment.

SENIORS: Orders for announcements will be taken on Thursday, Dec. 10 from 12-6 in the Rotunda!! You must pay for them in full at that time!

The week of December 7-11, the pledge class of Alpha Phi Omega will sponsor a Government Awareness Week on the Longwood College Campus.

Through the use of posters, table tents and fliers they hope to emphasize the need for government involvement. Several ways in which you can become involved are:

1. Keep up on current events.
 2. Register and vote (remember to get your absentee ballot sent to you).
 3. Write your Congressman, Senator...
 4. Join a political party.

"Confessions Of An Elf Killer"

Rotunda interview with the elf killer, Mr. X.

Rotunda Q: When did you first notice this insipid or rather intrinsic hatred of, dare I say it—Elves?

Mr. X. A: Ever since I came here, man, six years ago, I'm a day student you know, and I can view all these antics from afar. Well, its just so childish you know, and like I'll be sitting in the Rotunda studying and I hear this jingle, not too loud, but just enough so like I can't read no more. Then all of a sudden, they like, start ringing in my ears, it's kinda like a big migraine coming on but there's no cure for it and then I look around me and they are like there man — elves — squeamish jingling penetrating putrid nauseating slimy fairies. It's unreal like dudes and chicks all decked out for some homosexual bar encounter or something.

Q: Don't you think that's rather harsh, labeling all elves as homosexuals?

A: Well, like I wouldn't go so far as to label all of them as strictly homosexual, like I know some of them are autosexual, ya know there are probably some borderline cases — you know like AD-DC — they can go either way. But sexuality isn't the issue, cause I think that they really don't know how to find themselves anyhow, man.

Q: When did you first develop your "cure" for the elf menace?

A: Like the first year man, I put an add in the paper saying like "if you are a Longwood Elf, you are entitled to a summer job that pays $8000 for one month's work, call 1-800-223-5812". And like, I'd entice them into my room and get them filling out forms, you know, man. And when they weren't looking, I'd slice their head off with a machete. But like the blood was a problem and what to do with the bodies, you know. Then my landlady said she'd kick me out of the room if she found another head in her garbage can. It was a real bummer, man. So the next year I had a better plan.

Q: What?

A: Well, like that year, I really had it planned out, I mean like CIA planned, you know. What I did was find out when they were having their annual elf supper in the Prince Edward Room and I rigged all the light bulbs with gasoline, man. But it backfired, you know, and the cleaning ladies got there an hour early — like they really got burned up (ha-ha) over that one.

Q: Well, what did you finally decide on?

A: It was the perfect system, you know man, like completely recyclable. I invited all the elves over for dinner at my pad, man, ...they were delicious...

(At this point the Campus Authorities, having obtained Mr. X's identity after a six year dragnet finally closed in. They entered the room and these were his last words.)

Mr. X. — Hey, man, like where are you taking me, (inaudible struggling sounds were heard) just don't put me in a cell with any elves or a Christmas tree — I'll eat it, I swear to God I'll eat it...By the way, got any oregano man.

Swimming for the Disabled

Water, the purifier of mankind. It's used for Baptism; it's used to bathe, it's used to cool, and used to quench. Bobby Sands lived for 46 days without food — he would not have lived 4 days without water. Lynn Hatch realized this, and putting the knowledge to practical and beneficial use, she started a program that combined Therapeutic Recreation with the sanctity of water.

The program entitled Recreational Swimming for the Disabled, began October 17 at Longwood's Lancer swimming pool. The program is designed to provide students from Longwood to work with physically and mentally disabled individuals of Prince Edward County in developing leisure and recreational activities in an adapted aquatic swim program appropriate to their disability and their level of skill.

Lynn Hatch, certified water safety instructor and originator of the program explained how it got started and its objectives. "I went to Stephen Keith (the Special Education Coordinator for Prince Edward County Schools) and proposed a plan whereby disabled students from Prince Edward County would be allowed to have an hour of time each week end at the Lancer pool with student volunteers providing one-on-one training. He gave us the names of five children with whom we would work, and Miss Sally Bush, the Aquatics Director of HPER, helped set up the time for the class which is Saturdays from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. What we wanted to do was provide the children with an opportunity to enjoy some leisure time and recreational activity in the swimming pool. We wanted to help them gain a certain amount of self-confidence in the water and learn to associate with their peers and still function independently. We also wanted to educate the families on what leisure and recreational activities are available for disabled children in the area." The student volunteers for the program are senior Therapeutic Jay Strike, Susan Meadors,

"Has there been a significant improvement?" "Yes there has definitely been an improvement. One girl, who was scared to death of the water when we started off swam half-across the pool just last week. This other girl would never go off the board...but with a little coaxing, we finally got her to go. Now that's all she wants to do."

The girls and boys that are being helped in this program ranges in ages from 6 to 14. They are either physically or mentally handicapped. Lynn said she wants to expand the program "because like these that need help too. Anyone who is interested in being a volunteer is more than welcome and no prior training is needed."

John Lennon: An Elegy

By RUSTY HURLEY

I am not one for "laying on the hands," as many have when talking about Lennon or the Beatles. They were unique but separate entities and neither had a God-like power. What Lennon possessed above all else was his ability to make the listener feel a part in life: you matter, a role which no one else can fulfill except you. You must speak and live what you believe, no swaying back and forth. Draw a straight line and follow it, Lennon did. "But February made me shiver

With every paper I delivered Bad news on the doorstep I couldn't take one more step I can't remember if I cried When I read about his widowed bride

Something touched me deep inside

The Day the Music Died Don McClean: "American Pie" The bullets seared not only his flesh — but the minds of an entire generation and the heart of America. When Elvis died they mourned him as a great entertainer. When John Lennon died they mourned a great man.

He was the ultimate original. Nothing was beyond imagination, the unreal could become accomplished fact given time and love. He was not a "lip" or an apologetic liberal, he believed in a very simple principle: the innate goodness of man. It may have killed him.

"... all of a sudden they broke away from the football game for a Special Report. Well, thought maybe the Russians had invaded Poland. I thought we would see some good war footage." And this guy comes on and says John Lennon's been shot . . . who cares? I wanted to see tanks! . . ."

unannounced resident of Cox, Dec. 8, 1980 The night of December 8, 1980 found stereotypes raging with Lennon's music — an amplified elegy of tremendous proportions. Angry young men with no purpose now directed their anger, though few knew at what or why. 1980 had not the purpose of 1970.

That night Farmville lay under a tumbling sky. Not one star shone and a fog had raised on the river. A perfect night for a ghost story — a perfect night for truth. "I don't see the big deal" a member of Kappa Delta, Dec. 9, 1980 Lennon meant nothing to some people. To most of the people at Longwood he was a relic from a past age, an age of the enlightened youth and age of stormy dissension. His philosophy does not fit well with the "me-generation" of college students.

John Lennon spearheaded an idea, that muscle was not strength and that all of us were in actuality a brotherhood. Lennon's ideas were impractical, maybe unworkable. Jesus' ideas were as well, and Hitler's ideas could never . . . well, they came perilously close. We will never know if Lennon was a social, moral or political thinker, for we won't give him a chance. equaled — maybe outsold — but never outdone.

But through his music, he tried to communicate what he felt, what he envisioned and what millions wished for. There were "The first time I heard the Beatles was on a car radio going west. Their melodies were so clear, their harmonies so fresh. I knew they were taking music where it had to go."

Bob Dylan " . . . (a critic), said we used aeolian cadences. I have no idea what they are. They sound like a species of birds . . ."

John Lennon You can't repeat a soufflé

Paul McCartney on a Beatles Reunion Every rock movement since 1965 owes at least some credit to the Beatles. Their best songs are artistically on par with the best art-song composers of nineteenth century Germany; and probably more reflective of society. Their best albums will never be better guitarists, better singers and better sellers, but few could match his sincerity, wit and truth. At his most expressionistic he is "Happiness is a warm gun," at his most emotional he is "Julia," at his most frivolous he was "Polyethelene Pam."

John Lennon was a man who happened to be part of one of the greatest collaborations of our time. On his own, he was an eloquent (though limited) artist. But his music will live through us all and the magic of the Beatles, well, that is the stuff from which legends are born. Ever wonder why nobody hates the Beatles?

"Red, White and Blue Gaze in your looking glass You're not a child anymore." Styx (De Young) "Though all these moments Have their meaning In my life I loved you more."

John Lennon That day — that terrible day of December 8, 1980 will remain the death of the sixties. To many more, it will mean the beginning of fear. To a select few, it will represent a beginning — a knowledge that love cannot be overspent in the face of horror. That love and brotherhood are the greatest gifts we possess.

America: are we to become a portrait of fear and paranoia or are we to rise to the occasion? We are the great hope, must we ultimately fail? It is time for us to draw a straight line and follow it. It is time for us to stand for such unfashionable concepts as the Bill of Rights, of belief in liberty and freedom. It is time to give a damn about what happens to us.

John Lennon's death was just one of many recent tragic symptoms of a country gone apathetic, stable and reactionary. Are we to become victims of the politics of terror? Elvis died choking on his own regurgitation because he was too drunk, too stoned and didn't care. John Lennon died among the people — murdered by "a fan" whom he had spoken with only hours before. Are we to be a Presley who died a victim of his own dazzling self — indulgence or are we to stand-up and be counted. It is not a contest. It is a matter of life and death.

"And the three men. I admire the most The Father, Son and Holy Ghost They took the last train for the coast The Day, The Music Died."

Kersey, Player of Week

From Sports Info. — Sophomore forward Jerome (The Cobra) Kersey put on an awesome display of basketball skill in two contests last week and for his efforts, the 6-7 Clarksville, VA native has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period November 27-December 4. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

In a 68-47 loss to Division I Navy Tuesday night Kersey scored 22 points and grabbed 11 rebounds with two slam dunks. Thursday night he led the Lancers to a 95-79 win over Friendship with 23 points, 15 rebounds and two more slams.

"He's had two super games," said Longwood coach Cal Luther. "The thing that delights me so much about coaching a player like Jerome is the way he hustles. For a big guy (6-7), he really gets after them."

"I told Jerome the other day that I would pay to see him play," the coach continued. "He just really hustles."

Longwood's leading scorer and rebounder through four games, Kersey is scoring 17 points a game and averaging 12.8 rebounds per contest. In addition he has seven slam dunks. He had 11 rebounds in 11 minutes in Saturday night's 99-70 win over Coppin State.

A key factor in Longwood's 19-9 season a year ago, Kersey averaged 17 points and nine rebounds. This season he has proved his worth with his rebounding, scoring, defending and playmaking skills.

All-Tournament in four of the five tournaments in which Longwood played a year ago, Jerome is a former standout at Bluestone High School. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman D. Kersey of Clarksville.

Basketball Buries Coppin State

By MIKE LYNCH

The Longwood college Basketball team played nearly perfectly for the first eleven minutes of their contest with Coppin State, opening up a 25 point lead with eight minutes left in the half, and held the margin at that level for the rest of the game to earn a lopsided 99-70 victory, Saturday night at Lancer Hall.

Coppin State was really not that bad. They had a good chance to win against Virginia Union last Tuesday and Longwood definitely took them seriously. Longwood coach, Cal Luther acknowledged this fact, saying, "Our good play made them look bad." According to Luther's analytical charts of the game, Longwood made just two offensive mistakes on their first 29 possessions, one of which was a lost ball at the opening tipoff.

Longwood scored the first ten points of the game with layups by Joe Remar and Mike McCroey starting things off. Both guards played well, riddling Coppin State's defense with several layups off both fast breaks and set plays. Longwood was getting many shots in the opening minutes, almost all of which were from in close, almost half of their points coming from layups in the first half. In fact, only one shot from outside the key, a 10-foot jumper by Remar, contributed to Longwood's first half total.

Finally, with 16:12 left in the half, Coppin State's James Jackson hit a 12-foot jumper from the right side to break the ice for the Eagles. But the ice kept freezing back over the cold-shooting Eagles as their next points would not come for more than three minutes and they only had six points at the 8:10 mark.

Longwood, on the other hand, was on fire. Coppin called time-out at 14:02 to try and regroup, being down at this point 17-2, the last two points coming from a McCroey layup after he stole the ball on the other end. The Lancers had shot seven for ten up to this point but they were not through embarrassing Coppin State just yet. The climax of this barrage came when Jerome Kersey slammed in an awesome dunk that nearly took the rim off the glass. The fans went wild and the Longwood bench was on its feet but unfortunately, Kersey had repelled a back muscle, that he first pulled against Navy, in the effort. He finally went down in pain after trying to stay in for awhile. He left the game and did not return.

After this, a combination of events allowed Coppin State to keep Longwood from increasing the margin too much. Many of Longwood's benchwarmers were now getting a good deal of playing time and both teams were now playing zone defenses. Both of these facts were in favor of the Eagles as they were now keeping relatively even with the Lancers. They used quickness to get through Longwood's 1-3-1 zone, while slowing the Lancers down some with their own 2-3 zone. After being down 43-14, the biggest margin of the game, the Eagles scored the last seven points of the half to close to within 22 at 43-21.

The second half got sloppy but since the result would pretty obviously be a Longwood victory, nobody really cared. The fans were having a good time and the players started looking for the ominous dunk. The action was really better in the second half but due to the huge advantage that Longwood had, the intensity was missing. The game finally ended with a 99-70 Longwood advantage.

High points honors belonged to Ron Orr with 19. Also scoring double figures were Mike McCroey (15), Troy Littles (13) and Joe Remar and Randy Johnson (11 apiece). High rebounds went to Jerome Kersey (11 in just 11 minutes) and Randy Johnson with ten. Next up is Pembroke Tuesday night and Lincoln on Thursday night.

Gymnasts Prepare for Auburn, TMU

By LISA SPENCER

The Longwood gymnastics team will host two tough Division I opponents in its second meet of the season Friday night at 7:00. James Madison, the 1981 Division I State champion, and Auburn are two of the strongest teams the Division II Lady Lancers will face during the coming season.

Longwood, 1-0 after a season opening win over Navy, faces a tough task Friday night. Auburn has beaten Western Carolina 131.4-114.75 and lost to Alabama 137.9-131.65. James Madison opened its season Saturday at Slippery Rock.

The Lancers will be expecting top performances from freshmen Dayna Hankinson and Kelly Crepps, who finished 1st and 2nd respectively all-around against Navy. Monica Chandler, a sophomore, should be a strong contender also.

James Madison's Stephanie Mann, should provide stiff competition for the Longwood gymnasts. Madison handed the Lancers one of their two losses last season and Mann was the state all-around champ.

Powerful Auburn has five gymnasts who have scored over 30 in all-around thus far. Tops is Yo-Yo Farley with a high score of 33.65 while Cindy Pope is a close second with a 33.30. Farley has scored a 9.0 in beam and an 8.65 in vaulting while Pope has an 8.55 on bars.

Friday's meet promises to provide some of the most exciting gymnastics action ever seen in the Farnville area.

Grapplers Fifth in L.B. Tourney

By RONNIE BROWN

The Longwood wrestling team won two out of four matches to capture fifth place in the Liberty Baptist Tournament held Friday and Saturday in Lynchburg. Lancer wins came by a forfeit by Norfolk State and a 33-15 victory over Newport News Apprentice.

The grapplers' defeats came at the hands of Hampton Institute 26-23 and Liberty Baptist 49-0, but Coach Steve Nelson admits that the competition was rigid.

"I thought we had a good tournament despite the competition," said the coach. "The wrestlers showed a lot of improvement, but they were disappointed that they didn't win more matches. We are still being competitive and that's what counts."

Junior David Dodd, who wrestled in the 158 and 190 weight classes, turned in the most consistent performance with two wins, a tie and only one defeat. Other Lancer standouts were freshman Mike Hackett, a 118 pounder and Steve Albeck, a 145 pounder.

The Lancers' chances of doing better in the tournament were hurt due to the illness of two wrestlers. Mike O'Hare was injured and Mitchell Byrd, who has a cold, was unable to make his weight class.

The grapplers, now 4-2, have already broken the record for the most wins in the history of Longwood Wrestling.

The wrestlers will be off for exams and Christmas and will not see action until January 15 in the Newport News Tournament. Coach Nelson realizes the importance of doing well after the long layoff. "If we can stay healthy and can get in shape after Christmas, we have an outside chance of having a winning season," said Nelson.

Lady Lancers Win Two Straight

From Sports Info

Longwood took two straight this week defeating Davis & Elkins (WV) 71-61 Tuesday and Liberty Baptist 62-58 Thursday. Freshman Valerie Turner led both games with 19 points, 13 rebounds against Davis & Elkins and 13 points, 8 rebounds at Liberty Baptist. Also scoring in double figures in both contests was Florence Holmes with 10 and 13 points, respectively. The Lady Lancers, now 3-4 overall, take the road this week traveling to Virginia Commonwealth Tuesday and Lynchburg Friday.

"It is very hard to come back after four straight losses and take wins against tough teams," said Coach Jane Miller. "I am very pleased."

"We made some critical errors in the last few minutes of the Davis & Elkins game. We were fortunate that we had enough of a lead to still win. Our play in the Liberty Baptist game showed we had learned from those errors. We were very poised under pressure and made some smart decisions in the last few minutes."

Miller cites junior Barbara DeGraff for her performance this past week. A 6-3 center, DeGraff grabbed nine rebounds against Davis & Elkins and 14 in the win over Liberty Baptist. She is averaging 6.9 rebounds per contest.

Holmes leads Longwood in scoring and rebounding with averages of 15.7 points and 10.3 rebounds. Co-captain Cindy Eckel is scoring 12 points per game and Turner is scoring 10 points and grabbing 6.8 rebounds per contest.

Sophomore Robin Powell who scored 14 in the win over Davis & Elkins, is averaging 7.9 points and leads the team in assists with 15.

Local Food Prices Drop 2.3%

By PUBLIC AFFAIRS

The good news regarding local food prices continued this month. Following national and state trends, the local market basket dropped 1.08 per cent between November and December.

An even more positive note for local food buyers is the comparison in yearly prices which shows a 2.3 per cent drop from December 1980.

The table below gives data on the four areas of the state where market basket studies are conducted.

Although local food prices fell again this month, the Farmville market basket, at $59.37, is still slightly higher than in the other three areas of the state where these surveys are conducted.

In comparing local prices for November and December, 16 items were priced higher, 22 items were lower, and two items were the same as last month. Higher prices were found for bread, pork chops, hot dogs, fryers, cheese, ice cream, eggs, bananas, carrots, lettuce, onions, peaches, corn, tomatoes, shortening, and grape jelly.

Prices were lower for flour, corn flakes, soda crackers, round steak, hamburger, bacon, tuna fish, milk, evaporated milk, frozen orange juice, apples, oranges, cabbage, celery, potatoes, peas, tomato soup, coffee, cola drinks, peanut

Lemish To Claim Post

By BILL BRENT

Donald Lemish, former Vice Chancellor for Institutional Advancement and Planning at East Carolina University is the new Vice President for Institutional Advancement at Longwood College. Institutional Advancement has the responsibility to acquire private funds that benefit 12 academic programs for students. Lemish says "fund raising is an art" and his past shows he is a master of his craft.

He studied Speech and Journalism at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana. Lemish chose BSU because of its baseball reputation but a football injury halted all baseball for the talented athlete. At 13 he was invited to workout with the farm team of the Milwaukee Braves. He completed his BS in Education then MA in Journalism at BSU.

In 1968 Lemish took his journalism talents to an Indiana high school where the weekly paper, under his direction won the "Pacemaker of the Year" award as the best paper in the nation. Returning to Ball State he became the Alumni Field Director and Alumni Editor. During the next nine years he became Associate Director of Alumni and Development, Executive Director of the Cardinal Varsity Club, Director of Development and Executive Vice President of the Ball State University Foundation. In this nine year period BSU earned five U.S. Steel Incentive Awards, Alumni donations tripled and total giving ballooned five fold.

Lemish spent two years as Assistant Vice President for Development at the University of Alabama in Birmingham, where private gift support doubled after one year. Then he moved on to ECU to become the Vice Chancellor for Institutional Advancement and Planning. In his two years at ECU two additional incentive awards, alumni fund doubled and he wrote The Foundation Handbook published in July 1981.

As Lemish ascended the upper echelons of administration he remains close to sports as he officiated Indiana high school sports, NAIA playoffs and Big 10 baseball. His radio play-by-play took him to the Major Leagues and friends Merv Rettermund, Brooks Robinson and Earl Weaver.

Education, sports and Longwood are prominent in Lemish's life, he adds "the drive, the enthusiasm, the intensity of Jan Greenwood" is the major reason for his presence.

There Are Men At Longwood

Editor's Note: This is the first of a two part series by Longwood's Sports Information Director, Hoke Currie, Dallas Bradbury, Duke Rollins, Randy Johnson and Brian Cochran are all male seniors and speak candidly about the changes at a former all girls school.

By HOKE CURRIE

FARMVILLE, VA — When senior Dallas Bradbury of Chesterfield was a freshman he would get the following response when he told his friends and relatives he attended Longwood College: "Longwood, that's a girls' school isn't it?"

Bradbury would smile and say, "Well, no. Longwood just became co-ed."

Three years and hundreds more Longwood male students later, he still gets the same question.

"Now when they ask me I just look at them with a real cold look and say, 'Yeah,'" explained the Longwood senior.

Despite the fact that Bradbury is just one of 688 male students currently enrolled at Longwood, people as close as 40 miles to the Farmville college still believe Longwood is an all-female institution of higher learning.

Fact is, Longwood became coeducational in 1976 when the college population was made up of 2,061 women and 181 men. The number of men has grown each year to the current figures of 1,738 women and 688 men, roughly 75 per cent female and 25 per cent male.

As Bradbury and three other Longwood senior men revealed in a recent interview, Longwood's all-female image is dying a slow death, agonizingly slow for the male students who want the college to be known for what it now is: an institution of higher learning for MEN and women. PIONEERS IN TRANSITION

For Bradbury, a Clover Hill High School graduate, and fellow-seniors Randy Johnson of Richmond, Brian Cochran of Alexandria and Duke Rollins of Portsmouth, the past 4 years have been a time of transition at Longwood and the 4 have been among the pioneers in this transition.

Longwood men are making their mark in student government, college traditions, athletics, academics and social life. As an example, Bradbury was Longwood's first male orientation chairman when school opened in the fall. The Longwood men seem to have been fully integrated into college life, but it wasn't always so.

Duke Rollins recalls that in his freshman year (1978) several female students let him know that his presence was not welcome.

"Now they have accepted us," said Rollins, who was the college's first male class president as a freshman, "but I know some girls here that are seniors now who refused to sit with me in the dining hall when I was a freshman.

"They were intending to go to an all-girls school and sat down at the table with them. They said I'm sorry but I don't want to sit here and these girls got up and left because they would not sit with any males.

"They were freshmen," Rollins explained. "I know these girls today and I talk with them about what happened. Of course, they've kind of gone with the flow and worked it out.

"They say the thing they came here for was to have a girls' school with a guys' school (Hampden-Sydney) six miles down the road. That's exactly what they said. They wanted to come to an all-girls school and when they knew that the guys were coming here more and more, they kind of turned us all off."

TIMES HAVE CHANGED

"That was four years ago," Rollins continued. "Today, the thing that I like is when the freshman girls and guys come in, they're going to school together here like they did in high school. There's a lot more class identity and unity as freshmen at Longwood."

Longwood's decision to go co-ed, which was announced in September, 1975, has fostered change with sociological implications. Longwood men and women are dating, getting engaged and getting married. Prior to the arrival of male students in significant numbers, the affection of many Longwood women had been centered on the 700 or so males down the road at Hampden-Sydney.

When Longwood went co-ed a natural rivalry sprang up between the males at Longwood and Hampden-Sydney. Like the new kid on the block, the Longwood men resented the fact that most of the local social activity took place at someone else's house, namely Hampden-Sydney.

Richmond Senior Randy Johnson recalls what it was like as freshman year in 1978.

"When I first came here (to Longwood) the big thing was 'Okay, the guys from Hampden-Sydney will be up on the corner.' A lot of the girls would go out to meet them," said Johnson. "Then half the campus would go to Hampden-Sydney for fraternity parties on the weekends. It was like a putdown to us.

"A lot of people got motivated about the social situation that year. That's when several fraternities were formed. People started having parties here just to keep the female population at Longwood."

All four senior men (Bradbury, Rollins, Johnson and Cochran) agree that there was some animosity between the males at the two schools back then. But, they also agree that the animosity has lessened in recent years.

"As a freshman I'll agree there was a certain amount of animosity," said Bradbury. We were the first male class of any size. We were here and we were out to prove that Longwood did have males and that we were just as good as other males that went anywhere else.

"So there was a little bit of tension created there because that (Hampden-Sydney) was the closest other school to us that we could prove ourselves. I think that tension has lessened some now. I have friends at Hampden-Sydney and we attend parties together at both schools."

The Longwood seniors agree that the problems between the males at the two schools often involve freshmen.

"When the freshman males come to Longwood, of course there's a grudge because they see the girls going to Hampden-Sydney," said Alexandria native Brian Cochran. "As for the upperclassmen, I think we basically get along."

"You can go to a party at Hampden-Sydney and have a good time," he explained. "They know you're from Longwood and they're not going to say anything about it. I think they are starting to accept the fact that we (Longwood men) are here. Our freshman year I know then didn't like it at all."

FRATERNITIES LEAD THE WAY

Borrowing an idea from their male counterparts down the road, Longwood men began to start fraternities of their own. Currently, there are five fraternities and 10 sororities at Longwood and social life on campus has picked up.

With the advent of fraternities and the increase in weekend social activity, Longwood's image as a "suitcase college" has also been fading away of late. Perhaps the biggest contributor to the suitcases remaining in the closet, however, has been the Student Union organization (SUN).

According to Duke Rollins, who has been active in SUN, entertainment opportunities for students have really multiplied.

"There are a lot more things going on now that help to keep students on campus," said Rollins. "We can see as far as the student union is concerned how much it has grown. Longwood has broadened its scope as far as keeping people on campus, because they feel that if people come to the campus they should entertain them also as well as educate them. Maybe that's not the general cause, but people aren't going to always study on Friday and Saturday nights.

"The student union budget has grown from around $20,000 to $36,000 since I've been here," he continued. "You can tell that the student union's idea is to keep people on campus and make us

Student Sings In Bethlehem

By Cindy Corell

If you ask Rebecca Nunez, a senior music education, performance and foreign language major how she spent her Christmas holidays, she'll ask how much time you have, because it promises a three hour story. Some of this story would be about how she sat on Jordan's Prince Ali's lap and serenaded him with "I Can't Help Loving That Man." The prince was returning to Harvard in the same flight as Rebecca's return trip, and an airline stewardess invited Rebecca to come to the first class section and entertain his Highness.

Rebecca was invited to be a soloist for a televised special, "Christmas from Bethlehem," in Manger Square, which was shown on the Christian Broadcasting Network. The brass section of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra and two other soloists accompanied her as part of a crusade group under the direction of Rev. John Adkerson, staff evangelist of First Baptist Church of Atlanta.

Rebecca was surprised when she learned that she would be a soloist. "I thought there would be a professional soloist and I would just sing in the choir, but it turned out I was a soloist...singing in front of 30,000 or 40,000 people. I wasn't scared during the performance, but afterwards I couldn't believe what I had done."

After the Christmas Day concert at Manger Square, the group travelled to Cairo, Egypt to sing for top officials there, and then to Tel Aviv, Israel and Galilee for a concert at the Dead Sea. They rode burros from Judea to Petra — a three hour trip across the desert. While in the Holy Land, the group taped two additional shows to be shown any time on syndicated Christian networks.

The many contrasts of this land impressed Rebecca a great deal. "I had always heard it was a land of contrasts, but it's unbelievable how true that is," she said. "Israel has always been described (to me) as 'the land of milk and honey,' and Egypt as 'the land of plagues,' and that's exactly how it appeared to me. Just as soon as you cross the border between Israel, which is so green and cultivated, and Egypt, which is all sand, you notice the difference immediately."

She also notes that the customs are just as much of a contrast: "There are no women on the streets of Israel, except for female students going to school. In Cairo, though some of the women are more American than we are, and dripping with gold! But the majority you see are completely veiled, covered up, the typical stereotype."

Some of the highlights of the trip included spending New Year's Eve in Vienna, Austria, and attending an opera there. She also attended a masked ball and a concert by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. The evening was, in Rebecca's words, "a musician's dream."

But the most inspiring part of the trip was cruising across the Sea of Galilee. "The cruise was very inspirational," she said. "During a devotional about (the disciple) Peter, I sang 'I Walked today Where Jesus Walked,' and it was so inspiring to actually be there."

Rebecca plans to repeat this holiday's events next year with another trip to the Holy Land for a repeat performance. She will graduate from Longwood this Spring.

"Morning's At Seven"

"Morning's at Seven," an enduring comedy hit which captured three Tony awards in its 1960 revival on Broadway, will be presented on the stage of Longwood College's Jarman Auditorium on Wednesday, January 27, at 8 p.m.

The production is part of Longwood's Series of the Performing Arts. Tickets may be obtained from the Student Union office in the Lankford Building or may be reserved by calling 392-9346.

Written by Paul Osborn and originally produced on Broadway in 1939, "Morning's at Seven" is a warm and winning story about a lovable but daffy family and their slightly cuckoo feuds.

The cast includes four elderly sisters, three husbands, a 40-year-old fiancé who still has cold feet regarding marriage, and an intense wallflower who has been trying to get to the altar for 12 years.

Revived most recently by Broadway producers Elizabeth

McCann and Nelle Nugent, the play ran for over a year in New York with unanimous cheers from critics and roars of laughter from capacity audiences.

Author Paul Osborn scored his first Broadway hit in 1930 with "The Vinegar Tree" and then wrote several successful adaptations of best-selling novels, including "Point of No Return" and "The World of Suzie Wong." He also wrote screenplays for the hit movies "South Pacific," "Sayonara," and "East of Eden."

Violin-Piano Duo Perform Here

By CINDY CORELL

The internationally known violin, piano duo of Kees Kooper and Mary Louise Boehm performed in Wygal Auditorium last Wednesday night as part of the Visiting Artist Recital Series presented by the Department of Music. The husband and wife team have many prizes and awards to their credit and a reputation of high standing all over North and South America and Europe.

Mary Louise Boehm has studied piano in the United States, France and Germany with several well-known teachers such as Robert Casadesus and Luisa Stojowska. Her sister, Mrs. Pauline Boehm Haga is a faculty member of Longwood's Department of Music.

Kees Kooper was born in Holland and was one of his country's foremost violinists and a prize-winner in the International Queen Elizabeth Violin Contest before emigrating to the United States.

The program Wednesday night included works by such composers as Arcangelo Corelli, George Enescu, Charles Ives, and Johannes Brahms. Piano and violin conversed like old friends, sometimes rejoicing, interrupting one another, sometimes alternating voice. The audience was held magnetized

Cast Chosen For

Once Upon A Mattress

By JOHNEL BROWN

Late night practices are already underway for the cast and crew of Longwood's production of Once Upon A Mattress. The play is a hilarious slapstick adaptation of Hans Christian Andersen's children's fairy tale, The Princess and the Pea. It's the story of a kingdom in a state of unrest and just short of turmoil because no marriages are allowed in the kingdom until the Prince has been married. This seems simple enough a task, except that there's a somewhat overprotective queen played by Lisa Magill who decides it's her motherly duty to test the worthiness of the candidates of matrimony to the Princehood. There is a secondary development which adds to the urgency in the kingdom. Lady Larkin, played by Joanne Mosca, has found that she is "with child" and "without husband." She and her accomplice in deeds of adultery Sir Harry, Sydney Long are in quite a panic for the prince to be married so that they too can be wed to avoid almost certain social pressures.

Jeff Thomas, a transfer freshman from George Mason University, auditioned for the musical comedy by reading passages from the script, learning simple dance steps and performing them with little preparation, and finally singing "My Country 'Tis of Thee." Jeff was cast as the Minstrel of the production. The Minstrel is a major character who essentially tells the story in song. Jeff was actively involved in high school drama in Reston, Va. Reston, being a small town, produced some big time plays that Jeff starred in, including Godspell and One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest.

Jay Thompson, Marshall Barer and Dean Fuller's Once Upon A Mattress is to be presented February 25 through 27 at 7:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Dear Editor, The Rotunda:

I would like to extend my sincerest appreciation to the students who assisted me on Thursday, January 14 when my car was hit beside South Cunningham Dormitory. Your concern for my safety, your disengaging of the cars, and your help in the snow storm meant much to me. I failed to thank you at the scene of the accident or to even get your names. Special thanks to the young lady who made several phone calls for me and to the Campus Police.

How fortunate we are to have such responsible and caring students at Longwood! Thanks so much.

Editor's Turn

I had a dream the other night: Longwood had a journalism department with 15 instructors and packs of typewriting students, bleeding with self-expression and the "hear me" germ staining onion skin paper, while hopes of "print-me" permeated every hope and desire of each student. I could hear this incessant roar of typewriter keys ticking away the entire time. Tick-ticka-tick.

Four girls were having a mud wrestling contest and the winner was to have a Dear - Somebody column. Something worth fighting for. In another corner an array of quick witted eccentrics were trading colloquial sports terms on the worth of Ralph Sampson's turn around jumper, his devastating dunk and San Fran's chances at a Super Bowl victory. Tick-ticka-tick.

Then I was in the middle of downtown New York City, and out on the sidewalk there was a door, just a door and a frame — like the one in "the Road Runner" cartoon — and I am sitting behind the door in a desk. There is a line two blocks long and everyone is waiting his turn to come through that door and ask if his story can be printed.

"It's great, magnificent," some young student of journalism pleas and tries to assure, "I uncovered a Soviet spy plot to kill Alexander Haig — it's all in the print — and the spy is tied up in my room three blocks away at Columbia U." He wanted this story in the Rotunda. Jesus. Maybe we could get some sort of collegiate Pulitzer, who knows. These kinds of stories have real substance — substance, no, forget it — this is Woodward and Bernstein — maybe a movie. Tick-ticka-tick.

And then Dr. Greenwood is at the door and suddenly the scene changes and she is showing me the new teletype she purchased for the newspaper's use. And the whole time hordes of papers are being slid under my door and begging to be printed. If there is not news some students are creating it by building million dollar homes in The Greens and then burning them down so they can write a story about it. It doesn't stop. The news, the stories, the offers, the tick-ticka-tick.

Please print . . . story . . . 14th Street Bridge . . . newsworthy.

Suddenly I am sitting up in my bed in a cold sweat. I think of all the stories, the juice, the added pages, and the coveted Pulitzer prize. And I look out the window and see Longwood and I am quickly reminded of the hard work in store for the diligent Rotunda staff. I lay back in my bed and draw a deep breath and hear the sleet hitting the window — tick-ticka-tick.

Dear Joanie

NOTE: Dear Joanie will be appearing weekly in the Columns and Comments section. Thanks to Joanie all our problems are solved.

Dear Joanie,

Me and my boy friend have been having an affair behind my husbands back for the last three semesters. He is a professor here at Longwood and my boy friend is taking one of his classes. But that's no problem, the problem is my boy friend wants me to get the answers on his next test for him. I told him that was unethical and I wouldn't think of doing such a thing. Well, he got mad and stole my car keys (which are also my husband's professor's keys) and won't give them back. What makes matters worse is my husband (the professor) thinks I'm really air-headed and forgetful and he doesn't treat me with any respect. Should I get the car keys back and let my husband think I'm not forgetful and let my boy friend love me by giving him the answers or should I not give my boy friend the answers and let him hate me and probably wreck my car and let my husband think I'm not only forgetful but also a reckless driver?

Blaze Destroys Home—Kindles New Hopes

Note: Thackston's Home for the Aged was completely destroyed in a fire which began at 2:00 a.m. on January 11th. The sixteen residents of the Home were safely evacuated. Local fire departments (Farmville, Hampden-Sydney, Prospect, and Darlington Heights) were unable to stop the fire because of low temperatures (below zero) which froze the metal nozzles. There was no insurance on the home.

By JOE JOHNSON

Where the house had been, there was a solid chimney jutting up from the muddled ashes. The snow which had fallen the Wednesday before the fire, outlined its absence. Four trailers face this bare spot in an unsymmetrical semi circle. One of the trailers, an old green and white aluminum, sits directly behind the chimney and charred spot.

Mrs. Thackston, known to close friends as Gaygie, is a short woman of 68. She wears thick glasses, which, if seen at the right angle reflect the trailer's interior. You would expect to see the ashes, which lay outside her trailer, reflected in those glasses in the form of desolate hopelessness, or of contentment, in merely surviving the blaze. The fire which had started early Monday morning in the kitchen ceiling wiring and blazed up, billowing smoke. "I walked across the living room floor over the kitchen, it was hot and I saw the smoke coming off the floor and a flame started lunging up from the kitchen below." She tells the story as factually as possible arguing over the fine points of time and sequence with her daughter, Dolly. But her hands tell a different story. They fondle papers and light up cigarettes with anticipatory vigor. "L.L., my step-son was there, during the fire, bless his soul, he and I, and I swear it was just like we rehearsed it, got all the residents out safely. The first thing I did when I saw that flame was call 911, — the fire department, you know...that was an exciting time, Love. After that I walked to the end of the hall and said 'ladies there's a fire, do not dress, get a blanket or shoes if possible, and walk out the front door.' She pauses for a second and as if remembering an essential fact that she has left unsaid and points to a calendar hanging on the wall next to her. January the eleventh is squared off in a dark red outline. She flicks her cigarette. "Only a couple got their shoes...but they never saw or felt any smoke", she says it defensively like an overprotective mother. "While I was getting the ladies out, L.L. tried to grasp some important things. Poor old Mary Lancer walked out of the door and froze like a statue. L.L. just swooped her up and carried her on. All sixteen of them got out and no one was hurt."

She stops talking as if to end her interview, turning her head towards the window she sees the lone chimney and takes a drag off her cigarette. But she does not want to stop talking, no more than she would stop working or building or living.

"This place started as a nursing home in about 1949, but we changed it to a rest home in 1962 because the regulations were too tight. We grow all our own food out here in the garden...we can, and freeze all the vegetables and raise all the cattle for beef and hogs for pork ourselves. We used to have a pasteurizing machine out here but the regulations, I was talking about put an end to that."

She sits back to the past, in her chair by the kitchen table and her hands are still now, she speaks quietly and the only sound is the coffee pot slowly reheating with the barely perceptible sound of steam hissing.

"My husband died in the first day of July in 1966 and that was a hard winter" (You can almost hear her insert the 'also' after one of the three currently living in the trailer is walking into the kitchen gripping either end of a wooden table. The lady is slightly flushed from exertion, but seems pleased with herself just the same. "That's Hestor Edson, her braces and shoes were burned in the fire, so she uses the table as a walker. We improvise a lot around here. I worked out an irrigation system using that old tank out there", straight in her chair. She is not concerned with things so much as people and emphasizes the point with her hand jabbing the air like an exclamation mark. She points to a quiet, tall man somewhere in his 60's who has been busying himself helping prepare supper. "Sometimes things people think are useless just aren't if they're used in the right way. Take James for instance, they called him an idiot and his brother Otis an imbecile up in this institution in Lynchburg." She pauses for a minute letting the words sink in, James does not turn around, he continues with his work in silence. "James works marvelously with animals and he's smart as a tack, he just needed something to show some affection for — you don't get any of that in those institutions. This is my family." You can hear the determination in her voice, her eyes are bright and she grips the phone telling me to get a picture of her 'over there for God sakes'. The picture is taken and she brings the papers she has started fondling again, towards her.

"These are my plans for the new rest home, look here, it'll have room enough for nineteen residents and all on one floor. That fire was on Monday and on Tuesday two contractors were down here making designs and plans. Construction will begin as soon as the ground is soft." Dolly interrupts her with caution "we still have to get that loan Gaygie". We'll get it, they think I'm going to die, but I'll fool them".

A rebuilding fund has been established and contributions can be sent to coordinator of contributions, Harry Binkley, Box 152, Farmville, Va.

was). That winter was the worst I can imagine and Dolly kept begging me to come with her to Roanoke, but I couldn't leave my family...I wouldn't part with these old folks for love or money. So, I took the bull by the horns that time, I renovated the old farmhouse — put in aluminum siding, insulation, central heating, added a sun room and carpeting upstairs and downstairs, made it really nice." She stops, aware of a thumping from behind her. An elderly lady, she points to a rusted tank held up by a trolley, leaning against an enormous maple. A useless looking item, but obviously not. "We hooked up some pipes to it and now we get enough water to keep the garden growing during the dry months. We also have a generator that we use when the electricity goes out."

There is a naked light bulb overhead which burns with the same potent light as the silver haired old lady. Her eyes are no longer in the past and she sits up

He stalks McDonalds at 1:30 on Saturday night, his eyes blurry from the two six packs of Budweiser he's downed in the last few hours. He drifts aimlessly through the parking lot looking for familiar headlights or the glimpse of fleeting taillights. He pulls a Marlboro out of his pack and shifts down to first, reviving his engines. He lights up and inhales casting glances first left then right and spots a cruising bear in his rear view mirror. He is the American Redneck.

John is his name, because his father's name was John and so was his father's, but he is not a third, he is not that pretentious. His roots are found in coal mines and factories in pulp wood and construction. His life is built on grimy faces and steel pailed lunches, chubby ladies that make switches for NASA, sixteen hours a day, and swear with the ease of Macenroe. John is his name because his father liked his name and so gave his son what he liked... What his father likes is hunting in jacked up GMC's resting on fat mud gripping tires, with wooden gun racks screwed into the rear window. He likes tramping the woods and drinking Wild Turkey and loading Remington 12 gauges

He tells of running moonshine on the Hampden Sydney backroads in his '56 Chevy. Mike McCroey Goes For The Layup

Player of the Week

Senior guard Mike McCroey (Arnold, MD) scored 20 points while hitting nine of 10 shots from the floor in Longwood's 99-60 win over Johnson State Thursday night and for his efforts the 6-0 cager has been named Longwood College Player of the Week. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Sparked by McCroey's play, Longwood has won 10 of its last 11 games for a 10-3 overall record. The senior's shooting has been phenomenal over the past week. After hitting 9-10 against Johnson State, he came back Saturday night to hit 10 of 13 shots and score 22 points in an 87-61 triumph over Liberty Baptist.

McCroey's recent point production and deadeye shooting have pushed his scoring average to 16.8, tops on the Lancer team, and his field goal percentage to 67 per cent. The Longwood guard will be ranked among the top shooters in Division II this week.

"Mike has been shooting the ball super recently," said assistant coach Mo Schoepfer. "He's getting a lot layups off the break, but he's also been connecting from outside when he gets the openings."

McCroey has been a key factor in Longwood ranking among the national leaders in scoring (89.5

ppg.) and field goal percentage (.559).

A graduate of Old Mill High School, Mike transferred to Longwood from Allegheny Community College in Cumberland, MD. He once handed out 18 assists in a game at Cumberland. He was an All-County, All-City, All-State and All-Region performer in high school. Last season he had a Longwood record 89 steals while scoring 10.9 ppg.

The son of Mrs. Angela McCroey, Mike had a 3.06 academic average last semester. He's a Business major.

B-Ball Crushes Johnson St., Burns Flames

By MIKE LYNCH

To put things mildly, the Longwood Men's Basketball team has been stomping all over a lot of opponents lately. They have won 10 of their last 11 games by an average of 22 points and have averaged 92 points per game through that stretch. The only loss in that stretch was against Florida Memorial under decrepit conditions with questionable scoring and timing. Coach Cal Luther bluntly termed the game "a farce." It was the last game on a trip south on which the Lancers won every game.

But since the last game was the loss to Florida Memorial, the Lancers came home looking to get right back on the winning track against the Johnson State Indians. No problem! The Indians looked more like a bunch of gas station attendants than a basketball team. Their tallest player was just 6'2" and they only had nine players on their team. Consequently, Longwood annihilated them 99-60 while Johnson State was helpless on the defensive end and threw more bricks than a demolition crew on offense.

LC Guards, Mike McCroey and Joe Remar led the team in scoring (20 and 14 points respectively), while Jerome Kersey grabbed 12 rebounds to lead in that category. Actually, those stats could have been much higher, considering the fact that those players only participated in about half of the contest.

The only real challenge that JS could offer was with 15 minutes left in the first half when two consecutive layups by Curtis Carter brought the Indians to within just two points at 10-8.

After a time-out LC went into a half-court trap defense in order to gain a good margin. Using this formation Mike McCroey stole the ball on the next JS possession, eventually hitting from 10 feet to start the turnaround.

The next time down the court JS threw a brick and the Lancers got off a fast break that resulted in Randy Johnson perfectly dishing the ball off to Jerome Kersey, who promptly rammed in one of his patented one-hand fat flying death-defying slam-dunks that brought the Lancer Hall crowd to its feet and near the brink of insanity. A slam-dunk like that does nasty things to your opponents' egos and JS was no exception. By 10 minutes left in the half, the Lancers had gone ahead 31-12 and had no trouble keeping control for the remainder of the game.

For the rest of the game Longwood played everybody they had while Johnson State never made a substitution until well into the second half. To no one's surprise the Lancers wound up winning 99-60 to up their record to 9-3.

On Saturday night, Liberty Baptist at least brought in a real basketball team although still not the caliber of Longwood. By steadily outplaying the Flames Longwood came out with a convincing 87-61 victory, relying on a running game and solid defense.

The Flames' main threat was guard, Greg McCauley who scored 22 points, many of which came from perimeter jumpers but he was the only Flame to score double figures compared to four players from Longwood, including Mike McCroey who tied McCauley for high points honors at 22.

In the first half Liberty Baptist only made seven field goals (even Johnson State made 12) consisting of four McCauley bombs and three layups by assorted players. Credit a tough Longwood defense for this. The formations were regularly changing as the pace of the game demanded it and the resulting 25 first half points by Liberty Baptist, which is almost unheard of considering the pace of the game, attested to the Lancers affectiveness on defense.

On offense, Joe Remar and Mike McCroey took advantage of fast breaks and set plays to put in 11 and 9 points respectively while Ron Orr took much of the heat off of a heavily covered Jerome Kersey by putting in jumpers from the side of the key for 10 of his 11 first half points. Add a couple of more of those crunching slams by Kersey and the damage is done in the form of 41 first-half points by Longwood to take a 16-point lead into the locker room.

The second half opened up rather sloppily after a few points were scored. For a while, there were many steals but few points resulted for either team. Longwood got it back together though and kept the margin to 13 or more for the first 10 minutes of the half. Then, for the next five minutes McCroey and Remar ran circles around the tired Flames, stealing, driving and giving assists to spur a doubling of the lead, 70-46 with 6:34 left. After that, the game was just played out to an 87-61 Longwood victory over what really was a tougher team than what the score showed them to be.

Darryl Case Named Div. II All-American

Longwood sophomore Darryl Case, of Cincinnati, Ohio has been named to the 1981 National Soccer Coaches Association of America-McDonald's All-America Division II Soccer Team, it was announced Saturday at the NSCAA convention in Chicago.

Case, who was one of 22 players named to the squad, was chosen on the second team as a defender. He was the only Virginia booter chosen on the Division II team. Said Kamali of Virginia Commonwealth was named to the third team All-America in Division I and Pekka Kaartinen of Averett made second team All-America in Division III.

The first Longwood student-athlete to be named All-America in soccer, Case had already been picked for All-Conference, All-State and All-South honors, after leading Longwood to an 11-4-3 record, best in school history, this past fall. The Lancers ended up ranked fourth in the Mid-Atlantic Region in Division II and were considered for the NCAA Division II Playoffs.

Case scored three goals and had three assists while playing back for Longwood, but it was his defensive play which won him the respect of fans and opponents and ultimately, the honor of All-American plaudits.

"Darryl had a tremendous season for us," said Longwood soccer coach Rich Posipanko. "He has great quickness and he uses it to make the big plays from one end of the field to the other."

Case, who transferred to Longwood last year, after playing for the University of Cincinnati, had a sparkling prep career at Madeira High School. A starter for three years, he had 22 goals and six assists as a senior and was captain of the team.

A Business Administration major who pulled a 3.07 GPA first semester, Darryl is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Case, of Cincinnati.

Lady Lancers Host Richmond

By KAY SCHMIDT
Longwood's lady cagers have a busy schedule this week with three games on tap. Tuesday Longwood travels to William & Mary in a VAIAW Division II conference game. Earlier this season Longwood was edged by the Lady Indians 52-48, despite holding a halftime lead. Thursday night the Lady Lancers host Richmond in another conference contest. Longwood fell to the Lady Spiders 84-53 in their first meeting this season. In their final game of the week, Longwood is on the road again Saturday to meet Division I James Madison.

Robin Powell (in earlier action) set a school record of eight assists against VCU.

Last week the Lady Lancers fell twice, losing to Hampton Institute 66-48 and Delaware State 60-58. The Radford game scheduled last week was postponed due to snow. Longwood was ahead of Hampton 30-28 at the half.

Freshman Florence Holmes scored 26 points in the two games, including 14 points and 16 rebounds against Hampton (15-4). Senior Robin Hungate led against Hampton with 15 points, shooting 5-5 from the line. Cindy Eckel scored 15 points and Robin Powell 13 at Delaware State.

Longwood now stands 4-8 overall and 2-6 in conference play.

Grapplers Fifth In W&L Tourney

The Longwood Grapplers, who placed fifth in the Washington and Lee Tournament, travel to Richmond Tuesday, host Lynchburg Wednesday and round off the week at the Campbell (NC) Tournament.

Freshman Mike Hackett, who paced the Lancers by winning the 118 pound class, became the second Longwood wrestler to win a weight class title. Hackett was undefeated (3-0) in the tournament and now boasts a 10-5 record. He posted a 24-3 rout over Washington and Lee, a pin over Pfeiffer (NC), and a come from behind win (11-10) over Catawba (NC). The Catawba wrestler was seeded number one for the tournament.

Catawba, who eventually won the tournament, recorded 61.5 points. Pfeiffer took a close second with 60.75, Elon was third with 59.25, Washington and Lee placed fourth with 51.25, Longwood captured fifth with 45.5 and Davidson and Hampden-Sydney placed sixth and seventh with 29.75 and 19 points respectively.

Although the Lancer Grapplers placed in the bottom half of the field, the squad compiled some impressive statistics. For starters, the wrestlers won 15 of 24 of the matches and lost only one by a pin and two in the overtime period. Longwood also placed five other wrestlers in the top four positions of their respective weight class.

Freshman Charles Campbell took second in the 150 weight class and is 7-5 in overall play. Freshmen Steve Albeck, a 142 pounder now 8-6, and Dana Dunlap, a 167 pounder now 8-5, won third place as did junior Joe Bass, a 177 pounder now 6-2. Sophomore David Dodd took fourth in the 158 pound class and presently has a 5-2-1 record.

Dodd and Bass suffered injuries in the tournament, but coach Steve Nelson is optimistic that his ailing grapplers will be geared up for a busy week of action.

"We're bruised and battered, but I think that we will be prepared for next week's matches." David (who suffered a possible broken nose and injured shoulder) is still questionable, but he should be ready."

Although several wrestlers had outstanding outings, the grapplers still were not satisfied with the fifth place finish.

"The kids were disappointed that they didn't finish higher and with a few breaks we could have been in the top four," said the coach. "I thought we wrestled real well and now the team is looking for a winning season."

The grapplers will have plenty of chances this week to extend their 4-2 team record.

The difference between the high and low basket was $15.92. If the shopper purchased only the highest priced items found, the cost of the basket would be $67.26. For the shopper who bought only the lowest priced items, the basket would cost $51.34. The obvious conclusion is that it pays to be knowledgeable and to shop around.

In January, in addition to the regular market basket, the "Trivia Basket" survey will be taken. The Trivia Basket includes items that most consumers buy in addition to food, and this survey is taken quarterly. As more quarterly data is available, comparisons between quarters can be more realistic and enlightening.

The market basket and trivia basket studies are projects of the Economic Seminar class of Longwood College and are under the direction of Dr. Anthony B. Cristo. The studies are financially supported by the Longwood College Foundation.

Male input has played a big part in the student union growth. The current SUN chairman is Jerry Richman of Toms Brook, Va. He's the first male student union chairman.

There can be no question that the arrival of men had a tremendous impact on social life at Longwood, but what about other areas? Academics, student government, athletics? In part two of this series we'll take a look at these areas and examine what motivated the first males to attend Longwood and how they feel about their college choice now.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA

NO. 14

Yes Virginia! There Are Men At Longwood

Editors Note:

This the last of a two-part series about four male seniors and their views on how Longwood has changed its image from an all girls school to a co-ed institution.

By HOKE CURRIE

It's no coincidence that 1976, the year Longwood became a coeducational college, is also the year that business administration became a major academic area here.

Wait a minute: Did you say business administration? Isn't Longwood College an all-female, teacher education institution?

Not any more. Currently, there are over 675 Longwood students majoring in business administration and about half of that number are men. Business is now the most popular major on campus.

Chesterfield, VA senior Dallas Bradbury, one of our senior men who was recently interviewed about a changing Longwood, believes strongly in the college's business program.

Bradbury feels that the business curriculum is being expanded to provide more offerings of interest to men as well as women.

"As far as business is concerned, I see a lot more things like insurance classes, investments, real estate and a lot more economics courses being offered," he said. "These areas are geared more toward males, I guess. I'm not saying there aren't females in it, but that's primarily some of the areas that men are interested in and they're offering more of those type courses now."

While the business administration major is booming, Longwood is still known for its teacher education program. Interestingly enough, senior men Randy Johnson of Richmond and Duke Rollins of Portsmouth say their high school math teachers, both Longwood graduates, helped persuade them to be among the pioneers in coeducation at the Farmville college.

RATIO A FACTOR

Rollins admits that the boy-girl ratio at the newly coeducational college also affected his decision to attend Longwood.

"I was told that if I went to Longwood the ratio might be something like 8-1 or 10-1 girls to guys," admitted the Portsmouth native. "And, being the male that I am, I thought that was nice. I have to admit it was a drawing card." (The actual ratio is now 3-1).

Another factor which encouraged men to attend Longwood was athletics. Johnson (basketball), Rollins (baseball) and senior Brian Cochran of Alexandria (soccer) had an interest in athletics at Longwood.

Since some shaky early beginnings, the Lancer men's athletic program has gained some notoriety with a fourth place national finish in basketball in 1980 and All-American honors in basketball, baseball and men's golf. Soccer has also been outstanding recently.

As in other areas of campus life, Longwood men were not readily accepted into the world of athletics. Some participants in the college's already strong women's athletic program had some reservations about their male counterparts.

"The attitude of the female athletes has changed now, but it took a long time coming," said Johnson, a three-year starter on the men's basketball team. "The animosity was unreal when I was a freshman."

"In high school, athletics wasn't male oriented or female oriented. It was team oriented. Everybody, field hockey or track or whatever, had the same camaraderie towards each other. "It was different when I got here. A certain female gymnast once told me: 'Well, I'm on the gymnastics team, and I think we should get the gym cause you'all are just the men's basketball team.' Now, me and the young lady laugh at the things we said to each other freshman year."

MALE STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT?
As evidence of how far the males have come in five years at Longwood, Rollins predicts that the college could have a male student body president soon.

"This year several men were elected to student government positions," said Rollins. You can anticipate within the next maybe two or three years, Longwood might have its first male student body president."

Rollins, Johnson, Cochran and Bradbury agree that Longwood is attracting more mature and more intelligent male students than in the past.

"The kind of males Longwood is getting now are a lot more mature," said Rollins.

"The guys coming in now want to make Longwood a better place. They plan to go here four years and they want to be able to say 'I went there and I'm proud of it'. Whereas now people say 'You go to Longwood? It's a girls' school isn't it?'" while recruiting students for ECU throughout North Carolina and Virginia.

After graduating with a business degree, her hands on experience took her to a Graduate Assistantship that included all phases of Institutional Advancement and running the Ambassadors. After Barbara Nanzig resigned, Lemish suggested she interview for the position. This spring, Martin will be phoning alumni for funds, working on Founder's Day, inauguration of Dr. Greenwood and the parents telethon.

Martin says she was "impressed with the loyalty and teamwork here". She adds "everybody from the secretaries on up wants Longwood to succeed and they want the best for the students and the college". It seems Martin wants the best as she pursues her graduate studies; and one day aspires to be president of a college or university.

Drunk Driving, Vandalism Combated

Al knew he had had too much to drink. When he let his head roll back he could feel the dizzy, nauseous feeling he usually had after at least a six-pack. Tonight was no different — but this time it was not beer but whiskey.

He fumbled with his car keys and finally opened the car door. His best friend, Steve, was finishing the remains of what was a bottle of tequila. And the tequila was finishing what remained of Steve.

"Hey Al," Steve belched while tossing the bottle aside. "Don't hit too many cars!"

Al never heard his friend over the sound of his screaming tires and deafening motor. He was off and roaring — singeing the night air with tearing metal, smashing glass and no more parties...

Alcohol has been responsible for an estimated 50 per cent to an indicting 75 per cent of all traffic accidents. And Dr. Leo Salters, Dean of Students and Longwood student Bill Frazer are aware of this. They and student leaders have developed a program of community awareness that is trying to combat the problems of drinking and driving, vandalism and actions which they term "not in the best interest of self or others" with operation CARE. "Care stands for creating a Responsive Environment," tells Frazer, an established student leader.

Salters says the program was created after a Longwood student was killed in an alcohol related traffic accident. But he stresses that the program does not concentrate only on alcohol. "We also encompass areas such as how to deal with stress, anger (and even) dormitory cleanliness."

Frazer realizes that people dislike being told what to do. Particularly while drinking: "We are not telling people what to do." Instead of dealing solely with problems when they arise CARE is implementing a caring attitude with people before a crisis arises.

"At Hampden-Sydney," Frazer tells, "they have a statement like: 'friends don't let friends drive drunk' on the back of basketball tickets."

"And," he says, "It's just subtle things like that that raise consciousness."

"If a friend knows that you care about him he will respect what you say more in a situation that demands outside involvement."

The organization has a set of guidelines that define actions not in the best interest of self or others and even stresses "modeling of caring behavior ourselves."

But this is a challenging program because it is difficult for anyone to alter his or her behavior in a stressful situation. "Perhaps it is a losing battle?" Frazer looks disappointed then decides different: "In my own mind this is not a losing battle...I'll never give up on a friend."

Team Deserves Respect

To Editor, The Rotunda:

I am writing this letter in response to the article in the Tuesday, January 6, 1982, issue of the ROTUNDA entitled "B-Ball Crushes Johnson State" by Mike Lynch.

My concern with this article is Mr. Lynch's total lack of respect for the Johnson State basketball team. I refer specifically to the lines "The Indians looked more like a bunch of gas station attendants than a basketball team," and "...Liberty Baptist at least brought in a real basketball team."

The fact is that Johnson State was a real basketball team and do deserve respect and objective reporting. I saw the game, and granted, Johnson State was not the best team that has ever played the game of basketball, but may I remind you that Longwood's men's basketball team was 2-12 in its first year. Does that mean that Longwood was not a real team then?

If Mr. Lynch is going to continue as Sports Editor of the ROTUNDA he must learn to report the fact without unfair conjectures about players and teams. I agree that it is good to be enthusiastic about the home team, but never should a reporter disgrace another team.

S-UN Prohibits BYOB

To the Longwood College Community.

The Executive Council of the Student Union would like to remind you that it is illegal to even attempt to bring in or take out alcoholic beverages at S-UN events. In view of the recent infractions of this law, we feel it is time to remind the student body of our current actions and the actions we could take toward persons that break this law.

Until this semester, S-UN has confiscated any alcoholic beverages that persons try to bring in or take out. Also at times we have expelled persons in violation of this law from the event without a refund. Effective January 19, we now send a letter to persons who we find in violation of this law and remind them if they are found in violation again, they will be expelled from the event and will not be allowed admission to any S-UN event at which beer is sold for the remainder of the academic year.

If these infractions continue, S-UN will not only turn violators in to the College Honor Board but also to the proper State authorities. This law is a Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board law and not a law made by the Student Union.

S-UN asks that you carefully weigh the consequences before you even try to bring in or take out any alcoholic beverages at any S-UN events.

---Movie Review---

By JOE JOHNSON

Napoleon.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

And God said let there be scrungy halings that fall through the vacuumed elevator shafts to the tune of Good Friday Masses; with a touch of tubular bells. Let them roar on screen through the gridded twilight zones and black holes of the mind. Let them be called "Time Bandits".

Michael Palin's epic horseplay, like C.S. Lewis' Chronicles of Narnia begins in the shattered doorway of a young lad's closet. Through which Knighted steeds run amuck and six warped elves appear promising fantastic voyages and a carefully uncontrolled chaos.

The idea is not new. From H.G. Wells to Isaac Asimov time has been a ball to bounce around in. But few do it as cynically as Palin. The bandits, greedy dwarfed helpers of a not so friendly supreme being (Ralph Richardson) have all the grace of Tolkien's Gollum. Clothed in grumpy bearskin rags and candle topped colanders, they emerge in a young boys room fleeing their master, whose map of time holes they've stolen.

Back, back through the room's wall, like infinite black shafts. They emerge in the clouds, in castilgne, looting a unixeded Back, back to Sherwoods green timber, and to rascals like them, who steal what was stolen.

Back, back to Agamemnon's city, the lad is crowned King, but the gnomes do strike, and swipe him again.

But what would Tolkien's Frodo be without a Mordor? So too with Palin's naturalist hobbits. An evil genius who is cleverly named evil genius (not as imaginative as Sauron, but you should see what he wears) is also after the dirty baker's half dozen. He wants the map, to overthrow creation and start all over with important things (who needs 46 species of sparrows) like micro chips and integrated circuits.

A plot. Ahhh yes, a plot, but first a word about the excellent nightmarish star was type special effects. Okay, now a word about the brilliant camera angles that make your stomach flip-flop.

Onto the plot, grand midget Arch Angels who tempted by a "your money or your life" game show host at first falter, but arise and gather their loins to duel with the biggest baddie in a vast colodrum of violence.

World War II artillery tanks are employed, with feudal archer's backing and a batch of John Wayne types to battle evil, who winds up a charred hunk of roast beef in a 1982 microwave.

If you appreciate the grotesque burlesque, go to this movie. But be prepared to yank the imagination and ask the omnipresent question — "did God make a boo-boo?"

Editor's Turn

What are we going to be when we get out of Longwood or graduate? Considering that there are more business majors than any other major I would be safe in saying there will be accountants, accountants, accountants and a few —I-plan-on-going-into-business-for-myselfers. But with business majors falling from pregnant clouds onto a land of high interest rates, screaming fuel prices and death trap supermarkets I'll have to think they will be searching trash cans for food and the classifieds section of the newspaper.

Perhaps the problem could be that everyone and his brother, mother, sister and dog is in college. In 1900, fewer than 12 per cent of people aged 14-17 were even in high school. I wonder how many of them thought of becoming an accountant? Just imagine a conversation at Longwood between two girls in August of 1901:

Sue: "Hi, I am a freshman. What is your major?"

Jill: "Oh, dear, isn't everyone a double major in business and computer math, with minors in economics and accounting?"

Sue: "Well...ah...no. I am just an English major." She pushes her nose into the sky and says: "And I am going to be an English teacher."

Jill: Her friend seems befuddled and decides she feels sorry for her. "No money there," she says.

What a disgrace. An English teacher when she could have really taken advantage of the money flow back then. Just a little brains and the fact the competition was not as keen then as it is now and she could have been hiring the accountants. But I guess Jill beat her to it.

And I will be willing to bet my municipal bonds that everyone is beating down the placement office door at Longwood. (I hope my bonds are not worth 3 cents.)

"The emphasis is on money boy. You got to eat." He is right. But the emphasis is on money, money, money, eat, eat and eat. But if you go to college you have to get a job that pays enough for food and an extra pair of shoes. Right? Huh? I mean that is what I always heard. Even if

England Rules The Charts

By RUSTY ROXX

I started a column last week about the top albums of 1981, but I could never satisfy myself as to the rankings. Nevertheless, I came up with the following ranking (based on sales and quality):

1. Tattoo You — The Rolling Stones
2. Hi Infidelity — REO Speedwagon
3. Long Distance Voyager — The Moody Blues
4. Moving Pictures — Rush
5. "4" — Foreigner
6. Heavy Metal (Soundtrack)
7. Hard Promises — Tom Petty
8. Face Dances — The Who
9. Arc of the Diver — Steve Winwood
10. Fair Warning — Van Halen
11. Street Songs — Rick James
12. Modern Times — Starship
13. Escape — Journey
14. Working Class Dog — Rick Springfield
15. Blizzard of Oz — Ozzy Osbourne

After I had fought with this list awhile I realized something — where were the American groups? Where was the sensation of '79, The Knack . . . where is Boston, Kansas? Why are a bunch of Englishmen dominating the charts? Why have they always seemed to do so? Why don't American groups fare any better?

Anyone who doubts my ranking ought to take a look at the Billboard chart and the Cashbox chart. Anyone who doubts my ranking of the Rolling Stones as the group of the year should have tried to get tickets for their concert in Washington, D. C. The Glimmer Twins are as hot as they've ever been.

In fact, out of the top ten, five groups are English, one is Canadian and one is a compilation which can't count either way. Why isn't America number one — why has America rarely been at the top since the prime of Holly, Berry and Presley?

The answer is simple — America has a sectionalism and only a few rockers have been able to cross lines and none have been able to dominate for any length of time. People in Farmville yell for "Freebird," in Ohio they scream for Styx, in L.A. they'd die for

"Lyin' Eyes," in Nashville they love Blackfoot, in New Jersey Springsteen is unchallenged, in New York they can't get enough of Gino Vanelli, in Detroit Bob Seger causes heart failure in Detroit and in San Francisco it's S.R.O. for the Grateful Dead. American groups occasionally have a smash but none has dominated with the authority of the English. There was a National Lampoon record which had a very funny line: "Rock is an American form, a combination of blues and folksong which can only be played well by Englishmen with long hair."

There may be more truth to that statement than is realized. Notice that it is the "long haired Englishmen" that are controlling the chart, not the New Wave groups.

Certainly this British grip on the charts dates back to the Beatles' rise to fame and a number of groups rode the Fab Fours' coattails to fortune, (the Stones, the Kinks and the Who) but they have survived in their own right.

Their key to success may well be that they received rock through a different, totally independent set of cultural filters. The English groups seem to have evolved a style which combines melody with a harmony that is distinctly English and an energy that is as All-American as the Everly Brothers. Their press is also expertly managed, and a group like the Who just seems a combination of superheroes and mystery.

They are also an "import" and that label alone seems to be an endless fascination for the American public, not only in music. Anything that is an import seems to have an automatic prestige and so it is with jeans, jewelry and Jagger.

All these items combine to make these survivors not unaffected by American sectionalism, but gives them the ability to combine it in an effective eclecticism. They seem to be able to take the musical pulse of this nation better than we can ourselves. Until American groups rise above their sectional love, Britain will rule despite 1776.

Elder Hostel Initiated

Longwood College will be offering a program entitled Elder Hostel, for the first time this summer. Inspired by youth hostels and folk schools of Europe, the Elder Hostel combines the best traditions of education and hosting in a network of over 500 colleges, universities, independent schools and folk schools across the United States.

The program is being offered to all those over 60 years old and will include the following courses: "An Examination of Virginian Architecture from 1607-1840" — Dr. Richard Couture, "Archaeological Views of the Culture of the Prehistoric Southern Indians" — Dr. James Jordan (this class will also include a trip to the Smith Mountain dig); "The South and Its Stories" — Dr. Martha Cook (included in this class is a review of short fiction by William Faulkner, Robert Penn Warren, Flannery O'Connor, Eudora Welty).

Ruby Atkins, who has participated in Elder Hostels in the past, will be hosting Longwood's program which will be offered from July 25-31. She encouraged anyone interested in a growing experience to participate. "It was one of the most rewarding experiences I've had since I retired."

Lancers on the Road

Longwood's men's basketball team, stung by a disappointing loss to Radford Saturday night, must bounce back against strong competition on the road this week. After hosting West Virginia Tech Monday, the Lancers visit nationally ranked Virginia State Wednesday night, play at strong Div. III Rutgers-Camden Saturday and at Monmouth, another Div. II power next Monday. Longwood has a 10-4 record.

A talented Highlander team visited Lancer Hall Saturday night and handed Longwood only its second loss ever at Lancer Hall, 72-67. Radford, now 14-5, used 65 per cent shooting to take a 14-point lead in the first half and nailed down the win at the free throw line, making 23 of 26 foul shots in the second half.

"I think Radford played super, particularly in the first half," said Lancer head coach Cal Luther. "While they were shooting 65 per cent our shooting was way off. We fell behind and had to foul in the second half. You have to give them a great deal of credit for making 30 of 35 free throws."

While Longwood's shooting was off for the most part against Radford, junior Joe Remar continued his fine play with 20 points, mostly on long range shots. The 6-0 guard handed out four assists and made only one turnover in 38 minutes of action.

Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey scored 18 points and grabbed seven rebounds before fouling out with over seven minutes left to play. The 6-7 sophomore added two slams for a season total of 15. Senior Randy Johnson had his top performance of the year with 15 points and 11 rebounds. The 6-4 cager led a Longwood rally which cut Radford's lead at the end.

Hackett Player of Week

Freshman wrestler Mike Hackett (Stafford, Va.) won all four of his matches last week and copped first place at 118 pounds in the Washington & Lee Invitational wrestling tournament. For his efforts, Hackett has been named Longwood College Player of the Week. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Hackett, who holds the best individual record of any Lancer grappler (11-5), won all three of his matches at Washington & Lee to become only the second wrestler in Longwood history to win a tournament title. He also won a 21-3 decision in Longwood's 33-28 triumph over Richmond, but suffered an abdominal injury which kept him sidelined for the rest of the week.

The performance of Hackett and several other young grapplers has been a key factor in Longwood's getting off to a 6-4 start, its best ever in wrestling. Coach Steve Nelson hopes to have his standout back in action by next week.

Hackett, a graduate of Spotsylvania High School in Fredericksburg, was the State AA runner-up in his senior year as well as captain and team MVP. He was also MVP as a junior.

A business major, Hackett is son of Gordon B. Hackett of Stafford.

Gymnasts 2nd at Penn

The Longwood gymnastics team travelled to Pennsylvania Saturday and placed second in a tri-meet that also included Glassboro State. Pennsylvania recorded the top score of 135.6, Longwood totalled 128.1, and Glassboro St. finished with 85.8. The Lady Lancers now stand at 2-3.

Top competitors for Longwood were: Dayna Hankinson — 2nd floor, 3rd all-around; Kathy Idelson — 3rd bars, 4th floor; Kelly Crepps — 3rd vaulting, 5th all-around; and Monica Chandler — 3rd beam. Chandler's 8.45 on beam was a season high for the team.

The next competition for the Lady Lancers will be Saturday when they visit long-time rival Radford. Longwood narrowly defeated the Highlanders last season 127.65 to 127.1. The last home meet of the season will be Tuesday, February 9, as the Lady Lancers host Duke and Maryland-Baltimore County.

Ailing Grapplers Face Tigers

By RONNIE BROWN

Longwood's wrestling team, now 6-4, will travel to Hampden-Sydney Tuesday and participate in a four team match at VMI Saturday, in action this week.

In last week's action, the grapplers won over Richmond 33-28 Tuesday and Lynchburg 33-23 Wednesday before bowing to Campbell (NC) and Pembroke State Saturday by scores of 44-3 and 45-6.

Mike Hackett, a 118 pounder, Charles Campbell, a 150 pounder, and Joe Bass, a 177 pounder, each had decisive wins by decisions to pace the Lancers to their second victory over the Spiders this season. Against Lynchburg at Lancer Hall, the grapplers totaled four pins to also defeat the Hornets for the second time this season. Campbell, Bass, Steve Albeck, a 142 pounder, and Dana Dunlap, a 167 pounder, each had pins over their opponents from Lynchburg.

The Lancers stood 6-2 before Saturday's action in North Carolina, but were overwhelmed by Campbell and Pembroke State, whom Coach Steve Nelson says is the best small college team in North Carolina. Joe Bass was the only Lancer to record a victory on the trip south.

Coach Nelson's grapplers are ailing from injuries and must rebound to keep alive hopes of a winning season.

"I was expecting Pembroke to be tough, but I was surprised by Campbell's strength," said Nelson. "Their performance (Saturday) was the best I have seen them wrestle."

Compounding to the tough competition, the Lancers have been plagued by injuries to two of their key performers. David Dodd, who suffered a shoulder injury, is expected to be out for the remainder of the season and Mike Hackett, who has been the Lancers' top performer, was unable to compete against Lynchburg, Pembroke or Campbell. Coach Nelson hopes Hackett will be ready in a week.

The key match this week is against arch-rival Hampden-Sydney, whom the grapplers have never beaten and with injuries it will be tough to break that string.

"We will have to wrestle really well to beat them," said Nelson. "They have good wrestlers in the upper weight classes."

Lady Lancers 1-2 Last Week

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's women's basketball team has two games scheduled for this week. Those are Bridgewater, away on Wednesday and UNC-Greensboro, home at 2:00 on Saturday. UNC-G (10-1) is currently ranked second among NCAA Division III teams. Longwood now stands 5-10 overall after winning one of three games last week.

Last week's action was highlighted by a 58-52 victory over conference opponent William & Mary. Cindy Eckel and Robin Powell scored 12 points each against the Lady Indians and Valerie Turner came off the bench to score seven points in the last seven minutes of the game. In other games last week Longwood fell to conference leader Richmond 63-47 and Division I James Madison 64-49.

"I am very pleased with our defense, but a little disappointed with our offense," says Head Coach Jane Miller of last week's play. "We played a smart game against William & Mary, our shooting percentage was high (48 per cent) and we had few turnovers (12)" said the coach. Miller cited freshmen Mariana

Johnson and Judy Painter for their fine performances last week. Johnson scored a career high eight points against JMU while grabbing 6 rebounds and four steals. Painter had five points, three assists and two steals against the Duchesses. Longwood is currently ranked third among conference teams on defense, giving up only 63.5 points per game.

Robin Hungate is ranked number one among VAAIAW Division II teams in free throw percentage. The 5-10 senior has shot 80 per cent (28-35) from the line according to latest figures. Florence Holmes is ranked in three categories, fourth in scoring (15.0) sixth in rebounding (10.8) and tenth in field goal percentage (44.1 per cent).

State Food Prices Drop— Farmville up 2.6%

FROM PUBLIC AFFAIRS

FARMVILLE, VA. — The new year started on a rather sour note for local food shoppers. Food prices in January went up 2.6 per cent from December levels.

When compared to January of 1981, the local consumer fared somewhat better. The January 1982 market basket cost $60.90 in local stores, compared to $60.80 a year ago.

In the latest market basket survey, the price of 22 food items went up, 15 went down, and three stayed the same from the beans, oranges, carrots, celery, onions, potatoes, peaches, corn tomatoes, and sugar. Evaporated milk, bananas, and tomato soup were priced the same as last month.

A comparison of the local situation to other parts of the state is shown in the table below. The figures for Richmond, Northern Virginia, and Norfolk-Virginia Beach-Portsmouth were provided by the Department of Labor and Industry in Richmond.

Showing the largest yearly decline among the four areas of the state was Northern Virginia

Arrid deodorant, Alpo dog food, Windex cleaner, Jergen's hand lotion, 9-Lives cat food, Tide detergent, and Top Job cleaner.

Sharp decreases in prices were found for Dial soap, Bounty towels, GE light bulbs, Hershey's candy bars, Reader's Digest, Bic Fine Point pens, Pledge furniture polish, Kleenex tissue, Leggs panty hose, Downy fabric softener, notebook paper, Eveready batteries, Wrigley's chewing gum, Johnson's cotton swabs, Lysol spray, and Prell shampoo.

Local gasoline prices followed

	DEC. 1981	JAN. 1982	% Change 12/81-1/82	JAN. 1981	% Change 1/81-1/82
Farmville	$59.37	$60.90	+2.6	$60.80	+0.16
Richmond	58.10	57.64	-0.8	59.34	-2.9
Northern Virginia	58.42	58.74	-0.5	64.22	-8.5
Norfolk-Va. Beach-Portsmouth	58.48	58.02	-0.8	58.76	-1.2

previous month. Accounting for the rather sharp rise in January were higher prices for flour, corn flakes, bread, soda crackers, round steak, bacon, hot dogs, frozen haddock, tuna fish, cheese, milk, frozen orange juice, apples, cabbage, lettuce, peas, coffee, cola drinks, shortening, peanut butter, margarine, and grape jelly.

Prices went down for hamburger, pork chops, fryers, ice cream, eggs, frozen green

(8.5 per cent). Farmville is still the highest priced area. It is surprising in comparing the four areas that the Richmond area presently enjoys the lowest food prices in the state.

In addition to the local market basket, the Economics Seminar class also took prices of the "Farmville Trivia Basket" in January. The sharpest quarterly increases in this basket were for Budweiser beer, Marlboro cigarettes, Crest toothpaste, the general state and national trend. Except for Texaco which went up slightly, the prices for Exxon, East Coast, and Imperial gasoline went down during the quarter.

The Farmville market basket and trivia basket are projects of the Economics Seminar class at Longwood College. The studies are financially supported by the Longwood College Foundation and are under the direction of Dr. Anthony B. Cristo.

Concert Choir Performs at Washington and Lee

By CINDY CORELL

The Longwood College Concert Choir travelled to Lexington Friday to perform in two concerts with The Washington and Lee University Glee Club and Show Choir.

The choir left campus Friday morning and arrived at Rockbridge High School where they put on an hour long concert with the W&L Show Choir. Following this, the choir went to the W&L campus for a rehearsal in Lee Chapel and a short tour of the campus. The W&L Glee Club provided dinner and entertained their guests with a performance from their Show Choir.

At 8:00 p.m., before an audience of about 125 people in Lee Chapel, the W&L Brass and Percussion Ensemble, under the direction of Robert Stewart, the Longwood College Concert Choir, directed by Mrs. Pauline Haga, and the W&L Glee Club and Show choir, directed by Gordon Spice, put on Washington and Lee University's Winter Concert. Each group performed for approximately twenty minutes and then all three groups combined to perform "O Clap Your Hands" by Ralph Vaughn Williams, directed by Gordon Spice.

Soviet Interests Spark Work

By JOHNEL BROWN

"Yes, I suppose I'll be here forever," he chuckled as he told me of his fifteenth year teaching at Longwood. Dr. James Crowl decided in undergraduate school at Davis Elkins that he wanted to teach history. He later chose Soviet History as his major, and worked to earn his Ph.D. at the University of Virginia.

Originally from Pennsylvania, Dr. Crowl is now a Farmville resident and very pleased with teaching and working with the students here at Longwood. Last year, Dr. Crowl was a member of the inter-fraternity council, and this year he is actively involved with Sigma Phi Epsilon as their chapter advisor. He spoke highly of the members of the fraternity and you can always find a group of SPE's in Dr. Crowl's office and holding informal rap sessions.

When I asked about his activities or interests outside of work here at Longwood, Dr. Crowl looked stunned as though there was no life outside of Longwood and searched the room for traces of life elsewhere. Finally as though he'd stumbled into awakening, he remembered that he did enjoy adventurous indulgences like canoeing, fishing, and playing bridge with the Cristo's — now that's adventurous! (Except maybe for the bridge!)

"...I suppose I'll be here forever."

In late December, Dr. Crowl produced a more climatic and significant piece of workmanship than playing bridge with the Cristo's. His efforts of over three years of research and refinement manifested into his first published book, Angels in Stalins Paradise: Western Reporters in Soviet Russia 1917-1937 — a Case Study of Louis Fischer and Walter Duranty. A rather expendable title, I inquired to its meaning, and Dr. Crowl told me the story of two American reporters, who for paradoxical reasons, chose to create Back in the early '70's, a group of rockers came out of Chicago with a vengeance. Chicago, of course. They had what was then termed a fusion style: jazz-rock. Well, fans in 1982, the word is out.

Jazz is back. Big Time.

Not the "Big bands" which will never come back but jazz-rock or fusion is back in an updated role and selling more records than ever. Chicago and Blood, Sweat and Tears have, regrettably, disappeared from the chart but in their place is a new breed of jazz-rock.

Grover Washington, Jr. released "Just the Two of Us" this summer and it created a tremendous success. Besides reviving a fantastic vocalist (Bill Withers) it allowed for some good jamming from Grover... and it went gold. Chuck Mangione is still reeling from the success of "Feels So Good" and Earth, Wind and Fire survive disco to remain the best band in America working on a funk-rock format. But those lucky few who attended the S-UN production of the Washington, D. C.-based group Natural Bridge really know how exciting fusion can be. Natural Bridge stormed through two tempestuous sets, breaking all the rules of what fusion rock ought to be. And they were awesome. After a couple years of country rock it is great to have fusion back. Those who missed Natural Bridge ought not to be scorned — but pitted.

Natural Bridge is riding on a brand new form that has been created in only the past few years. A style where the excitement of jazz meets the energy of rock 'n' roll. Surely if they had warmed up for Robbin Thompson, he would have been blown off the stage. It would not be as surprising if in 1983 Natural Bridge would be a chart-bound band and not Thompson's band of mediocres.

...one guy who shouted "Freebird" was met with no response except everyone wondering what cultural vacuum he had come out of...

Or worse, Fat Ammonds and his beach music. Fat will be gone... (soon I envision a giant Dietac consuming the former Rhondell). But, jazz... oh, my, it nearly died in the 60's and now is more alive than rock.

This new fusion style is less handcuffed than that of Chicago; it doesn't rely on a given type of sound. Gino Vanelli, for instance, handles fusion much differently than George Benson who is worlds away from Weather Report. In fact, there are so many different flavors that are available that the line between Jazz and Rock is more blurred than ever. In fact, ever since Miles Davis announced that he could form a better rock 'n' roll band than Hendrix (something which he has failed to do) jazz and rock have grown steadily interdependent on one and the other.

Sometimes the results are negative, and results in "canned music" (read: junk). Witness the decrease respect for the mighty Maynard Ferguson. Herbie Hancock and Stanley Clarke are two more great players who have lost their early promise. But how refreshing it is when the results are positive. ... Zappa, Billy Joel, Stevie Wonder, David Bowie and Dizzy Gillespie. Even the Stones have flirted with jazz.

Natural Bridge is just the latest installment. Sometimes jazz-rock is just a watered down version of both but Natural Bridge proved to all that it is a dynamic and viable form. The one guy who shouted "Freebird" was met with no response except everyone wondering what cultural vacuum he had come out of... and if that was all he wanted why didn't he sit in his room and play "Freebird" until his ears fell off (which wouldn't take long). No one else is complaining and let's hope the current marriage of Jazz & Rock is a happy one and lasts a long time. Coming up: A three-part series: "Is Rock Art?" I'd like your help with this question and would appreciate your response at Box 606. Be fun and have good, 'til next week.

The Waterworks Players under the direction of Mr. Dudley Suave will present Dylan Thomas' Under Milk Wood — a play for voices. The play will be presented Thursday night, February 11, at Hampden-Sydney. Curtain will be at 8:00 o'clock.

Dr. Rosemary Sprague, who has worked extensively with the play, said, "It will be an opportunity for the students to see some good acting. They will also enjoy the musical hall humor. It is essentially a comedy, with some serious spots. It was a tremendous success when played in New York"

Louise Dimicelli will be performing in the Gold Room tomorrow night at 8:00 p.m. Ms. Dimicelli has performed at schools like the University of Texas to St. Bonaventure. This will be her second engagement at Longwood. The concert will be free.

Dimicelli to Perform in Spotlight Concert

FROM PROMOTIONAL SERVICES

Filled with energy and creativity, Louise delights her audiences with pure, wide-ranging vocals, innovative musical arrangements and an irresistible spirit. With equal ease she can squeeze the last drop out of her own sassy blues song "Sleepy", cartwheel through a jazz improvisation of "Glory of Love" or render an exquisite tender ballad.

In the past few years, Louise has emerged as a singer-songwriter with growing appeal and a gift for leaving the audience with the warm feeling of having been a part of her music. She has completed many successful college tours from the state of New York to Washington state; developing strong rapport with audiences in Illinois, New York, Texas, Florida, Wisconsin and Arkansas. She has displayed tremendous virtuosity by appearing alone or in concert with such greats as Odetta and Martin Mull.

As explained by one reviewer, "In a finely shaped piece of wood there is solidity and gentle movement of the intricate grain. In Louise Dimicelli there is the same beauty."

Students work during the College year; well, the exception on Saturdays and examinations periods by the students at Longwood College, Farmville, Virginia.

Letters to the Editor are welcomed. They must be typed, signed and submitted to the Editor by the Friday preceding publication date. All letters are subject to editing.

Your Turn

Business Majors Defended

Editor, The Rotunda:

This letter is in response to your highly questionable editor's turn concerning the choice of major fields that people pursue.

In the first place, I am not quite ready to accept your unfounded generalities about my major or the future plans I may wish to pursue as a result of that major. Also, it needs to be pointed out to you that people succeed or fail not majors.

If I had to bet my municipal bonds which any business or Economics major knows are not very good investments, I'd say that there are a lot more career opportunities for accountants and other business majors than there are for English majors. Unless I'm highly misinformed I don't see any alternatives for you except as an English teacher or an author. Unless you are extremely good, which may not be the case, you will be an unpublished author; unpublished authors are a dime-a-dozen. They are the ones that "will be searching trash cans for food and the classified section of the newspaper." Upon finding this section of the paper, it would only further frustrate the already frustrated English major, as the employment section is rather large for qualified accountants but is extremely small for English teachers and authors.

As a final point, I just want to say that this is not an attack on the editor, his staff, or the English department. I merely want the credibility of the business department defended. When we graduate we are qualified and competent. But, indeed, it is true our search for a job will be a difficult one, just as it is for many college graduates these days.

Dallas Bradbury

Editor's Note: The editor is sorry you missed the point of his column. If you go back and reread it you would find that it was not "an attack" on majors but the attitudes of students in any major. The misconceived notion that college will guarantee jobs and lucrative income is ridiculous. "When we graduate we are qualified and competent" is a pile of bologna.

You did strike gold though when you agreed... "It is true our search for a job will be a difficult one." Yet students here are not using the placement services available to them.

---Movie Review---

Cinderella and Prince Vicious

By JOE JOHNSON

Walt Disney is back. Cinderella in her gilded white gown and fragile glass slippers is once again filling the pre-pubescent dreams of little boys and girls. I could not review this movie. What if the characters were stereotypical, unhumorous, trite even. Would I be able to face my own coveted youth, knowing I had been so easily bamboozled? Of course not, but there are some fascinating aspects to the tale just the same.

For instance, have you ever tried to figure out what decade Cinderella takes place in, for that matter what century? There were fairy godmothers in 1860 but not in 1862? It is timeless, right?, a fairytale set adrift in the 4th dimension. But what would happen if we plucked Cinderella out of the stream we go a-fishin in and set her right here in 1982. Gave her a parrot green wrap-around, Izod sweater and Agner shoes. Put her in a college somewhere on the east coast and let her have three very rotten suite-mates, who wear leather jackets with zippers in the appropriate places. We would get a preppie Cinderella in Punk Rock Land.

Cinderella hops into the room,

do our homework."

"That's right", continued Sado, whose hair is died neon blue, "You can't come to no punk rock party with us — you have work to do, here, eat your cornflakes."

to that party," she finally decides and slips into her father's old army jacket and jabs a safety pin through her cheek and starts walking.

Four white mice and a pumpkin the campus looking for a cheek to match the pin.

He knocks on Cindy's suite. "Hi, I'm looking for a vicious blond in an army jacket that was..." Fato screams, Sado faints, Maso yells "Jesus! it's Sid Vicious," and Cindy comes bopping out with a Pappagalo multi colored handbag and pink button-down. "Oh Hi, Sid darling — I was hoping you'd stop by." Sid is overwhelmed. "What a great idea — colors, I can see it now, lime green, puke pink, yucky yellow — a new fad, I'll be at the top again Baby — where did you get all the crazy costumes?"

"At Leggetts."

"Is that anything like the Salvation Army?"

He does not wait for the reply but fits the pin back into her cheek and they are married by a local D.J. And so, as the story goes, the not so handsome punk prince (you wouldn't be handsome either if you'd been dead for 3 years) and the preppie Cinderella, lock cheeks and live happily ever after.

Don't ask me why she's eating cornflakes for supper—this is a fairy tale—remember?

her bright pink ribbon bouncing on her back. "Where are ya'll going to, you look absolutely ravishing." Maso, one of the three punk sisters (Maso, Sado and Fato) says, with steel studs gleaming eloquently on her jacket, "we're going to a wild punk party with Elvis Costello, Devo, the B-52's and the King of Punk Sid Vicious. "Oh can I go too," squeals Cinderella with her ruby lipstick dripping.

Fato, who has just put the finishing touches on her facial (pin through the cheek and shaved eyebrows) says, "Hell no, you prissie preppie, you have to

(Don't ask me why she's eating cornflakes for supper — this is a fairytale — remember?)

So Cindy sits down to eat her cornflakes as the three punk pistols shoot off into the night. Unfortunately, some PCP the punksters (no punkettes — no gender in Punk Land) had been sprinkling into their joints is on a tray right along side the sugar and Cindy does not know the difference.

Shortly, dragons are swimming out of electrical sockets and the walls start melting. "Far out," says Cindy, who thinks her hand is growing daffodils. "I am going kindly stop her and give her a ride. She, of course, does not realize she is hitching a ride with four white mice and a punkin — she thinks it is a checker cab. "1133 Forty Second Street and don't spare the gas."

To make a long story short she goes to the party, meets Sid Vicious and falls madly in love. (Of course we all know Sid Vicious is dead, but necrophilia is nothing new to punksters). However, she has to leave at twelve to get her suitmates homework done, but not before Sid Vicious pulls the pin out of her cheek. The next day he is cruising

Field Botany Class Offers New Insights Into Nature

by Joe Johnson

"People tend to be frightened of the natural environment, because they're not familiar with it. If you keep your eyes open and your mouth shut nothing will happen that isn't expected." Dr. David Briel draws a breath and continues, "Of course what you wear is important — don't go through a poison ivy patch wearing a bikini."

And a bikini definitely wouldn't be the proper attire for the six-credit Longwood Summer Field School in Botany directed by Dr. Briel. The field course offered for the first time at Longwood College, will be held during the second session of summer school from July 5 through August 6.

"We're hoping to get people who like watching National Geographic on the tube to realize that those types of exotic things are right here in their own backyard. They should go outside and look at these things for themselves."

"The Piedmont region forms a large resourceful area, not only for Virginia but elsewhere in the southeastern states. This summer school field school will let the people who are interested — and there are no prerequisites to this course (except curiosity) — to get down on their hands and knees and examine these plants, work with them."

"The course will be studying different kinds of plant communities, using special tools and simple identification manuals. We will be doing such things as measuring growth, watching the different rates of change which occur between plant communities (succession) and identifying the common trees, ferns, herbs, and mosses that occur on the Piedmont. The influence of climate, topography, Briel and Mosses: mutualism at its finest.

soil type and drainage will be investigated. Hopefully many skills, such as map reading, soil testing, and utilizing various instruments for determining temperature, relative humidity, altitude and light will be developed. We also plan on having lots of fun.

"Of course, as I mentioned before, there are hazards. I spent last spring semester in Florida collecting mosses in the Everglades Swamp area — you learn to respect the water moccasins and alligators. One thing that always happened on the Plant Ecology field trip, when we went down to areas like the Seashore Park that have Spanish moss, was an infestation of red bugs when the students tried to bring the moss back with them.

"The big plus to this is being able to go out in the field during the summer, in the past the only time allotted for such field trips was during the fall or winter and the plants are dormant during these months."

"There is some unusual plant growth around here too. I bet you didn't know we had Canadian hemlock trees in our own backyard or, for that matter, cacti creeping along the rock up

Wrestlers Host Four-Team Match

The Longwood wrestling team, which now stands 7-7, participates in the Capitol Collegiate Tournament (DC) Tuesday and hosts a four team match with Townson St., Loyola and Newport News Apprentice Saturday at Lancer Hall. Action begins at 1:00.

In last week's action, the Lancers lost to the Tigers of Hampden-Sydney by a 37-15 margin, and were 1-2 in a four team match that boasted three Division I schools, Saturday.

In the Lancers' loss to Hampden-Sydney, three Longwood grapplers came away with wins. Steve Albeck, a 142 pounder, recorded pins over their Tiger opponents. Joe Bass, a 177 pounder, edged out Neil Huffman of Hampden-Sydney 12-8.

Saturday, the Lancers, who were the only non-Division I team, traveled to VMI and were greeted with two losses of 49-2 to Duke and 39-10 to the homestanding Keydets. Longwood did manage to gain a decisive 51-12 victory over East Tennessee State. Bright spots of the matches included a 2-1 showing by Steve Albeck and Joe Bass. Bass' overall record now stands at 12-4, a great achievement considering he has only been wrestling since January. Albeck boasts a 13-9 mark.

The Lancers were outclassed by Division I power VMI and ACC member Duke, but Coach Steve Nelson thought his grapplers showed more consistency than in the Hampden-Sydney match.

"It was a challenge for our kids, but we got to see what they could do against the best," said Nelson. "Considering the caliber of competition, we wrestled better."

The grapplers will try to get back in their winning ways on Saturday and the addition of Mike Hackett will enhance their chances in pulling out a winning season. Hackett, a 118 pounder, has been suffering from a torn muscle and has been out of action for two weeks.

Lancer Hall will be the site of a four team event that features Townson St., Loyola, Newport News Apprentice and the homestanding Lancers. Longwood has already defeated Newport News 33-15 and won over Loyola 25-21 in last year's competition. Townson St., who beat the Lancers 47-6 last season, will field one of the stronger teams, but Coach Nelson believes that Newport News will also be a threat.

"They (Newport News) are a hundred per cent better than when we wrestled them earlier in the season," said the coach. "We will have to wrestle them tough if we expect to have a chance to win."

Longwood's Student Athletic Booster Club held its first meeting last Tuesday with Athletic Director Carolyn Hodges and several students present.

The group discussed its objectives (1) to promote athletic events at Longwood, (2) to increase attendance at home games, and (3) to arouse school spirit in students.

Plans for the club include, promoting all sports by announcing games on the Longwood radio station (WUTA) and putting up signs around school, obtaining local high school bands to play at home games, sponsoring bus trips for students to big away games (men's basketball at Liberty Baptist, women's basketball at VAIAW State Tournament), getting a mascot (Lancer) for home games, and sitting together as a group to cheer at games.

The next meeting will be held Tuesday, February 9 (today) in Lancer Hall, Room 208. Officers will be elected. All students interested are welcome to attend.

Kersey Repeat Player of Week

For the second time this season and the 5th time in his two-year career, Jerome (The Cobra) Kersey (Clarksville) has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period January 29-February 5. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

An all-around excellent performer in his sophomore season, Kersey had 18 points and seven rebounds in a 72-67 loss to Radford, 26 points, 13 rebounds and seven assists in a 94-86 win over West Virginia Tech and 16 points and six rebounds in a tough 84-78 loss to Virginia State.

Currently averaging 11.6 rebounds and 17.3 points, Kersey is already Longwood's career rebounding leader with 435. The 6-7 forward has had 19 slam dunks, 54 assists and 34 steals in addition to his scoring and rebounding this season.

A strong All-America candidate, Kersey has ranked all season among the top rebounders in NCAA Division II. Last season he finished 11th in field goal percentage at 62.9.

Kersey holds Longwood season records for field goals (197), field goals attempted (313), rebounds

JEROME KERSEY

(249) and blocked shots (32). In addition, he broke his one-game rebounding record this season when he pulled down 20 against Armstrong State.

With 749 career points already, Kersey is well on his way to scoring 1,000 points, a feat he should achieve early next season. The sophomore may also top the 1,000 rebound mark before he's through.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Kersey of Clarksville, Kersey is a graduate of Bluestone High School. He's majoring in Social Work.

Lady Cagers Split Two

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's women's basketball team defeated Bridgewater Wednesday 60-57, but fell to highly ranked UNC-Greensboro Saturday 74-67. Freshman, Florence Holmes led with a 40-point, 21-rebound total in the two games. The Lady Lancers are now 6-11 overall, and 7 in VAIAW Div. II.

This week the lady cagers have two conference games scheduled. Longwood visits George Mason Tuesday and hosts Liberty Baptist Saturday night at 7:30. Wednesday's win over Bridgewater was a close, see-saw battle. Although Longwood led 33-8 at the half, the Eagles came back in the second half to tie the score 57-57.

With less than a minute left on the clock, Cindy Eckel hit one of two free throws to put the Lady Lancers ahead 58-57. After Bridgewater missed a shot, Longwood's Robin Powell canned two free throws with 19 seconds left to cap the victory. Holmes had 19 points and 12 rebounds while Mariana Johnson scored 10 points and Powell 9.

Saturday, Longwood faced UNC-Greensboro, ranked second in NCAA Division III. The Lady Lancers led by as much as 12 points (18-6) early in the first half, but the Lady Spartans evened things up at the half 33-33 and went on to a 74-67 win, their Longwood's men's basketball team, 12-5, now ranks as the highest scoring Division II team in the country, according to NCAA Stats compiled Thursday. The Lancers are averaging 87.9 points per game to top Division II.

In addition, Longwood is 4th in field goal percentage, Jerome Kersey is seventh in rebounding and guard Mike McCroey is 9th in field goal percentage.

The Lancers, who won two of three last week and face Monmouth (NJ) tonight (Monday), visit Atlantic Christian Thursday night in a game that was snowed out earlier and District of Columbia, ranked 11th, Saturday night.

Longwood polished off West Virginia Tech Monday night 94-86, lost to 14th ranked Virginia State 84-78 Thursday and routed Rutgers-Camden 94-69 Saturday night in action last week. The Lancers rallied from 12 down in the second half to go ahead of Virginia State 76-74 but lost in the final moments. Kersey sat out 13 minutes of the first half with three fouls, but came back to score 14 points in the second half.

Longwood head coach Cal Luther is closing in on a major milestone of his career. Luther has a career mark of 298-199 and may well equal the 300 victory mark this week. Luther, in his 21st year coaching, gained most of those wins at Div. I Murray

State in Kentucky.

Sophomore Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey, Longwood's leading scorer (17.4) and rebounder (11.6), also tops the team in another category — slam dunks. The 6-7 forward has jammed the ball through the rim 22 times. He also has 54 assists, 34 steals and 15 blocked shots while shooting 59 per cent from the floor.

Longwood got 20 points from Ron Orr, 19 from Kersey and 15 from Joe Remar in whipping home-standing Rutgers-Camden Saturday night.

Mike McCroey, Remar and Orr are all averaging around 15 points per game. McCroey, 15.5 and Orr and Remar, 14.9 give Longwood tremendous scoring balance. In addition, McCroey is shooting 63.4 per cent from the floor, Orr 62 per cent and Remar 59 per cent.

Gymnasts to Host

Duke and UMBC

Hoping to bounce back from a loss Saturday to state rival Radford, the Longwood gymnastics team will be hosting Duke and Maryland-Baltimore County Tuesday night. This meet is an important one for the Lady Lancers as they try to even up their 2-4 record. Duke defeated Longwood in their first meeting two years ago, but Longwood has successfully stopped Maryland-Baltimore County twice in as many years. The meet begins at 7:00.

The 134.55-131.55 defeat at the hands of Radford gave Longwood its fourth loss of the season, but the Lady Lancers did manage to set two new school records. The team score of 131.55 broke the previous record of 128.75. Freshman Dayna Hankinson also set a new Longwood high with her 8.75 in floor exercise. The former high was 8.65.

Individual placers for the team were: Hankinson — 1st floor, 5th all-around; Kelly Crepps — 1st vaulting; Kathy Idelson — 2nd all-around, 3rd vaulting, tied 3rd bars, 5th beam, 5th floor; and Monica Chandler — 3rd all-around, 4th bars, tied 4th tremendous cover-ups of events taking place in Russia. One of the reporters, Fischer, was a Lenin biographer, and held little respect for the American capitalistic society and wanted to create a pleasant, working picture of the Soviet Union for the American public. Duranty, on the other hand, was motivated by a less honorable incentive. He was being paid great sums of money by the Soviets.

"What sort of cover up?" I asked. The two reporters were denying rumours of the famines and losses of thousands of lives in Russia.

Dr. Crowl's interest in the Soviet Union spawned the idea for his book. There'd never been a comparison or case study of the two reporters, but after researching Dr. Crowl found contrasts and similarities in the two men, and thus the creation of Angels in Stalin's Paradise.

On a lighter note, I concluded the interview by asking Dr. Crowl, (although probably somewhat biased) how the History and Government Department of Longwood compared to those of other colleges and universities in Virginia. Longwood students, being primarily English or Business majors tend to overlook other strengths in the curriculum offered. The History and Government Department, according to Dr. Crowl compares favorably to those of other Virginia schools. He credited his colleagues and pointed out that many in the department have published or are working on books. Dr. Crowl is proud of the department, and of his latest accomplishment and his interest in the students of Longwood.

Indian Shelter Uncovered On Willis Mountain

By GERE LYELL

Dr. James William Jordan and a group of students from Longwood College are excavating a prehistoric Indian archeological site on Willis Mountain in Buckingham County. The site is a small cave, termed a rock shelter by archeologists, located near the very top of the main ridge of Willis Mountain.

The site was located as a result of a suggestion made by Mr. Robert E. Taylor, businessman of Farmville, that it was quite likely Indians in early times used the small caves on Willis Mountain as a living place or for some other purpose. Stimulated by the suggestion, Jordan organized a series of three surveying trips to the mountain in November, December and January of this winter. On one of these trips the archeologists unearthed three large sherds (pieces of pottery) in one of the rock shelters. The pottery was sent to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., where it was dated by a pottery specialist, Dr. Robert Elder, as made between 1550 and 1650 A.D. It is a type of pottery known to archeologists as Dan River Pottery.

With this encouraging preliminary information, the Longwood archeologists reached an agreement with the owner of the Willis Mountain area where the rock shelter is located, Mr. Gene Dixon, Jr., to allow them to carry out archeological excavation in that rock shelter. Dr. Jordan contacted the Virginia Research Center for Archeology at the College of William and Mary to register and name the rock shelter as an archeological site — The Willis Mountain Rock Shelter. Using the students enrolled in his Indians of North America class, Jordan proposes to excavate the rock shelter, testing the idea that it may have been a special purpose location used by the Monacan Indians during the period 1600 to 1700 A.D. The special purpose may have been as a lookout to survey the surrounding countryside since at that time the few hundred surviving Monacan Indians would have been feeling great pressure from the Algonquian-speaking Indians from the coastal plains area and from the English colonists. The 1,159-foot-tall Willis Mountain rock shelter would have been an excellent haven to avoid notice.

On February 9 in the first of six planned trips to Willis Mountain, sixteen students and Dr. Jordan proceeded to climb Willis Mountain to begin a preliminary excavation of the floor of the rock shelter.

The students, divided into teams, worked in the shelter and on the talus slope in front of the shelter. The group working in the rock shelter were equipped with hospital type surgical masks to keep from inhaling the loose dust covering the floor of the shelter. Looking for pieces of pottery or any indication of habitation by Indians, they found three separate pieces of pottery, two of them being identified as Dan River Series and one piece, with unusual etched lines on the surface, which has not yet been identified. After finding one of the sherds, David Wilson, crew chief of the students excavating in the rock shelter, commented that "finding anything at all makes it all worthwhile."

Incidents Provoke Escort Service

Last Thursday at 8:10, a freshman female student was walking towards Radford Street behind the Iler Gym. Someone placed a knife at her side and told her to keep walking. As they walked, a car approached. The female student replied "I'm going to run out in front of the car." She escaped without injury, as the assault suspect fled in the opposite direction.

This year at Longwood College over seven such incidents, covering everything from indecent exposure to assault with a deadly weapon, have occurred. In response to this, Alpha Sigma Phi has established an escort service. Their phone number and names are listed below. If you cannot find a friend to walk with, give them or campus police a ring. Don't walk alone.

Farmville, Va. — Food prices in local stores followed national and state averages by going up this month. The local increase of two per cent was the smallest price rise among the four areas of Virginia where market basket surveys are taken.

In spite of increases the past two months, local food prices are still down 1.6 per cent from February of last year.

shortening, sugar, and grape jelly.

Much of the increase noted for fruits and vegetables may be attributed to the harsh winter weather in Florida and other producing areas.

Lower prices were found for flour, corn flakes, bread, pork chops, bacon, frozen haddock, cheese, milk, apples, celery, lettuce, onions, tomato soup,

Dr. Anthony B. Cristo, director of the market basket study in Farmville, states that the

The visitation hours and rules here at Longwood are among the strictest in the state. Visitation is also one of the regulations most often violated on campus. From these two observations it might be said that there is room for change here at Longwood. Changes have been occurring although at a very slow rate. As of last semester, the elimination of the sign-in, sign-out policy went into effect along with the one-hour visitation extension on weekdays. Just ten years ago the visiting hours were 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. only on Sundays. And as of five years ago, with the more freedom is often granted at home. How often do your parents place an eleven o'clock visitation curfew on you at home? Shouldn't people of college age be responsible enough to censor their own actions?

In a random survey, taken on February 10, 1982, of 555 students polled 550 were in favor of twenty-four hour visitation and five students were not in favor of it. Twenty-four hour visitation does not mean that a person of the opposite sex can stay in your room for twenty-four hours at a time, but that a person of the opposite sex may come into the dorm at any time during the day or night, though you must have an escort. This survey was conducted in the dining hall by hand count at individual tables.

It is immensely apparent from this survey how a sampled majority of students feel about visitation and how it should be changed. This college needs to progress with the times and through this, hopefully, change its reputation of a "stiff, old-fashioned, girls' college." Longwood is no longer a women's college and should not be run with rules like one.

To grow, change must take place. It is time to move on and grow as other colleges and universities have done. Slow improvements and changes have been made here over the past years but now is the time for something more significant to take place.

Black Students Insulted

By Fraternity Slave Auction

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following letters are in opposition to a system that fraternities and sororities use to sell or rent their pledges for monetary purposes.

Editor, the Rotunda:

The month of February is Black History Month; it should remind us all of the dehumanizing experience of slavery.

America's personality is characterized by freedom from any physical, psychological or emotional oppression. But from the black American's perspective America is still the land of the free and the home of the slave.

The word slave is full of piercing debasement. If you can not understand why a slave auction at Longwood College would infuriate black students, let alone during Black History Month, then you are not sensitive to the needs of human beings.

This is not the first time "slave" auctions have been met by discontent by black students.

We don't want apologies or explanations of insensitivity, we want to know that it will not happen again. We may not be able to physically stop the laborer sales or auctions, but semantically we don't need to see slave auctions advertised. The word slave must be prohibited from being used when involved with or representative of auctions or sales, by any organization or individual in advertising or publication.

"The truth shall set you free," is an old saying and the truth is—we don't like it and we don't deserve it, we want to be free from it.

Walter L. Taylor Jr.

Editor, the Rotunda:

On behalf of the Student Senate we believe that there needs to be some common consideration for ethnic students. We believe that the student body should work together as a community. An effort should be made to be sensitive to the various cultures on campus and their ethnic backgrounds. The practice of degrading, debasing, vandalizing, and verbal harassing needs to stop. We are not asking you to change your opinions, but to strive for mutual respect of your fellow members of the community. We feel that this is necessary in order to provide a more productive atmosphere. Longwood College provides more than an academic experience. Situations here at Longwood are magnified because we are such a small community. Because of this, we need to work in harmony rather than in conflict to upgrade Longwood College.

Please remember that we are all here working towards the same goal—enrichment of our lives, and knowledge.

the Student Senate

Bright Spot In Job Market

Editor, The Rotunda:

I have recently talked with several juniors and seniors who have expressed great concern because of the uncertainty of their future in today's job market. These students have every right to be worried. As Dallas Bradbury so accurately stated in his letter of February 2, 1982, the "search for a job will be a difficult one, just as it is for many college graduates these days." In this period of difficult economic times, students may be forced to consider jobs they originally had no interest in. One of these jobs may be military service. FACT—a graduate of Longwood's ROTC program will begin his or her career with three advantages no other department here can offer: 1. a guaranteed job, 2. guaranteed employment for three years following graduation, and 3. a starting salary of approximately $18,000.

A common impression of the Army among today's young people is that it is made up solely of people who carry rifles and drive tanks. I will not deny that this is available, if you want it. But it takes eight people in support roles to put that one infantryman in the woods. There are jobs available for any college graduate, regardless of academic major. There are over 200 students taking ROTC courses at Longwood this semester. Some of them are committed to military service, but most of them are merely exploring this employment option.

Freshmen and sophomores need to start looking realistically at their futures now. Don't wait until your senior year to start worrying about what you will do after graduation. Juniors and seniors, if you are getting concerned about your future, you might also want to consider starting out as an Army officer. You could do a lot worse.

CPT Tom Stanford
Army ROTC

Computers-Engineers

Top Salary List

Northwestern University's Endicott Report quotes higher salaries for '82 graduates. Front runners in salaries are the engineers who may earn as much as $25,000 in 1982. Salaries for computer science graduates could be as high as $22,000, with chemistry and mathematics-statistics graduates averaging as high as $21,000. Business, economics and accounting graduates could be in the range of $17,000-$18,000. Liberal arts graduates are down the scale at approximately $16,000.

Students Can Find Light From Crawling Into Caves

By JOE JOHNSON

Like Paleolithic man they will scramble, crawl, walk and climb, on their knees through incredibly sticky mud, under stalactites over stalagmites wearing hard hats and carbide lights. They will set bait for blind beetles, eyeless millipedes and cave crickets (all less than a quarter of an inch) "And hopefully, by the end of this physical and biological study of caves they will have at least a working knowledge of speleology," said Dr. Lynn Ferguson, assistant Professor of Geology and Biology at Longwood College, who is offering a summer field course in speleology.

The course, offered from May 16 to May 29 at Jeffers Auditorium, will be a four credit study with no background necessary (except permission of the instructor). The class is limited to 12 students; therefore, early registration is important. Fees are due April 30.

"Although the class will start at Jeffers Auditorium each day, with a two hour lecture," continued Dr. Ferguson, "it will, by no means, be held to that locality. There will be daily field trips to various caves in Virginia and West Virginia (two of which are the most beautifully decorated in this area). The evenings will be dedicated to plotting of survey data, drafting maps (for the caves explored), slide presentations and yes . . . studying.

"The two main areas the course will study will be in geology and ecology but we will be covering such diverse topics as hydrology in limestone terrain (dye tracing), cave photography, exploration history, archaeology, paleontology, faunal survey, evolution of cave organisms, correlation of physical and biological data (where possible). And, of course, there is the physical or sporting side to speleology. There is a certain thrill to venturing where few have gone before. The chance to see and do things out of the ordinary definitely has its appeal.

"The hazards of caving are minimal if one takes adequate precautions, has the proper equipment (which will be provided), and is willing to hold onto a rope. Not that there will be any extensive ropework or rappelling, we will probably use handlines and cable ladders. Working inside the cave will be as safe as a car ride. I have led students on about 28 trips into wild caves (as non-commercialized caves are called) and the closest thing to an accident was when one girl slipped on a mud bank, slid sideways, and landed lengthwise with an enormous splash in the stream at the bottom of the slope. The worst she got from the incident was a wet head and a good laugh.

"When people talk of hazards in caves the one thing that always comes to mind is bats. A needless worry; Virginia and West Virginia simply have no caves with teeming colonies of bats (such as found in Texas and New Mexico.). A few species of bats (no, there are no vampire bats) hibernate in the caves over winter and several species roost in the cave during the day, in the warmer months, but generally you have to be looking for them to see them.

Dr. Lynn M. Ferguson is an Assistant Professor of Geology and Biology in the Department of Natural Sciences, Longwood College. Dr. Ferguson has been exploring caves and involved in cave related studies for 20 years. He has visited a wide variety of caves, including the marble caves of New England, the ice caves and lava tubes of the Pacific Northwest, the maze caves of South Dakota, pit caves of northern Alabama, and the extensive limestone caves of Kentucky and West Virginia.

Dr. Ferguson has degrees in geology and zoology (Ph.D. in zoology, Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University). He is an authority on camptodeid diplurans (bristletail insects), many species of which are known only from caves. He has presented many papers on his research at scientific meetings, at the state, regional, national, and international levels. He has assisted in the surveying of major caves in Virginia, West Virginia, and Kentucky, and is currently involved in the excavation and recovery of Pleistocene aged bones from a West Virginia cave. Students may want to drop by and see the speleology display on the main floor of the Longwood library.

Specific information and forms for registration may be requested from Dr. Lynn M. Ferguson, Department of Natural Sciences, Longwood College, (804) 392-9353; or from Dr. Robert H. Lehman, Dean of Continuing Studies, Longwood College, (804) 392-9256.

Longwood Offers Summer Trip To Italy

Among the summer 1982 opportunities offered by Longwood College is a two-week visit to Italy, with stops in Venice, Vicenza, Milan, Florence, Naples, and, of course, Rome the Eternal.

The tour will be directed by Richard T. Couture, a member of Longwood's history faculty. Departure will be from Dulles International Airport, Washington, D. C., on Sunday, June 13, with arrival in Venice.

Among the highlights of the trip will be a gondola ride along the Grand Canal and visits to the Piazza San Marco and the Basilica of St. Mark in Venice; to La Scala, the world home of opera in Milan; and to the Cathedral of Santa Maria del Piote, Uffizi Gallery, Pitti Palace, and Bargello Museum in Florence.

In Rome, the group will see the Colosseum, the Arch of Constantine, the Forum, the Pantheon, St. Peter's and the Sistine Chapel at Vatican City.

Two days will be spent in Naples, with visits to the rim of Mt. Vesuvius and the excavations of Pompeii and Herculaneum.

After a final free day in Rome, the group will depart on Monday, June 28, for the flight back to Dulles.

The tour "package" price (approximately $1,500) includes air and land transportation, lodging, breakfast each day, tour guides, and admission to all points of interest during the daytime tours. Lunch and dinner and evening entertainments are not included.

Persons interested in the trip to Italy should contact Richard Couture at Longwood College, telephone (804) 392-9288, by March 1.

Four Matmen Regionally Bound

By RONNIE BROWN

The Longwood College wrestlers, now 9-8, visit Washington and Lee Tuesday and travel to Springfield, Massachusetts to participate in the NCAA Division II Eastern Regionals Thursday. The Lancers, coached by Steve Nelson, are enjoying a banner season.

Nelson will take four Longwood Grapplers to the Regionals. Joe Bass (177 pounds), 17-4, Mike Hackett (118 pounds) 13-6, Steve Albeck (142 pounds), 19-10, and Dana Dunlap, 167 pounds, 15-10-1, will be representing the Lancers in regional action.

Longwood participated in the Capitol Collegiate Tournament (DC) Tuesday and were 2-1 in a quadrangle match held Saturday at Lancer Hall.

Joe Bass, Steve Albeck and Dana Dunlap paced the Lancers by placing first, second and third in their weight classes as Longwood took fifth place in the Capitol Collegiate Tournament which featured five Division I teams.

In Saturday's four-team match, the grapplers defeated Loyola (MD) 52-8, and Newport News Apprentice 27-17, but suffered a 33-18 setback to Towson State (MD). Bass, Albeck and Mark Casstevens, who wrestles in both heavyweight and 190, each rolled up 3-0 marks. Dunlap and Mike Hackett, who came back after an injury, each finished the day at 2-1. Hackett, a 118-pounder, is from Stafford, Virginia.

Coach Steve Nelson was pleased with the performance of his matmen, especially against Newport News.

"We wrestled our best against them (Newport News)," said the coach. "The kids knew we had to beat them to have a chance for a winning season."

The grapplers will finish off the regular season at Washington and Lee and Nelson will be counting on his lower weight classes for good performance.

Gymnasts At Towson State

By LISA SPENCER

In their last regular season meet the Longwood gymnasts will travel to Towson State Saturday for a tri-meet that also includes Frostburg State. After this competition they will begin preparations to host the VAAIW Gymnastics Championships February 27 in Lancer Hall. The meet begins at 2 p.m.

This year is the first time that Division II Longwood has hosted the state championships. The Lady Lancers will be competing for the top spot against James Madison, Radford, William & Mary, and Virginia Tech. Longwood placed second in last year's tournament behind Division I James Madison. The Lady Lancers were the Division II champs.

In action last week, Longwood chalked up wins against Duke, Maryland-Baltimore County, and William & Mary. The Lady Lancers scored 129.4 to Duke's 123.3 and UMBC's 109.8, and 127.45 against W&M's 124.70. The team now stands at 5-4.

Lady Cagers Down LBC

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's women's basketball team, now 7-12, will travel to Radford Friday for a VAAIW Division II conference contest.

In last week's action, the Lady Lancers bowed to George Mason 88-42 Tuesday, but bounced back with a 47-42 victory over Liberty Baptist on Saturday. Longwood now stands 4-8 in league play.

Florence Holmes led Longwood against Liberty Baptist (9-13) with 13 points, 13 rebounds, five steals and two blocked shots. Cindy Eckel scored 10 points while Judy Painter had seven. Holmes also led against George Mason (14-8) with nine points and 10 rebounds.

In latest standings, Robin Hungate is ranked number one among VAAIW individuals in freethrow percentage with 82.2 per cent.

Holmes is ranked fifth in scoring and seventh in rebounding. She is currently averaging 13.8 points and 9.9 rebounds per game.

Bass Player Of Week

Junior Joe Bass (ALEXANDRIA), who won four out of five matches for the week and won the individual title at 177 pounds in the Capital Collegiate Tournament last Tuesday, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period February 5-12. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Longwood's top grappler a year ago, Bass faced five Division I foes and defeated four of them. Saturday, Feb. 6, he beat opponents from VMI and East Tennessee while losing to a tough wrestler from Duke. Tuesday in the Capital Collegiate, he became the third wrestler in Longwood history to take a tournament title as he defeated foes from American University and George Washington to take the title at 177.

Bass added three more wins

Saturday to stretch his record to 17-4, by far the best mark ever for a Lancer wrestler.

The Mount Vernon High School graduate has been a key factor in Longwood rolling up a 9-8 dual match record. Bass, who joined the team second semester, has helped the Lancers do a tremendous turnaround from last season's 3-12 mark.

One of four Longwood wrestlers who will travel to Springfield, Massachusetts Thursday for the NCAA Division II Eastern Regionals, Bass finished seventh in last season's regional competition.

A rugged competitor, Bass has pinned opponents who outweighed him by 100 or more pounds during his two-year career at Longwood. He has competed in the 177 and 190 pound classes and last season won several times as a heavyweight.

Reagan Budget Proposal Strips VA of $30.6 Million In Educational Loan Money

Social Security Already on Phase-Out

By MARK SEGAL

Marvin Ragland sits behind his desk, buried in paperwork, and taps on his calculator for answers to the blistering budget cuts President Reagan's administration has proposed for the following school year.

"It's going to be very hard to be an independent student," he says. He should know; Ragland is the director of Financial Aid at Longwood. He and other college officials foresee serious problems for students (starting next year) who are receiving any form of financial aid. Statewide, Virginia can lose $30.6 million in federal money.

Currently, 69 per cent of the students at Longwood are receiving some form of financial aid — from VELA (Virginia Education Loan Authority) to scholarships. Because of the proposed cuts Ragland estimates that, "next year we could drop from 69 to 54 per cent...and in 1983-84 we could go down to 40 per cent," (of the students that will receive aid).

As of last October 1, Guaranteed Student Loans, which include VELA, bank loans, credit union loans and those from savings and loan associations, will be restricted to students with a combined household income (parents and student) of under $30,000. Currently there are 897 students receiving this aid, or 38 per cent of the college population. This $30,000 lid will constitute a 40 per cent drop in students getting this aid (a reduction of 349 students). In terms of dollars, the school now has students borrowing $1.9 million dollars. Students will lose $766,000 under the proposed budget. Guaranteed student loans for graduate students will be completely abolished.

The 1982-83 school year would represent minimal loss for Pell Grants. But in 1983-84, $91 million will be cut. This would eliminate over one million students nationwide. At Longwood 44 per cent of the money will be cut and drop those receiving PG from 587 to 326 students.

Supplemental Grants (SEOG) will be cut by 48 per cent and leave only 31 students from a current 59. But in 1983-84 the program will be cut.

Presently, Longwood has an $81,000 budget for State Student Assistance Program aid. The Federal government matches state funds. But in 1982-83 this program will be cut by fifty per cent because all federal money will be halted. This will reduce the 425 Longwood students receiving it by 50 per cent.

Ironically, students will not be given much of a chance to work for their tuition because the Federal Work Study program foresees a reduction of 26 per cent in 1982-83. This, coupled with a phase-out program for college age social security recipients does not leave many alternatives for students confronted with rising tuition costs in the years to come.

Every September, beginning next fall, social security benefits will be cut by 25 per cent until the student leaves school or turns twenty-two. But for entering freshmen there will be no social security unless they are enrolled as a full-time student before May 1, 1982. The program will be completely gone for all college students in four years.

Agreements between the State and Defense departments concerning sanctions by the Western world against Russia in Poland's crisis, are far apart. So far that President Reagan will decide this week on the matter.

The countries floundering economy has changed President Reagan's strategy in seeking passage of his 1983 budget. Reagan lacks enough congressional votes according to White House reports. The President will more than likely delay debate maybe until this fall.

In Atlanta, Homer Williams, father of Wayne Williams, testified last week; his testimony has clouded the accuracy of the states circumstantial fiber evidence. The prosecution contends that fibers found on two victims came from a carpet bought in 1971 or 72 but Homer Williams claims the rug was purchased in 1968 and produced a photo to enforce his testimony.

In Egypt, Prime Minister Fuad Mohieddin followed up President Hosni Mubarak's appeal to the United States to start talks with the PLO to end hostilities in the Middle East. Mohieddin's statement to Parliament was on the eve of Middle East envoy Richard Fairbank, Jr.'s, talk on PLO autonomy.

The Sejm (Parliament) of Poland is debating the start of a tribunal of state to try former Communist Party officials and economic reforms are being considered to bolster the faltering economy. Last week 4,000 people were arrested for violating Martial law.

Therapeutic Recreation Week

Some reel with disbelief at the situation, give up like Dreyfuss' in "It's My Life Too", others, like Joni, create with an intensity, utilizing the pencil as a means of release. Still more seek knowledge — college and learn to live life in the mainstream.

The subject is, of course, the handicapped, and Longwood's Therapeutic Recreation Organization (TRO) is sponsoring an Awareness Week February 22-27.

In hopes of drawing the President's and others attention to the difficulties faced by handicaps, TRO has organized a schedule of activities for this week which will help to put a healthy person in the shoes of a handicapped individual to get a bird's eye view.

Tuesday, Feb. 23 — Disabled Staff & Faculty — There will be a number of staff and faculty members on campus that will be either Visually Handicapped or in a Wheelchair on this day.

Wednesday, Feb. 24 — Scavenger Hunt — This is open to everyone on campus. The object is for you to find as many architecturally barriers on campus. Write down your list of barriers, along with your name, box and phone number. Place this in the box at the SUN office, dining hall, or mail room by 6:30 today. The person with the most barriers wins a "TRO T-Shirt."

Thursday, Feb. 25 — Wheelchair and Visually Handicapped Maneuverability test — This is open to everyone on campus. It will be held in Lancer Gym from 12:30-1:30. Come and try out the obstacle course in a wheelchair or with a blindfold on. You will find it is not as easy as you think.

Saturday, Feb. 27 — Wheelchair Basketball Game — The game will start at 8 p.m. It will be the staff and faculty against students and spectators at the game. If you would like to play let TRO know at the door before the game. You don't have to know how to maneuver a wheelchair to play. Please come and support activities.

IS ROCK ART?
(Part 1)

It is an often asked question, and a reasonable one, if rock is art. Of course, one can argue the aesthetics of what makes a work "art" but, if we take "a distillation and projection of experience" as a raison d'être for art and we agree that art, to be good art, must be 1) fresh, 2) have viable communicative ability, 3) be contained and ultimately time or space (and therefore time to space; space to space relation) and 4) must be coherent. Though these rules are fairly arbitrary, all great art falls into their category.

Music has certain relation to the other arts but not always. The vast amount of music we call "art music" or (a less attractive term), "serious music" was almost always written for immediate and terminal consumption. In fact, creating music for the ages is a relatively new concept, one that did not exist before Beethoven. Operas were done, then thrown away, in fact we know little about a number of facets of music (i.e. the performance of chant) because, until the nineteenth century most of the music performed was contemporary. We can reconstruct visual art techniques by examination of a past work and dance (or drama) from pictures — we can only do so much with incomplete scores where improvisation and "possible" or orchestrations leave the best of musicologists at odds with each other.

So what does this seemingly open-ended discussion have to do with rock? Can it be said that the Who has created works on par with Brahms . . . or Bach?

Today, more rock groups are seeking the "legitimate" tag. Rock Operas such as "Tommy," "Jesus Christ Superstar" and "Gospel" have been overwhelmingly successful. There is a great intercourse between contemporary composers and rock musicians that has benefited all. But just because something is called an "opera" that doesn't automatically make it art. Many people will tell you rock is just electrified folk music.

A good example of this point is Southern Rock which neither wants nor seeks the pretension of art. Blackfoot's "Highway Song," illustrates the way in which southern rockers tend to produce highly accessible, roughly hewn melody, and common experience to make a "folk music" which, though often unoriginal, is nonetheless a foot stompin' good time music.

At the opposite end of the spectrum there exists the so-called "classical rockers" The Moody Blues, Pink Floyd, Yes, etc. They tend to sing of the cruelty of cosmic energy and bizarre shafts of light from distant planets. Sometimes their formulas work well and, in some cases, approach the realm of art, necessarily better, and that the inaccessible is not always higher. Complexity is not the only criteria by which art is judged.

Then we have the Eno's, Fripp's and the "avant-garde rock" (that's how they spell it) that is almost as pointless as it is useless. Most of these musicians seem to consider themselves from some dimension of a higher order, as most of their listeners (which are few) seem to consider themselves. Their music sometimes succeeds despite itself.

Just as there is a razor thin line

...Southern Rock...neither wants nor seeks the pretension of art.

but at other times their music is hilarious self-parody (for example Yes — "The Circus of Heaven") and occasionally their lyrics break down to an incoherent spacebabbler.

What this group of rockers fails to understand (a good deal of the time) is that longer is not which divides hate and love, there is also one that separates art and kitsch. So far I've been twisting the knife in the excesses of these groups, which is easy to do. But there is a select group of rock songs that are truly delicious. And, next time, we'll examine some of them.

VAE—Get Out and Sing

By CINDY CORELL

V.A.E. is a group of sixteen energetic, talented singer-dancers, an enthusiastic director and a skilled accompanist. V.A.E., (Vocal Arts Ensemble), is Longwood's newest performing ensemble, basically a show choir including vocals, choreography and multi-instrumental accompaniment.

"We still need some more funds for equipment, but as far as the rest goes — the group itself is off the ground," said director Louard Egbert, motioning toward the ensemble as they were working through the as yet rough formation of one choreographed number. "What we hope to be is a sort of public relations group," he said. "We want to get out and sing."

The group is currently rehearsing each Friday afternoon and Saturday morning, filling their repertoire with mainly popular numbers. Many selections will be choreographed and will be performed in costume, while some will be performed in standing position.

"We want anyone who has ever been involved in anything like this before to come out and audition for us," said Dr. Egbert. "We are interested in people who can sing, dance and read music fairly well. This semester we will need another tenor, a jazz pianist, an electric bass player, and a drummer." Anyone interested in any of these positions should see Dr. Egbert in the Music Dept. as soon as possible, one credit hour is available to members of the ensemble. Vocal Arts Ensemble was originally organized in the fall of 1980. That group performed as a part of the Oktoberfest "Pops" concert and also performed with the Jazz Band Mardi Gras weekend in 1981.

The group is planning at least one on-campus performance this semester, probably during Spring Weekend. This summer they will be returning for a workshop given by visiting artist Kirby Shaw, the nationally known Jazz Show Choir composer and arranger. Dr. Egbert hopes anyone interested in joining the group next semester will attend this workshop and will also return to campus one week early to organize the ensemble for next semester.

The group is divided equally into four vocal parts and the members are: soprano: Marcie Swale, Angie Peters, Theresa

John, Sabra Seneff, alto Brenda Davis, Ann McGehee, Amy McGonigle, Lisa Bowers; tenor: John Scott, Jeffrey Thomas, Dane Yonce; and baritone-bass: Horace Scruggs III, Gordon Parr, Robert Graham, and David Brooks. Jeanne Drewier is accompanist and choreography will be done mostly by Horace Scruggs III, Sabra Seneff and Dr. Egbert. So V.A.E., come on out and let them watch for more news about entertain you!

Art Series Displayed For Next Month

Farmville, Va., February 16, 1982 — Recent work by Homer Springer, associate professor of art at Longwood College, is featured in the Bedford Gallery at the college through March 19. The exhibit includes drawings, paintings, and assemblages. Of special interest are three series of works in which the artist has elaborated upon a particular theme. "Often an artist does not exhaust everything in one drawing," Springer says, "but has an idea that carries over into several works."

His "Homebodies" series was inspired by American literary figures who "had a special attachment to their homes." The four works, done in a variety of drawing and collage media on handmade paper, focus on Henry David Thoreau, Emily Dickinson, Thomas Wolfe, and Flannery O'Connor.

The theme of the second series, consisting of three acrylic paintings, is the American Indian. In these works, Springer concentrates on the "Victorian idea of the Indian as the noble savage, a romantic character." The most recent of these paintings, titled "Quanah Parker," depicts a blue-eyed Comanche whose mother was a white woman kidnapped from her home in Texas.

The third series, titled "Ikons," consists of three-dimensional assemblages which the artist calls "homage pieces or small religious statements." He has used a variety of found and made objects, including plant forms, scrap wood, old mirrors, pages from old books, and doll-like figures.

In the Ikon works, Springer makes "very personal statements" about the Madonna and Child, St. Francis, Nicholas II (who was recently elected a saint by the Russian Orthodox Catholic Church in America), and Emily Dickinson. This last work is titled "The Day Emily Dickinson's Soul Was Pulled Up To Paradise, Leaving Amherst, Massachusetts Below Forever."

A member of Longwood's faculty for the past 13 years, Springer teaches drawing, basic design, and art education courses. He holds degrees from Virginia Commonwealth University and Towson State University in Maryland.

A native Virginian, he attended Bluestone High School and graduated from Greensville County High School. He is married to the former Maryann Dianis, daughter of Paul Dianis, Jr., of Emporia.

Springer's exhibit is open to the public during regular Bedford Gallery hours: Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 12 noon and 1 to 5 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday, 2 to 6 p.m.

IFC Questions Administration's Tactics On Alcohol Prohibition

Editors Note: This is a copy of a speech that Mr. Bradbury made at last Tuesday's press conference. Since then an agreement has been made between the IFC and the administration.

To Editor, The Rotunda:

This statement concerns the consumption of alcohol in Fraternity Chapter Rooms. Nearly a month ago one of the fraternities on campus was charged with illegal consumption of alcohol in its chapter room.

Later, all charges were dropped as there were no clear cut definitive guidelines concerning this issue. As I said before, here we are a month later and still no decision has been made.

It is the opinion of many Fraternity members on campus that our basic civil liberties are being denied. We pay the college rent to lease these rooms. We are forced to abide by visitation guidelines established by the college and yet we are not afforded the same rights as other students.

These chapter rooms are not public places; we are allowed to conduct our ritual meetings and business in them without the threat of public interference.

Recognized and even unrecognized student groups are allowed to reserve the party rooms in Cox and Frazer dormitories for the explicit use of consumption of alcohol in them. It seems pretty foolish to me and also detrimental to the reputation of the college to allow drinking in these public areas but not in a private area such as chapter rooms.

One benefit that could be realized by the college by allowing this activity in chapter rooms is that it would open up other areas on campus for independent students to conduct parties. Also, it would encourage fraternity members to stay on campus and not have to experience the dangers of driving under the influence of alcohol.

Our main bone of contention, as I've already indicated to Dr. Salters in writing, is that the fraternities wish to abide by and be afforded the privileges of the citizens of the state of Virginia, the students of Longwood College and the national laws that we are subject to.

We'll Take The Extra Cash

Editor, The Rotunda:

The Student Union would like to thank Duke Rollins for his kind comments about us in a recent issue of the Rotunda. However, Mr. Rollins commented that the Student Union budget had risen from $20,000 to $36,000 over the past 3 years. In reality, our budget 3 years ago was $24,000 and our current budget is only $32,000. Instead of a $16,000 increase, we have only had an $8,000 increase. If Mr. Rollins would like for us to have a current budget of $36,000, we would be more than happy to accept the extra $4,000.

ROTC Basic Camp Gives Students Chance to Sample Before Buying

Army ROTC Basic Camp offers college students better than a money back guarantee.

"Basic Camp gives students the chance to sample Army life before they make a decision to enroll in the Army ROTC program," said CPT Tom Stanford, Assistant Professor of Military Science at Longwood. "It's better than a money back guarantee because students receive top mental and physical training during Basic Camp and are paid for their time whether or not they choose to continue."

This past summer more than 2,000 college students from across the country spent six weeks at Fort Knox, Kentucky undergoing intensive Basic Camp training. Those completing the course successfully were given the option to enroll in the Army ROTC Advanced Course and take advantage of ROTC's two-year program.

"Students who take part in Basic Camp have either recently transferred from colleges that don't offer Army ROTC, are recent community or junior college graduates, or are young men and women who, after two years, have suddenly decided to take a look at Army ROTC," said CPT Stanford.

Six students from Longwood went through Basic Camp last summer. According to CPT Stanford, all of these students continued in ROTC.

"Most of the students can't wait to enroll in the Advanced Course," CPT Stanford said.

"They consider Basic Camp a great confidence builder and an excellent way to work themselves into top shape both mentally and physically. Equally as important, they like what ROTC can offer them both now while they are in school, and in the future."

"Basic Camp gave me the opportunity to see the Army as it really is before I made my commitment. I'm glad I went," said Nick Ciucci, a psychology major.

"Basic Camp was an experience! It was hard and it was challenging; but it was fun. When you finished you were proud of yourself and your friends. The friends you make, you'll keep. I'm glad I went to Fort Knox last summer, it made it easy to make my decision about the Army. I'd do it again!" says Tanya Gallop, business major.

Cadet Major Larry Richardson, a 1980 Basic Camp graduate, says, "Basic Camp was a lot of fun. I met a lot of people from all over the country. The training was challenging and the social life was fantastic!"

Another benefit of ROTC Basic Camp is the opportunity to earn a two-year scholarship. There are plenty of them available and they are awarded solely on the basis of outstanding performance at camp, not on financial need.

Interested sophomores are encouraged to stop by and talk to any ROTC faculty member about this opportunity. The ROTC department is on the third floor of East Ruffner.

Exploring New Realms of the Network

By EDDIE HOLLANDAR

The room is quite ordinary by collegiate standards: confederate flag, Frampton poster, brimming ash trays, aluminum Budweisers, nothing new here. Conn wears nikes and is addicted to sunkist and salem light. Alaric the cleric was seen last night wearing a tie to a cocktail party. Even the dungeon master is awkwardly, what-normal (the phrase is blasphemy) handing out homemade twelve per cent beer.

"Alcohol helps a lot with this...keeps the nerves from fraying." The Dungeon Master looks up at Conn — "He just missed ya Conn, the double-edge hammer chinked off your armor like this". He joins his hands above his head, as if in homage, and brings them down twisting at the last second with a tongue slapped click. Conn's eyes are wide, "Jesus! lucky I spent my last twenty gold pieces on the magnate plates." His forehead has a thin layer of sweat, he swallows the sunkist. A flip of fate. The dice. "Shit...missed again." Wait a minute you have a plus one strength factor and plus one armor factor". The Dungeon Master informs him showing a finger smudged index card — one of a thousand. "Another turn of the wheel. "Man" electric, awe filled hesitation "ya killed him Conn".

The blood sticky corpse and double edged hammer evaporate with the victory, to the outer realms of fantasy, where reality is tailored to the imagination.

The game is Dragons and Dungeons, D&D to its devotee's. When first introduced in 1974, Dragons and Dungeons caught mostly high school students in its web of intrigue (spiders, yes, spiders are also a favorite creature) but lately has been spiraling outwards catching college students, elementary aged children and even adults in its sticky network.

E. Gary Gygas, a shoemaker by profession, invented the game one night thinking of helpful elves and other such quasi-real creatures. Apparently coming to the realization that although the elves wouldn't actually make the shoes he could let the elves and other similar manifestations the strength of hercules and wit of Mailer. One local Longwood dungeon master (who preferred remaining nameless — you can't blame him) has mapped out up to 40 such modules with towering cities and dungeons containing an intricate maze of halls and rooms (filled with gold ingots or flaming dragons depending on his taste characters: cleric, thief, beggarman, magician, elf, (to name a few), all of whom have special abilities. These specific characters form a group and unlike most other games they do not compete but work claw and claw, so to speak, to survive whatever the DM and dice dream up for them. Survival is the name of the game, hit the high rolls and run like a madman (of which there are a few). Or fight, like Conn unperturbed by towering gorillas and black winged bloodsuckers. You can't win, but you can die, which spells the end of your character. Reincarnation, however, is not abnormal and taking another character is as easy as the flick of Alaric's wand. So the game goes on for years, centuries, forming mind boggling adventures the likes of which "Heavy Metal" couldn't rust.

But a sterling D&D story is not enough for some avid participants. A few have been known to dress up in medieval costumes and actually get physically involved in the action (not Longwood...not yet anyhow). Last year the game attracted national attention (and a somewhat sinister reputation) when a student dressed in leather tongs from the University of Michigan went in search of a dragon's lair, through the college's labyrinth of underground steam tunnels. His disappearing act lasted a few weeks until he later turned up unharmed in Texas.

The average elf, however is content with a bottle of brew and vivid imagination. An imagination which, in this game, unlike a movie or book not only identifies them with the hero but makes them the hero. Not that there aren't heroines, the female gender seems to be equally attracted to D&D's romantic appeal. There is even room for a few sensuous seductresses, who in the harsh light of reality, may have all the charm of Phyllis Diller.

The game has also been well received by educators and is being used by some teachers in the classroom. Apparently the extensive reading and mathematical computation (with dice) that are involved in the game, are teaching students who normally wouldn't be taught, in a dull academic background. Perhaps D&D 302 will replace English Literature or Statistics...But don't bet your bat wings on it.

---Movie Review---

By FRED W. CAMPBELL

The 1981 Christmas movie season (which is, oddly enough, lasting through February in Farmville) seems to have change as its central theme. In many of the films released this season, audiences have seen actors and actresses alike engaged in an attempt to reconstruct and redirect their careers. James Cagney, who several years ago went into a premature retirement, has suddenly re-emerged as one of the stars of "Ragtime". Burt Reynolds shed his careless "Bandit" image to direct and star in "Sharkey's Machine", while Steve Martin turned to a Buzby Berkley style of song and dance in "Pennies from Heaven".

Not to be outdone, Sydney Pollock's "Absence of Malice" also shows us some changing stars; namely, Sally Field and Paul Newman. The film's primary concern seems to be that the audience recognize and appreciate the new images of these heralded performers but instead of making these assertions, "Absence of Malice" leaves only unanswered questions in its wake.

Sally Field gives a less than enthusiastic performance as Megan Carter, a hardnose Lois Lane type of newspaper reporter, whose personality can best be described as overliberated. Having left her days as Burt Reynolds' Tonto for critical praise and our Oscar for "Norma Rae", Fields has begun acting in a serious vein, possibly in an attempt to gain further recognition from the Academy. Unfortunately, she falls short of this mark in "Absence of Malice". Her character seems forced and awkward and lacks development. The unanswered question here is, can Sally Field pull off another serious role of the same caliber as "Norma Rae"?

The acting trophy for the film goes to Paul Newman, whose portrayal of Michael Gallagher, is somewhat reminiscent of Marlon Brando in "On the Waterfront". For the first time, Newman demonstrated convincingly that the cute-boy image of his "Butch Cassidy" days is gone. The unanswered question in this case is, what took him so long.

"Absence of Malice" also has its faults separate from the actors, one being its blah and often unrealistic script. There is an attempt to give the viewer an inside look at the newspaper business. The problem is, we've seen it all before. The script deviates from reality with such events as Field's haphazard writing of a story linking Newman with the disappearance of a certain Union executive. My friends in journalism tell me that writing a story on a whim with no proof whatsoever is simply just not done.

Sydney Pollock's directing also leaves a lot to be desired. Granted, he had a very weak script to work with, but such campy scenes as a paper carrier delivering papers at dawn to demonstrate the spreading of the news show us that Pollock hasn't changed a bit. Then again, there is reasonable doubt as to whether any director could do a good job directing this film.

"Absence of Malice" fails to reach the mark set for it by its previews. For Sally Field, it's back to the beginning in her attempts to establish herself as a serious actress. For Paul Newman, it is a giant plus. For the general audience, it is a disappointing, reshaped, absence of entertainment.

B-ball gets by Atl. Christian 64-59

The Longwood College Mens Basketball team performed admirably for most of the first half but almost blew it in the second as a comeback by Atlantic Christian's Bulldogs fell just five points short.

For most of the first half, the Lancers played like a well-tuned machine, amassing a 40-20 lead with 55 seconds left in the first half, but then they must have blown a gasket because for the rest of the game they were pretty inept, letting a twenty-point lead with a minute left in the half shrink to a three point lead with plenty of time remaining.

As mentioned, the game started with Longwood blowing the opponents out of the gym, playing the fast style game that they are most comfortable playing. Defense was a major contributor to this as Atlantic Christian only managed 12 points in the first 10 minutes of the game, Longwood was in a nasty spread-zone and the result was humorous turnovers by Atlantic Christian and several resulting fast breaks by Longwood.

Offensively, the Lancers basically did everything that they wanted to do highlighted by several successful follow shots by Randy Johnson, a well-timed alley-oop from Mike McCroey to Jerome Kersey and two good slam-dunks by Ron Orr. Orr's second dunk was an especially awesome piece of work as he went straight up the middle, took the feed from Mike Testa without breaking stride and slammed the ball home one-handed, climaxing the first half-offensive barrage by the Lancers.

Not long after this, though, Atlantic Christian found the spark they needed to ignite their so far dead offense in the form of a slam by 6-7 center, James Leggett. No running start or anything like that was needed here. Leggett simply got the ball, pivoted to position, jumped the necessary height and rammed the ball through. No sweat, huh?

Play went evenly and not very excitingly for the next few minutes as Atlantic Christian suddenly turned into a basketball team again. The last minute of the half was the turning point for the Bulldogs as they outscored Longwood 12-3 cutting the lead to a manageable 11 points at the half, 43-32.

The second half was highlighted by such impressive statistics as is fouls by Atlantic Christian and all of three field goals by Longwood. Atlantic Christian, led by the performances of Leggett, and Gary Knox and James Daniel off the bench, slowly scratched their way back into the game. By 4:26 left in the game, they were within three at 56-53. They took advantage of Longwood's low free throw percentage by fouling whenever it was advantageous to prevent an easy booklet and this strategy definitely cut into Longwood's point total.

The only high point all half for the Lancers was when Jerome Kersey stole the ball at mid-court and dribbled towards the basket for the inevitable flying one-armed slam-dunk that brought the fans to their feet, the Bulldogs to their knees and the game to a momentary half so Atlantic Christian could take a free-throw for a technical on Kersey for scoring the hell out of the backboard or something like that.

But other than that, Longwood showed no real offense for the half, mainly due to a tenacious and downright dirty defense by Atlantic Christian, but there were still enough bad shots to give the Lancers some reason to be ashamed of their second half performance. Longwood finally felt the heat though and outscored the Bulldogs 8-6 in the last four minutes to escape with the victory: 64-59.

High points men for Longwood were Joe Remar and Mike McCroey with 17 points apiece and high rebounds went to Jerome Kersey with 10. And Coach Luther was just plain happy to see his team score only three second half field goals and still win.

Orr, Remar Vital in Lancer Basketball

By GARY THORNHILL

Longwood's men's basketball team has compiled a record of 61-20 over the past three seasons and a pair of Elizabeth, New Jersey natives have played key roles in that success.

Joe Remar, a 6-0 junior guard, and Ron Orr, a 6-6 junior center, have been starters for three seasons, helping the Lancers to a 28-3 record in 1979-80 and a berth in the Final Four in Division III, a record of 19-9 in 1980-81 and 14-8 so far this season. Counting two years at Elizabeth High School, Remar and Orr have played together the last five seasons.

A solid scorer and playmaker, Remar holds the game, season and career assist records for the Lancers. With a career total of 379, he once handed out 15 assists in a game. In the 1980-81 season he dished out 145 assists to set the record for assists in a season.

Handing out assists isn't the only thing Remar does well. Presently, he is second in career points with 992. With two games left in the season he may well go over the 1,000 point mark. Remar says experience has helped him develop as a basketball player. "I concentrate more on what I'm doing now and I can handle pressure better," he said. "I have gained more confidence in myself as the years have gone by."

Orr is the Lancer career field goal percentage leader. He is presently shooting 61.3 per cent for the last 3 years. He gives credit to his pal Remar for much of his success. "Playing with Joe for so long he knows my moves inside and he gives me the good pass for a layup," said Orr. "I know my shooting range and I only take the shots in that range."

Orr is also third on the Lancer all-time rebounding list with 411. He said "playing tough inside" is the key to good rebounding.

Majoring in social work, Remar and Orr have made steady improvement in academics as well as basketball. New study habits and positive attitudes about education have figured in their success. Social Work Department Chairman George Stonikinis said, "Joe and Ron are constantly improving and continuing to grow in their commitment to become professional human service workers."

In spite of the heavy demands that basketball makes on them, Orr and Remar have worked hard to keep up their grades and maintain their eligibility. Both are pointing toward degrees in Social Work.

"Joining the Army R.O.T.C. program here at Longwood has been important in my academics," said Orr. "The program has taught me how to apply myself." Remar said

Grapplers Falter Albeck Player of Week In Regional of Week

Four Longwood wrestlers ran into some stiff competition in the NCAA Div. II Eastern Regional Tournament at Springfield (MA) Saturday and Sunday. The Lancers failed to place in the top three in their respective weight classes, losing any hopes of qualifying for national competition.

"The competition was very tough," said Lancer coach Steve Nelson. Wrestlers that we lost to reached the finals in three of the four weight classes we entered. We didn't perform well at regionals, but we still had a great season."

Making the trip to Springfield were: Mike Hackett at 118 pounds, Captain Steve Albeck at 142, Dana Dunlap at 167 and Joe Bass at 177.

Hackett won one of his three matches to finish at 15-8 for the season. Albeck, who set school records for pins and victories during the season, also took one of his three bouts and ended up 21-12. He lost decisions 16-7 to Southern Connecticut and 13-4 to Mansfield.

Dunlap, who ended up 16-11-1, had only one chance to compete and dropped a 6-1 decision to Cummings of Hampton Institute. Getting a first round bye, Bass dropped three decisions after being ahead in two of the matches. The junior placed sixth and ended the season with a 17-8 record.

Despite the disappointing showing in the regionals, Longwood's wrestlers had a fine season. The Lancers defeated Freshman wrestler Steve Albeck (SPRINGFIELD) recently set school records for wins in a season (20) and pins in a season (8). For his accomplishments, the 142-pounder has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period February 12-19. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Albeck turned in a 4-0 record in action last week, winning decisions from three opponents (Loyola, Newport News and Towson State) while pinning his foe from Washington & Lee. Standing 20-10 heading into regional competition Saturday and Sunday, Albeck won one of three matches to end up 21-12 for the season.

Captain of the team in his first season of collegiate wrestling, Albeck was one of several grapplers who helped Longwood turn things around after consecutive seasons of 1-9, 1-11 and 3-12. The Lancers finished up 9-9 this season and broke virtually every school record in the process.

A district champ in wrestling at West Springfield High School, Albeck placed fourth in the state in 1981 and was the outstanding senior on his team.

Majoring in business, Steve is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Albeck of Springfield.

Richmond and Lynchburg twice and topped several other Div. I teams while compiling a 9-9 mark, best in school history.

Rugby Loses to United 20-16

The Longwood College Rugby Football Club played to the United Rugby Football Club's performance level but simply not get the ball past the goal line when they got within range in their losing effort of 20-16 Saturday afternoon on a rather small field at the President's house.

United took the initiative at the start and drove down far enough to successfully kick a field goal giving the fans a first glance at what was United's biggest advantage of the game's kicking. The score now being 3-0, Longwood drove down the field, got very close and was then repelled by United, whose defense tightened up vastly when threatened with a score.

The action was even for a while. Then United got a break and advanced the ball far enough to kick another field goal making the score 6-0. Before long, Longwood was knocking on United's door again but United's defense, apparently not in a very receptive mood, held up again, forcing Longwood to attempt a field goal from a bad angle which Marty Mann scruffed.

So to this point, Longwood had gotten to within spitting distance of United's goal twice and come up with nothing while United had barely been inside Longwood's 22 meter line on two occasions and kicked two fine field goals. What Longwood needed was a quick strike and that was what they eventually got when Vaughn Jipner broke through the initial line of United defenders and started on a run for the goal. Bringing down Jipner is about as easy as keeping down Slater's foot but some little guy nailed him good at about the 22 meter line and he had to release the ball. Fortunately, some of Longwood's backs followed him down the field and were right on top of the ball when Jipner gave it up, getting it out to Guy DeLauderantes, who scampered in with it on the far right side. Marty Mann was good with the extra points and Longwood was now on top 8-6.

United got back in to the lead shortly after on a literal gift. A long punt from a United back bounced just right for United and just wrong for the receiver, Guy DeLauderantes, who had to chase the ball clear into the end zone, still had trouble getting a handle on the ball and had his return kick blocked, whereupon United, having a numbers advantage easily got the ball past the goal for their first try of the game. The extra points attempt was good making the score 14-8, United.

It was a great kick that caused the United-try and as a result, United would do a good deal of kicking for the rest of the game. They worked their way downfield and near the end of the half had a scrum-down situation within five yards of the goal. Normally the two teams could push about equally in the scrum but this time, United smelled blood. They pushed Longwood clear past the goal line keeping the ball underfoot until it too was in the end-zone, whereupon their scrum half pounced on it for the try, making the score 20-8. The points after attempt failed and the half soon ended.

In the second half, United got down close a couple of times but they would score no more as Longwood got tough on defense. Problem was, whenever Longwood got close, someone from United would just kick the ball clear out to midfield and Longwood would have to start another drive and usually have the same thing happen again.

One time, though, this was not the case. Kurt Mueller toed the ball to himself from five yards out and got right to the line before meeting resistance. The ball got loose in the end-zone and Doug Woods dropped on it giving Longwood its second try. Mann successfully converted again and the score was now 20-16: United. Time expired soon after, though, and United's victory was preserved at 20-16. The B game ended in no score.

Riding 6th in Show

The Longwood Riding Team travelled to Sweet Briar College Friday to compete in their first show this semester. Longwood finished sixth overall, boasting individual results of one first, and three second place ribbons.

Coach Marty Whitlock is very pleased with the young team's efforts both this semester and last semester. There were four shows last semester. "I think we've done exceptionally well — we have four members of a ten member team who have moved up a division by winning the required number of points. Mary Brockwell, a freshman, has already qualified for regionals. She has gotten three blues (first place) and two seconds. Pam Svaboda and Bryan Farrar both attended the National Finals last year and both need a few points to qualify for regionals this year."

Coach Whitlock is concerned that many students do not understand the complexities of the Riding Team competitions. When the Riding Team competes, it competes against every available team in the region, and there are now eighteen teams in this region. Some of these include Mary Washington, U.Va., William and Mary, and Randolph-Macon's Women's College.

The team members and their individual scores in Friday's show are as follows: Open Division: Pam Svaboda, 6th on flat, 4th over fences, Carol

Gymnasts Finish Season With Win-Host State Championships Saturday

By LISA SPENCER

The Longwood gymnasts closed their regular season Saturday with wins over Towson State and Frostburg. The Lady Lancers scored 129.0 to Towson's 128.35 and Frostburg's 111.9 to up their record to 7-4. Kathy Idelson won the all-around with 32.60.

The gymnasts will now begin preparing to host the VAIW State Championships in Lancer Hall at 2:00 p.m. Saturday. Longwood will be vying for the top spot along with James Madison, Radford, and William & Mary. Last year the Lady Lancers placed second in the overall competition, and first in Division II with Radford and W&M second and third.

Lady Lancers' coach Ruth Budd predicts that the competition will be a close one, and that the title is up for grabs.

"All the teams that are competing are about the same skill level this year," she commented. "The winner will probably be the team that can stick its beam routines."

Boasting the top competitors in the state in vaulting and floor exercise, Longwood stands a good chance of taking the title this year. Freshman Dayna Hankinson has won the floor exercise event in every in-state competition this season. Another freshman, Kelly Crepps, has won the vaulting competition in every meet. These two gymnasts, along with Monica Chandler and Kathy Idelson have also been strong in the all-around competition for the Lady Lancers.

This state championship will be an extra special one for senior gymnast Kathy Idelson. Kathy who became Longwood's first All-American in any sport in 1979, will be graduating this May. She has been a strong and consistent gymnast for Longwood since her first competition. Kathy has qualified for nationals every season, and was selected the 1979 Female Athlete of the Year for Longwood. She also holds the Longwood scoring record in the balance beam (8.65).

Longwood's bid for the state title will be hampered by the loss of sophomore Kim Pickel to an injury. Kim tore a ligament in her leg while warming up in vaulting against Duke and UMBC. She will be unable to compete for the rest of the season.

The state championships will be enhanced now by the donation of a travelling trophy to the winner of the Division II team title. This trophy, inspired by the father of ex-W&M gymnast Jan Roltsch, is donated to the competition in the memory of the late Lisa Winkler, a gymnast who competed for both Longwood and W&M.

LaCrosse Organized

The Longwood LaCrosse Club has been organized here on campus. The club is open to all members of the Longwood community and welcomes anybody who wants to learn about one of the upcoming games in the country! At their last meeting the following officers were elected: Bruce Lindeman — Pres.; D.J. Walters — Vice Pres.; Mike Atkins — Treasurer; Karl Kiracofe — Game Secretary; Capt. Tom Stanford — Advisor. The club plans to organize informal practices this spring to introduce the players to the game and learn the basic fundamentals and skills of the game.

If you are interested in learning about the game of LaCrosse, there are no prerequisites except the desire to learn and compete! The club will meet again Wednesday night, February 24, at 6:30 in rooms 311 E. Ruffner. If you have any questions concerning the club, feel free to contact Bruce Lindeman at 392-3339 (322 Cox). Plans to play games against other clubs and collegiate teams are in the making. Your participation is needed to make these plans a possibility!

simply that studying harder had helped improve his grades.

When asked why he came to Longwood, Orr replied, "I thought Longwood would be a challenge academically and it's away from home. Longwood was expanding in sports and academics and I wanted to be a part of it." Orr said he had enjoyed his time at Longwood. "It's a small school and I can make my presence known here," said Remar. The growing basketball program also played a major role in his decision.

When reflecting on their years here, both said that they enjoyed all the people they had met and plan to complete their education at Longwood.

Since journeying south three years ago Orr and Remar have marked their mark at Longwood. The New Jersey connection has been a productive one for Lancer basketball.

There are a lot of architectural barriers around here which hampers a person in a wheelchair. The stairs in Hiner and Lankford building are a good example. A lot of the problem is the symbolic gestures they make. For instance while President Willett was here they put in the curb cut between Wygal and Lankford building — it's absolutely useless, it doesn't lead anywhere and if it did cars are always blocking it anyhow. I'm more optimistic with the new President."

Renovations could be finished by next month on French pool.

Facelift On French Pool

By DAVID RITTER

"It could be ready by April and I think it will have a whole different feeling about it." These comments were made by Dr. Judith Johnson, chairman of the health and physical education department, concerning the renovation of French Pool.

The face lift for the pool is the final phase of reconstructing French Dormitory. The project, which costs just over $86,000, is under the supervision of Ike Finney, resident inspector for the school. Finney also believes the pool can be ready for a spring opening, "all that is left is cleaning the tiled walls, the pool, itself, plus we are installing two new chlorineators."

Other cosmetic work done on the building includes: Removal of the old bleachers, expanding the deck area, a complete paint job and blocking off the double doors which led to the street.

Several new features have been added which will help change the atmosphere: A new roof which includes 10 skylights to help light and heat the pool area and six garage-type doors have been installed in the east wall that open up to a deck outside the building.

Johnson feels that, "when the weather warms up and the doors are open the pool can turn into a real nice place for students to gather with friends and enjoy the day."

The two reasons behind the renovation are that as soon as the pool is ready it will help ease up the logjam on Lancer Hall pool. Lancer's pool is being used this semester from 8:00 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. The decision on how French Pool will be used has not been made, but Johnson states, "It could be used for recreation swimming and when outside groups would like to reserve swim time." Also the renovations make the pool area more efficient and attractive.

There is also consideration that the pool can be open year round. With the addition of a heating element to warm the water the only problem would be keeping the surrounding air warm enough.

Class To Excavate 'Pre-Historic Indian Village'

By JOE JOHNSON

In 1870 A.D. Heinrich Shlieman uncovered the ancient remains of Troy, verifying with solid evidence the culture that Homer, in 850 B.C. had written about. He was an archeologist believing in Homer's detailed descriptions of palaces and weapons and capturing in those ancient ruins, the voice of the past; "A voice nobody has ever heard before."

Dr. James William Jordan, associate professor of Anthropology, is in a similar (though, perhaps, smaller scaled) venture. "To try to make the stones talk...making them speak." The endeavor will take place this summer under the title of the "Longwood Summer Field School in Archeology". The field school is divided into two classes; Anthropology 495 (Field Methods in Archeology) and Anthropology 595 (The Organization and Execution of Archeological Fieldwork). Both are offered May 26th through July 2nd and July 5th through August 6th.

Anthropology 495 should give the student a working knowledge of the tools and methods used in excavating an archeological site. The tools range in dimensions from a bulldozer utilized for clearing the heavy surface dirt to a mason's trowel used in the delicate art of scraping the surface of the ground (called the robatoque technique). No prerequisites are required to register for this class.

Anthropology 595 will concentrate on learning the skills necessary to organize and supervise the execution of archeological excavations. Students will serve as Dr. Jordan's assistants, taking one or two grids from the overall site and aiding in the design of the field strategy, intrasite sampling technique, site mapping, artifact, feature plotting, and recording for the chosen area.

The site, which will be excavated this summer, is a cluster of three large mounds located near the junction of the Appomattox River and Buffalo

WORLD

In Latin America, El Salvador has been ripped for nearly two years by civil war. Last week Maj. Roberto D'Abuissou, a retired army leader of the right-wing party in the upcoming election, was wounded by leftist guerillas. This violence in the past few months has upped U.S. involvement in Central America. "El Salvador is not Vietnam," said Secretary of State Alexander Haig in Washington last week, enforcing his point that the U.S. will support the Salvadoran government against the Marxist oriented Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front.

The Transvaal Province voted 172-36 in confidence for South African Prime Minister P. W. Botha. Botha also thwarted a revolt in his own party by ultra-conservatives who are against lightening strict racial segregation policies.

The capital of Uganda, Kampala, was attacked last week by mortars from 300 heavily armed guerillas. The violence culminated on the cities military barracks as part of a plan to oust President Milton Obote and his government. The fighting between guerillas and troops resulted in 69 deaths. Battling has not been this harsh since 1979 and the ouster of Idi Amin.

After 12 hours of deliberating a jury of eight blacks and four whites found Wayne B. Williams guilty of murder. The 23-year-old Williams, a free-lance photographer and talent scout, is charged in the deaths of two of the 28 young blacks in Atlanta.

State legislatures and governors nationwide are ready to start negotiations with President Reagan on a dual plan to separate state and national support for programs in the 1983 budget. The President is calling for cuts and turning over programs run by the federal government to the states. State officials fear they will not have enough money to adequately run the programs.

A report from the National Academy of Sciences on marijuana, the country's most accepted and illegally used drug, discloses a high risk to health; heavy prolonged use may cause cancer of the lungs. The drug's short-term devastation to mental capacity, sperm production and lungs is usually reversible. Last week's report released by the U. Arrests Made In 'Incidents' Case

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Last month, there were four incidents on or near the campus that contributed to rumors regarding a lack of safety for women students. In two instances, a young man of 15 or 16 pinched two women students from behind; he has since been arrested. In the third incident, which occurred off but near campus, a male student allegedly pushed and hit a female student who was his girlfriend; the matter is receiving disciplinary attention. The last incident involved an unknown male placing a knife to the side of a female behind Her Gym at about 8:10 p.m. The student was able to get away uninjured. Although identification of the would-be assailant is difficult, the matter is under serious investigation. A possibly related occurrence has been the arrest of a non-student local man who has been exposing himself in residence halls. No other incidents involving threatened or actual physical abuse of women students are known to have occurred at Longwood this semester.

In addition to an increase in campus lighting, the progress made so far by Campus Police, and the development of an escort service by Alpha Sigma Phi, the following suggestions are offered to women students:

1. Avoid walking alone late at night or after dark through unlighted or lightly traveled areas of campus. Plan your route in advance.

2. If possible, walk with one or more friends; use the Escort Service if you feel the need.

3. If you think you're being followed, get away fast and head for a lighted area and other persons.

Creek. Entitled the Smith Taylor mound site, it is thought by Dr. Jordan to be a prehistoric Indian location, dating from the late woodland period. "There was probably an Indian farming village surrounding the three mounds and they utilized the interior area as a type of civic center or community center. Wooden buildings sheltered the artificially built mounds."

If Dr. Jordan's hypothesis is correct, the Smith Taylorexavation should yield pottery, hoes, farm tools, rotted or charred wood (from the shelter), and a variety of religious type artifacts (some possibly used for burial purposes), anything that would

Editor, The Rotunda.

I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge and express my gratitude to the male population of Longwood College. Following some rather threatening events on our campus, most females have been advise not to go out alone at night. If you had gone out last Thursday night, you would have met more than one guy out making sure that there were no unescorted females. Alpha Sigma Phi has carried their concern one step further by providing a regular "escort service" with numbers posted in all female residence halls.

Such courtesy does not go unappreciated and it is quite a nice feeling to realize that not all chivalry is dead — at least, not at Longwood!

Tamara Nash

Editor, the Rotunda:

I, in turn would like to thank Student Union Treasurer, Cathy Roach, for calling attention to my $4,000 budget error in a recent Rotunda article. I admit my guilt in not doing my homework before quoting such estimates. However, I feel that if the student Union would like a $4,000 addition to their budget, they should do their homework, as far as planning and programming in the future. My case at point: Oktoberfest weekend, last semester, S-UN loses $6,000 in the major concert with the Ozark Mountain Daredevils. If you want the cash, make it, then take it, don't lose it. This time, my homework was done.

Movie Review

By EDDIE HOLLANDAR

Creationists, beware! Darwin's theory of evolution has just added one more thread of evidence to its weave. There is no doubt in my mind, after watching "Vice Squad," that we are descended from gorillas — morally, physically and intellectually. Perhaps that's doing the gorillas an injustice; let's just say we're definitely lower life forms. At least, that's the impression writers Howard, Peters, and O'Neil seem to want to evoke. "The hustle, the muscle, the chrome and the steel — you got what I want, baby, let's make deal."

Angie Dickinson never had it so good. Golden showers, Greeks and freaks, around the world — I didn't used to know about any of that. Now I do. Glory, Hallelujah! Of course, with a name like "Vice Squad" what should one expect? Actually, I'm rather impressed. Granted, the script was obviously written by a Penthouse Forum author, high on cocaine, and the violence makes Clint Eastwood movies look like "Leave It to Beaver" re-runs; but still for the genre the movie succeeds admirably.

Remember Fort Apache the Bronx? Remember Al Pacino in his studded leather, or Xavier Hollandar with network nylons? Remember Wambaugh's "The Choir Boys"? Remember TV's "Hill Street Blues"? Well, if you find their sum, carry them to the Students who need money at school often find that many stores in Farmville won't cash checks unless a purchase is made. Two-party checks are even more of a problem. Par-Bils is one store in Farmville that has a very lenient check cashing policy — probably the most lenient in town. They realize that many stores in Farmville won't cash checks for students; therefore, they allow students to cash personal check as long as they make a 25 cent

Rap Session

By PAM WINGER

"Hey, I'd just like to talk about some stuff that's been bothering me lately," he says, sitting in a chair. He begins, first quiet and hesitant. Then, realizing he is talking to students willing to listen and help, he sits back and really talks about what is bothering him.

The place? Lankford reading rooms. The time is 8:00 on Wednesday. Any Wednesday. It's called a Rap Session — students talking to students about anything at all on their minds.

Anything? Well, whatever you want to talk about. If you'd like to complain about your roommate sleeping all day and partying all night when you'd rather study and watch T.V. and get a good 5th exponential power and divide by one, you might get an idea of what the genre of this movie is. That is a "I'm going to get that son of a bitch — swimming in the neon slime — this city sucks — you're never gonna change the streets" type movie.

Ramrod (Lordy — how gauche) is a psychotic. You immediately sense this because he sneers and his eyes are always wide. Wide, like insane wide, like cruel wide, like cliché wide. Director Gary A. Sherman develops his character to the point of extinction, which would probably have been just as well. But you have to sit back through the entire movie (O.K., maybe on the edge of your seat) to find out what every good "Starsky and Hutch" fan already knows.

And then the writers had to add the policemen. The Keystone Cops, headed by one Walsh (has a voice like Hoffman, face like John Davidson and talks like Bogart — you can almost hear the "M-m-m I'm going to get you-u-u, you-u-u-u dirty rat minimum purchase. Students can then make the check out for $15.00 over the amount of purchase. With two-party checks, they request two ID's but they don't enforce checking ID's on personal checks. They charge a $10.00 service charge on all returned checks.

Safeway grocery store cashes all personal checks that are made out to Safeway specifically. They cash two-party checks only when the check is made out to the student by the parents. Safeway requests two ID's upon cashing all checks. They have a $10.00 service charge on all returned checks.

People's Drug Store requests two means of identification when cashing either personal or two-party checks. They enforce an $8.00 service fee on all returned checks.

Big Star grocery store probably has the strictest check cashing policy in town. They request two forms of identification: the students social security number, and they often write down a description of the person cashing the check. They won't cash two-party checks at all.

Even though cashing a check may be convenient at Par-Bils, it can also cause many problems. For instance, stolen checks may be cashed with little trouble to the person involved. This would not be as easily accomplished at other places of business where ID checking is enforced.

night's sleep, the students at Wednesday's Rap Session are there to listen and offer advice. If you've just bounced a $20.00 check at Par Bil's, gotten written up for breaking visitation rules ("We just fell asleep, and when we woke up it was 11:15!"), or need to improve your grades and don't know how to study like you should be studying, you are encouraged to come in and talk about your problems.

Rap Session is sponsored by Operation Care, a newly formed organization strongly concerned for the welfare of others. The students in Rap Session are comprised of juniors and seniors. The problems expressed by students are kept strictly confidential.

you-u-u") who is your basic leather-jacket-talk-shit-to-the-whores-but-help-the-old-ladies-archetype.

In this movie people don't swim in neon slime — they drown. In tears, in the opening scene, there are three people in tears. Second scene — one person dies, then another, then another, then another ad infinitum — ad nauseum. Princess' brilliant colloquialism sums it up best, "We both stepped in the same toilet, Walsh." All I want to know is what made producer Brian Frankish think he had a royal flush.

Artist Of Month

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS
The Showcase Gallery at Longwood College is currently featuring the work of senior art major C. Guy deLadurantaye.

The exhibit includes serigraphs, etchings, paintings, drawings, and photographs. The public is cordially invited to view the exhibit in the Reading Rooms of the Lankford Student Union Building through March 5.

Guy, who has an art concentration in printmaking and graphics, received first place in March, 1981 for "Artist of the Month" and second place for the same in November, 1981. He also received the Gyré's award for "best artwork" in their 1980-81 edition.

Son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond F. deLadurantaye of 5502 Kendrick Lane, Burke, Guy's plans after graduation include work in the commercial art field or work as an apprentice printmaker to become a master printer. He is also a member of the college's Rugby Club.

Students who enroll in the Field School will be accommodated in the regular college dormitories and will take meals, except lunch which will be eaten at the site, in the college dining hall. According to Dr. Jordan there's a possibility of as many as 10 overnights to allow the students a chance to get a feel for their work.

"Archeology is not so much a technical experience, but rather a humanistic experience. An attempt to generate inside oneself the sensations and culture of the area one is working with. Not to be here excavating in 1982, but rather living then in 1282. When you spend the entire day at the dig, sweating and bleeding, eaten by bugs and ticks, and then have a chance to climb up on the spoils pile (waste dirt) and watch the darkness creep over the site, hearing the same sounds as 800 or 4,000 years ago. You begin to appreciate what you're doing, it becomes almost a sacred experience. That's what I want my students to achieve."

Snow-Bowl: Longwood Ties ODU 4-4

By MIKE LYNCH

To even attempt to play a rugby game in a foot of snow would cause one to question the participants sanity, but the Longwood College Rugby Football Club did just that and came up with a 4-4 tie against a highly reputed Old Dominion University Club. When you consider the fact that Old Dominion had recently gone on a 38-0 rampage over Richmond, a team that usually beats Longwood by a fair margin, that tie didn't look bad at all.

"The snow was definitely to our advantage," Kurt Mueller said after the game. And man, did it snow. There was no way to see the lines on the field, the ball did not bounce when it hit the ground and all the players, except Vaughn Jipner of course, wore sweat pants under the traditional rugby shorts to gain some insulation against the snow that they spent much of their time in.

The game itself did not start too well for Longwood. The teams looked even enough at the start but before the first battle of suds could be downed, ODU's Dave Cantor got an opening and took off down the right side of the field, getting near the goal line before the last Longwood man could bring him down. Then he just pitched it back to Phil Cavatoni, who was right behind him, who made it in to the endzone for the try. The extra points? You gotta be kidding! This is normally a difficult maneuver but in a foot of snow it was nearly impossible. So after not even getting close on that ODU received the kick with a 4-0 lead.

ODU would get no more points for the rest of the game though, as Longwood would not repeat the mistake of letting Cantor get too much room. Longwood got very close on one occasion during the half, but ODU kicked it out and kept the ball between the 22 meter lines for the rest of the half.

The second half was somewhat uneventful until Dean Driskill, while with the ball, drew both his and Marty Mann's defenders to him and then pitched the ball to Mann who was now free to go more than half the length of the field, out-running three more ODU defenders on his way to the game tying try. Mann aptly described the play, saying "He (Driskill) gave me the ball and I just ran like hell." The extra points attempt never even got kicked due to a penalty of some sort and the game was now tied at 4.

Longwood had a chance to go ahead, in the last few seconds with a field goal attempt... right... by Marty Mann. He took quite a while setting up, much to ODU's dissatisfaction, and when he did kick it, the ball actually reached the required height but it missed the mark to the left, due to the wind according to Mann.

Shortly after that, time expired and the game ended in a 4-4 tie. Considering the circumstances, one would think Longwood would be quite proud of that, but they were constantly denying this after the game, thinking that they could have won, as they well could have. For the past two weeks the players have been unanimous in their observations that simple mistakes on Longwood's part and not necessarily the talent of the other team have been the main reasons for their failure to win the past two games.

Lancers End Season At 15-8

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood's 1981-82 basketball season came to an early end Saturday when a snowstorm forced cancellation of the Lancers' trip to Liberty Baptist. In Coach Cal Luther's first season at the helm, Longwood finished with a respectable 15-8 record.

Tuesday's 89-81 double overtime decision over Coppin State turned out to be the season finale as Mike McCroey closed out his career with 24 points and an 8-8 performance from the free throw line. McCroey, who transferred from Allegheny Community College last season, had 623 points and 122 steals in his two-year career.

The win at Coppin State had particular significance for sophomore Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey and junior Joe Remar. Kersey, who had 20 points and 15 rebounds, broke his own record for rebounds in a season and topped the 500 mark for his career (509). The 6-7 forward, who has 864 career points in two seasons, grabbed 260 rebounds this year for an average of 11.8. He also scored 17 ppg., led the team in steals (45), slam dunks (28) and blocked shots (26) and was second in assists with 61.

Remar, a consistent performer for three seasons, scored 19 points to top the 1,000 point mark for his career. The career and season record holder in assists (385 in 3 years), Remar now has 1,011 points and is a good bet to break top career scorer Kenny Ford's mark of 1,041 next season.

Junior Ron Orr, who averaged 14.3 ppg., now has 924 career points and 445 career rebounds. Senior Randy Johnson ended his career with 459 rebounds and 675 points. Johnson was a three-year starter for Longwood.

The 1981-82 edition of the Lancers is the highest scoring team in Longwood's six-year basketball history. Longwood ranked among the NCAA Division II leaders all season in scoring offense and field goal percentage. Averaging 54.9 per cent shooting from the floor and 82.6 points per game, the Lancers set a new school record for scoring average.

The Lancers were perhaps three wins away from a berth in the NCAA Div. II playoffs. Five of the team's eight losses came by a total of 20 points and two of the defeats were in overtime.

In reflecting on the season Coach Luther pointed to poor free throw shooting as a key factor. "We had a successful season, but we lost too many close games," said the coach. "We were in every game but two, and if we had hit our free throws in the clutch we could have won several more games."

Luther reached a personal milestone two weeks back — his 300th career victory as a coach on the college level.

Remar, Player Of Week

From SPORTS INFO

Junior guard Joe Remar (Elizabeth, N.J.) became only the second player in Longwood basketball history to score more than 1,000 career points last week and in recognition of his accomplishment, the 6-0 cager has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period February 19-26. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office. Remar has been named Player of the Week twice before this season.

Remar, a three-year starter, scored 19 points in Longwood's season ending double overtime win over Coppin State Tuesday night to give him 1,011 career points, the second highest point total in Lancer history. With another season left, Remar is a good bet to surpass Kenny Ford's 1,041 point total.

A complete player, Remar holds the Longwood season and career assists record. The cager has handed out 385 assists in three years including 105 this season when he helped Longwood compile a 15-8 mark. Joe handed out 145 assists last season, most ever at Longwood.

In addition to averaging five assists per game, Remar scored 14.8, had 43 steals, 54 rebounds and led the fastbreak. Joe used his exceptional body control to drive around and through taller opponents for layups and played some of his best basketball at the end of the season. The Elizabeth High School grad also shot 56.8 per cent from the floor. The son of Mrs. Inell Remar, Joe is majoring in social work.

Lady Lancers Prepare For States

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood women's basketball team ended its regular season last week with a two-game split. The Lady Lancers beat Randolph-Macon (Ashland) 64-56 Thursday but fell to Radford 60-52 Friday. The lady cagers hold an 8-14 overall and 4-10 VAAIAW Division II conference record.

Tuesday, Longwood will travel to Hampton (20-10) to participate in the first round of the VAAIAW State Tournament. Eight teams will play in the tourney, with the top four teams hosting the first round. The four first round winners will then advance to the finals hosted by Richmond, March 5-6. Other teams in the tournament include Richmond, George Mason, Radford, VCU, William and Mary, and Liberty Baptist.

In voting by conference coaches, Florence Holmes was one of 10 players selected to the VAAIAW Division II All-State Team. Teh 5-10 freshman is averaging 13.5 points and 9.9 rebounds per game while shooting 41.5 per cent from the floor.

Friday's game against Radford marked the last home game performance for senior Robin Hungate. A three year starter, Hungate has accumulated 751 points and 431 rebounds in her career at Longwood. The 5-10 center holds the school record for Most Consecutive Free Throws (25) and is ranked second among VAAIAW individuals in free throw percentage at 78.3 per cent.

Gymnasts Place 3rd. At State

By LISA SPENCER

Paced by the strong performances of freshmen Dayna Hankinson and Kelly Crepps, the Longwood gymnastics team placed second in the VAAIAW Division II Championships and third in the VAAIAW Open Championships. The results of the team competition were as follows: Radford 132.50, James Madison (Div. I) 130.75, Longwood 130.50, and William & Mary 128.55.

Dayna Hankinson's 8.90 performance on the balance beam gave her the state title in the event, and set a new Longwood record. The previous high was 8.65. Hankinson was also the runner-up to the all-around title with a 33.65, and she placed second in floor exercise (8.55).

Another Longwood freshman, Kelly Crepps, turned in a winning performance by taking the vaulting title (8.75). She also placed fifth in the all-around competition. Both Crepps and Hankinson were selected to the All-Championship Team.

Senior Kathy Idelson, performing in her last meet at Longwood, came up with a fourth place finish in the uneven bars (8.45). This score was also a season-high for the team.

The team will now be concentrating its efforts on preparing for the Division II Regionals to be held March 13 at Radford.

College Graduates Finding Fewer Jobs

Many students probably read the article in the Richmond News Leader whose headline read College Seniors Face Tightest Job Market in Years. Niki Fallis, Director of Placement at Longwood confirms that statement. The majority of predictions indicate that the job market is tight, competition is keen, and most hiring occurs in the fields of engineering, computer science, and accounting.

School officials do see a shortage of teachers in certain disciplines. An ASCUS survey indicated a shortage of teachers in mathematics, physics, special education, and the sciences.

At Longwood last year there were more vacancies in math, 4-7, English, Biology and Business Education than we had graduates willing to relocate to fill them.

School divisions throughout the state continue to recruit at Longwood College. Last year we had 49 school systems recruiting here. Longwood continues to have an excellent reputation as a teacher preparatory institution, and has been building that reputation for over 100 years.

The number of government business and industry employers coming to the Longwood College campus to recruit is much smaller. This number will hopefully increase as the "new Longwood College image" and the reputation as a comprehensive institution reaches throughout the state.

Since employers will not come to LC, students must prepare to go to the employers. Plans for career goals must begin in the freshman year, and seniors must develop job skill strategies in order to compete. Last year 50 seminars were held in the area of career information - job search skills and 350 students attended; an average of 7 students per seminar.

Many students do not realize the frustration they will experience in the job market. "Finding a job is a job in itself" and our graduates must be prepared to face that reality. The job market is flooded with job seekers due to the poor economy and the cut back in government employment. There will be even more graduates in the job market because they are not applying to graduate school due to reduction and insecurity regarding financial assistance.

Employers are being more selective than ever. They look at grade point averages, college activities, ability to communicate and over-all high achievers, said Ms. Fallis.

The future cannot be predicted with certainty. The U.S. Department of Labor states that there is the likelihood that colleges will be turning out more graduates than there will be job openings in occupations requiring a college degree.

Last year our graduates fared well. Over 85 per cent of the 1981 graduates were placed; either in a job, in the military or in furthering their education. Ms. Fallis invites interested students to study the Annual Placement Report and its statistics and make an effort to talk with her, establish a placement file and attend all seminars.

Northwestern's 36th Annual Endicott Report stated that 1982 graduates will experience high starting salaries than graduates of the past; an increase of 9.2 per cent. Salaries for Bachelor's degree engineers will average $25,000 an 11.4 per cent increase over 1981; computer science $22,000, 6.8 per cent increase; chemistry $21,492, 10.4 per cent increase; math-statistics $21,516, 8.8 per cent increase; accounting $18,600, 817 per cent increase; economics-finance $17,000, 7.4 per cent increase; business administration $17,000, 6.1 per cent increase; liberal arts $15,000, 8.3 per cent increase.

"Personally, I feel that these salaries were taken from the highest level of the scale", said Mrs. Fallis. Comparing the 1981 Longwood College Graduates, 119 of the 430 graduates responded to the salary question. The majority of the business administration graduates were earning between $9,000 to $15,000; the majority of the teaching majors were earning $9,000 to $13,000 and arts and sciences between $9,000 to $13,000. Our chemistry graduates were earning $9,000 to $13,000. Without a doubt the salaries will increase for 1982.

late 70's and 80's have ignited membership to record levels. While memberships are skyrocketing, hazing and other behavior are being scrutinized by many.

Men and women who seek membership often study history, traditions and customs of their brothers and sisters. They also sing anthems, learn secret handshakes, calls and the life history of their superiors in their respective chapter that they are pledging in. While pledging they often engage in service projects benefitting the community. This takes quite a chunk of time out of the day that includes study and class time. The last week of their pledge period is called "hell week". This week brings out the

Public Attitude Shed's Different Light on Greeks

By BILL BRENT

Fraternities and sororities are extremely popular on college campuses across the nation, and Longwood is no exception. Activities that surround them and occur because of them have aroused nationwide concern. These issues have raised eyebrows nationally and locally. But before looking across the nation and Longwood here is a little blast from there past to allow for better understanding.

Social and service organizations and clubs were the seed of the Greek system. They have been around almost as long as colleges themselves. Fraternities and sororities are assigned two or three letters from the Greek alphabet, ranging from Alpha to Zeta. Some of the more attractive combinations are Tau Kappa Epsilon, Delta Sigma Theta, Sigma Nu and Pi Kappa Alpha. These letters are assigned by the National Interfraternity Conference, this organization presides nationally while the Panhellen Council and Interfraternity Council rule at individual institutions. Most fraternities and sororities claim colors and a mascot to accompany the letters.

These social and service groups have raised millions of dollars for libraries, medical research and charity but it's their other activities that have authorities, parents, psychologists, sociologists and administrators up in arms. In the 60's the era of protest brought students together while the memberships in fraternities and sororities plummeted. But the

Faculty Award To Be Given Soon

Initial preparations began last week for the eleventh presentation of the Faculty Recognition Award. This award is given annually by the student body to a faculty member that exhibits exceptional qualities of respect, intelligence, and efficiency in his or her educational field. The award, a program coordinated by the Office of Institutional Advancement, is to be presented on May 15 as part of the graduation exercises.

Nominations for the award will be taken March 15-19 from the student body. Students may nominate as many faculty members as they wish on separate ballot forms that will be

Despite Age, Older Student Fits In

By MARK SEGAL

There was the article in National Lampoon once about the middle aged man, who, in his supposed mid-life-crisis put a stopper on his nearing insanity and went back to his alma mater to re-pledge his fraternity.

But then there is the story of Jim Waterfield, which is a fitting name because he has lived at the beach most of his life. Jim is the kind of guy, that at 37, would not be combing the beach in Bermuda shorts with a metal detector. Instead he is the man that would sport a surfboard and leather skin from the years of

I was getting bored with it," he tells.

He had been taking night classes at Tidewater Community College and went to summer school last summer at the University of Virginia. He was considering a return to U. VA. but when he found out he would have to furnish his own housing he ruled it out. Virginia Tech was also a consideration but when he saw how far he had to walk from his dorm to his classes he said: "I'm too old to be walking that far every day."

His decision to come back to school full time was not an easy

Va. there are older women at the graduate school and I thought Longwood had one. But they don't."

He prefers women closer to his own age and had a date with a clerk in a local retail store. He recalls returning from the date at 2:30 a.m. and getting lectured about the evils of late night enervation by a desk clerk.

Expected To Be Role Model

He was told that he was not setting an example for the younger men at Longwood. But Jim reminded her that his concerns were with being a student and not a role model — but not in such gentle terms.

"If there is a keg of beer to be drunk in Frazer I'm going to get to it," he tells, sounding every bit of the beach bum he really is. And he is just another student.

"I don't feel like an alien here." He should not — he attended rush parties and met several of the guys in Sigma Phi Epsilon.

"They're just great," but he had no idea he would be accepted as a member: "I had no intent of doing that (becoming a member)...I went to the rush party and never thought I'd get a bid...but I did."

But then can you see a grown man going into a grocery store dressed like a seven year old girl as a fraternity stunt?

Jim's roommate, Bill Stafford, also a Sigma Phi Epsilon brother, came back second semester to find what could be someone's father as his roommate. — "I didn't know how to handle it at first," says Stafford. "But now I am used to it and wouldn't trade him for anything."

Student Attitudes Changed

Jim recalls that college life, even in the early 60's was more radical than it is now.

"The students were more militant then. We were tired of eating mystery meat and one day they just up and had a riot in the cafeteria."

But even back in 1962 the visitation rules at a conservative southern school were comparable to Longwood's now. "The visitation then was like it is here now," says Waterfield with a disappointed scowl on his brow. "The students were militant, then the administration had to relax the rules some...I think the students here should exercise their vote more."

He attributes his youthful attitude to the fact that he has lived at the beach most of his life.

Faculty Award

handed out by the Faculty Recognition Award Committee members in the Rotunda area. This committee is comprised of student leaders and students from various clubs, organizations, and majors. This varied over-all campus distribution of committee members will bring in more representational observations and input from the student body.

The total number of nominations turned in by campus-wide student participation will be screened down to 15 faculty names. These faculty members will then be researched, evaluated, and voted upon to decide on a final three names. The winner is selected by secret ballot and kept confidential until the commencement exercises.

The prestige and importance of this award is two-fold — it is awarded by the student body and is given in recognition of a faculty member's step up from the classroom to the role of a caring

"I reckon living in that neighborhood (the heart of the summer tourist district) has a lot to do with it"...he looks as if he might be in love with the place then says: "I've lived other places than Virginia Beach but I always go back there."

Once, when he was a teenager, he took off for New Mexico. Just some spur of the moment thing. But, like his finishing college when he is approaching 40, Jim feels that the humdrum of daily life is not for him — well, at least not some of the time. "You never know if you're going to have a heart attack or a stroke...You just have to take chances."

When he is not in his dorm room at Longwood he lives between Artie and Pacific Avenues at 24th Street in Virginia Beach.

Wants To Get His Degree

He has lived at the beach most of his life but after high school left for Campbell University in North Carolina. He never received a degree from Campbell and left there in 1964. For the past fifteen years he has been working for the city of Virginia Beach. Before he left to come to Longwood he had obtained a supervisory position as a Senior Engineering Technician. This was not enough for Jim, (restlessness is a symptom of the mid-life-crisis syndrome) and he decided he wanted to get his degree.

"It was the same old grind and one. He could not work his job and attend classes at Old Dominion University. This was going to have to be a full time commitment. "I knew I had to have a residential school like this," he says referring to Longwood. But it was not as simple as that. "The people on the job said I was a fool...they just freaked," he says. But his parents were very supportive. "The rest of the kids all got their degrees but me. My parents just said to go ahead and do it."

When he got to Longwood he says that he feels that the students were more receptive to him being a student than some members of the administration. "I think they don't know what to do when they're confronted with the non-traditional student," he says. "I feel (they) have misinterpreted my motives."

Then he saw all of the girls— "I didn't bargain for that. At U.

Dr. Barber To Deliver Faculty Colloquium Lecture

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS

"Oxygen, the Tamed Toxin" will be the topic of this year's third Faculty Colloquium Lecture at Longwood College.

Dr. Patrick Barber, associate professor of chemistry at Longwood, will discuss the properties and newly discovered forms of oxygen, and its possible role in cancer, on Wednesday evening, March 10, at 7:30 in the Wygal Building. The lecture is open to the public free of charge.

The role of oxygen in cancer is one of Dr. Barber's primary research interests. In a paper presented at a meeting of the American Chemical Society last spring, he advanced a hypothesis in which "cancer is conceived as a structural and equilibrium abnormality of the cell in which oxygen plays a central role."

Dr. Barber received the Ph.D. in physical chemistry from Cornell University and held a postdoctoral fellowship in the department of chemistry at Duke University where he studied the properties of liquid crystals. He has also done research in electric batteries for NASA and in radioactive contamination of painted ship surfaces for the Navy.

This past summer, he was one of about 40 college faculty selected to participate in a research program sponsored by the American Society for Engineering Education and the Navy. He wrote data analysis and general utility computer programs for the Fatigue and Fracture Branch of the Metals Division at the Naval Station in Annapolis.

Among his many and varied interests, Dr. Barber is an amateur winemaker and member of the American Wine Society and Vinifera Winegrowers Association. He and his wife have established an experimental vineyard with over 30 varieties of grapes.

He is a life member of the Royal Scottish Country Dance Society of Edinburgh, Scotland, and a member and past president of the Keysville Ruritan Club.

Is Art Rock?

By RUSTY ROXX

Part II of
'Is Rock Art?'

What makes some rock songs succeed better than others? Last time we talked about various reasons why a number of them (in fact the vast majority) fail as art. But there are some rare gems out of all the coal.

Dr. Young of the Longwood Drama Department thinks any work of art succeeds if each time you hear (or see) the work, you can find something new. Aesthetically, there are not many rock songs in which a different perception can be gained each time and certainly none (with the possible exception of Buddy Holly) before the Beatles.

With the first British invasion rock changes at revolutionary speed. What the Beatles so often capture is what James Joyce would call "epiphany," that moment of pure essence of situation. They do not get cheap ("Pac-Man Fever") yet a song like "I Wanna Hold Your Hand," a bit trite in the post-sexual revolution '60's, still is as sincere as ever and not melodramatic. Leonard Bernstein writes of the Beatles: "To this day, three bars of their music makes me feel alive with joy."

One of the best songwriters around, who has written many memorable songs, is Paul Simon.

His lyrics are cynical yet often they impart a sense of experience. His approach is a little low-key for my taste yet his songs are so well-crafted, the harmonies so well done that he seldom pleases the listener but often satisfied him. Take an ear feast on Bridge Over Troubled Water (the album) and you'll see what I mean.

What Paul Simon and The Beatles have also done is withstood the test of time. Even other musical artists, like Frank Sinatra who has openly been hostile to rock, end up recording and reworking their songs.

Along the Beatles' path of being influenced by contemporary art music (the work of the eminent German composer Karlheinz Stockhausen influenced the Beatles a great amount) and classical techniques (such as the string quartet backing in "Eleanor Rigby") came the so-called classical rock groups — the best of which was probably Emerson, Lake and Palmer.

Not only did ELP have talent to burn (even critics who called their works pretentious agree that they are, musically, technically flawless), but they also changed much of our thinking about rock and classical music. Keith Emerson brought the synthesizer to new heights and changed the perception that the keyboardist was a sit-down and pacific player and, due to his

Mattress Reviewed

By JOYCE SWEET

The Longwood College production of Once Upon a Mattress presented February 25-27 was outstanding. Theatregoers, who did not attend this production, missed a delightful show.

Richard Gamble, director and designer, created an ingenious set that was reminiscent of storybook pop-ups. The costumes, lights, and other technical aspects added greatly to the overall effect of the production. The silhouette scene at the beginning of the show was particularly effective.

The cast of Once Upon a Mattress was fantastic. Many of these college students gave performances of almost professional quality. Ginny Munoz, with her strong voice and fine acting brought the role of Princess Winnifred alive. Queen Aggravain, portrayed by Lisa Magill, came across with the proper combination of dominance and humor. Mark Winecoff, as Prince Dauntless, was absolutely charming with his little boy mannerisms. Ross Conner, who played King Sextimus, showed an exceptional acting talent and a great sense of comedy and timing. This young man was able to enchant the audience with his excellent pantomime. Other fine performances were turned in by Jeff Thomas, Joanne Mosca, George Hughes, and Syd Long. The chorus members were superior in their supporting roles.

The entire production of Once Upon a Mattress was theatrical entertainment at its best. For a few hours last Friday evening, this reviewer believed in fairy tales.

Art Faculty Member Receives

Purchase Award

From PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Randall W. Edmonson, of the Longwood College art faculty, is recipient of a $500 purchase award for painting at the Mid-America Biennial, a national juried competition sponsored by the Owensboro (KY) Museum of Fine Art.

Edmonson's award-winning acrylic painting, "Broken Rainbow," is a hard-edged geometric abstract completed in 1981. The juror for the exhibition was Abram Lerner, director of the Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden in Washington, D. C.

The exhibition will open at the Owensboro Museum of Fine Art on April 4 and continue through May 30.

The Mid-America Biennial has several objectives: to provide a showcase in Middle America for work created by artists presently living and working in this country, to acquire a significant permanent collection of art by contemporary American artists for the Owensboro Museum, and to encourage private and corporate collectors to purchase art by these artists.

At the February 16th press conference Dallas Bradbury delivered a speech that was supposed to be the beginning of negotiations between the Inter Fraternity Council and the administration. Dr. Greenwood promised Mr. Bradbury (president of the IFC) that a decision would be made to clarify a misaligned arbitrary (law?) that prohibited fraternities from consuming alcoholic beverages in their chapter rooms. The negotiations were between the IFC and Dr. Salters.

In a copy of Mr. Bradbury's speech, (The Rotunda, February 23; IFC Questions Administration's Tactics on Alcohol Prohibition) the IFC contends that chapter rooms are under the same visitation rights as private rooms and that these rooms are rented by the college to the fraternities and sororities at a cost of $6,000 per year.

The editorial staff reinforces the contention that if the administration views these rooms as part of the private sector then the occupants are being denied the rights that other private rooms are afforded.

Approximately two weeks later, at a Student Senate meeting, the senate voted unanimously to allow drinking in the chapter rooms at anytime. This legislation was enacted as a result of a proposal that Dr. Salters tried to force upon the Greeks which said that drinking could only be done if the Greek organization had registered the event as a party with the dormitory prior to the event. Under this legislation the fraternities would only be allowed two "parties" per month. In addition, the resident supervisors of the dormitories that the chapter rooms are housed would have the ultimate authority to decide whether or not Greeks could even drink at all.

As of last Friday Dr. Salters vetoed the student senate bill and has crushed any hopes of Greeks breaking the childish mold Longwood forms around them.

I urge Dr. Greenwood to take immediate action against this injustice, or our senate's voice will be silenced and worthless.

Dance Company To Tour Schools

Editor's Note: The Dance Company was the only organization or individual to give a story lead this week. They won $10.

By CINDY CORELL

Five members of the Longwood College Dance Company will go to Stafford County tomorrow and Thursday to teach dance in four elementary schools. On Friday, twelve members will go to two more elementary schools in Fredericksburg. This past Friday, another twelve members went to Richmond for this purpose. "We teach the kids dance and we're trying to get dance in the elementary schools," said company member Dean Lakey. "We're trying to get some early exposure now."

The Dance Company tried to do at least four of these residencies a year. At the schools, their visits are called "dance day."

The members of the group must audition at the beginning of their first semester. The audition is evaluated by the company officers and Dr. Betty Bowman, director of Dance Company. They meet twice a week for regular class practices and then two more times outside of class. Each member must perform in at least one dance number in the semesterly concert.

---Movie Review---

By DAVID S. AREFORD

It is obvious from observing the audiences response to the movie Taps, that many movie viewers were expecting something else from this motion picture than what was presented or at least, were not sure of how to respond. I think many were led to believe that they were going to see a movie involving kids fighting back against authority—a movie where the kids pull a fast one on the restricting world around them. The laughter that came from the audience early in the movie was in response to what the audience thought were characters fighting the system and the "cops". The laughter seemed to say, "They really fooled them", but if the audience had taken a closer look, as they were forced to do as the movie progressed, they would have seen that the characters had not fooled anyone but themselves. Taps is not a comedy, but audiences will enjoy it for its thought-provoking drama.

George C. Scott is General Arian Bache, superintendent of Bunker Hill Military Academy, who spreads his ideas of courage and honor to the young cadets with such romantic ideals as the

Editor, The Rotunda:

We have a serious problem on this campus. It deals with lying. Not "big time" things, such as lying about not cheating on a test when you were, but little things like giving a false name when you are caught for a violation of visitation.

The Honor Board has had a number of trials dealing with giving a false name when they are caught violating visitation policies. All the cases that have been tried resulted in finding the person guilty of lying. This is a violation of the Honor Code and can result in serious consequences.

Just think, if you just go ahead and admit to yourself that you are caught, give your correct name. Violation of visitation only results in a letter of warning for a first offense and up to probation and loss of privileges for repeated offenses. Lying or academic dishonesty as stated in the handbook, results in suspension or dismissal.

What I am trying to say in all of this is, if you are guilty of breaking any rules, telling the truth won't get you in as much trouble as lying will.

The Voice of Experience

Racists Attitudes

Attacked By Resident

Editor, The Rotunda:

Being new to the Longwood, Farmville community I find myself bewildered by the occurrences of various Farmville, Prince Edward County related events. I am further perplexed by the lack of local journalistic endeavors toward these incidents. It is even more perplexing when these occurrences have made the front pages of not only the Richmond News Leader (February 28) but also the Washington Post (January 25). I am referring to the articles dealing with the racist attitudes and statements of the "school on the hill", Prince Edward Academy. Apparently, we the residents of Farmville and Prince Edward County are probably the only remaining residents of the state of Virginia, and the United States for that matter, (the Washington Post has a national circulation) that have no idea of the articles reporting the narrow-minded, ignorant statements that were uttered from the halls of that institution of education. If by chance you, as I presume many other locals, have been sheltered from the "meddling" journalists who would attempt to disrupt the tranquil pre-civil rights attitude of the area, I will attempt to bring you up-to-date on how the nation (including prospective students, contributors, black faculty and administrators) view Farmville.

Within the Washington Post article of January 25, the head master of Prince Edward Academy, Robert T. Redd states, "Integration cannot succeed because blacks are on the average less intelligent than whites." The head master goes on to say, "Most blacks simply do not have the ability to do quality school work."

How can Longwood expect to recruit—keep minority students and faculty when these blatant racist statements are not challenged and allowed to run rampant. By not speaking out, as a member of the Farmville, Prince Edward County and Longwood community we are condoning these statements. Contrary to what the silent, social conscious members of this community might think, a problem will not go away by simply ignoring it. Ignorance perpetuates ignorance as evidenced by the statements of Mr. Redd.

Isn't it about time that we shed our self induced, color-tinted blinders and take the gags out of our mouths and speak out about the injustices that are occurring. Let us not forget that Longwood College is a public institution that was established to promote excellence in public education for all. By remaining silent on this issue are we meeting this goal?

Dave Jones.

"Ultimate Sacrifice". Early in the movie, Bache's world of duty and honor fall apart under the realization of death, when his loaded pistol accidentally kills a teenager of the town. Timothy Hutton is Cadet Major Brian Moreland who is headed for West Point after his senior year. He idolizes Gen. Bache and becomes almost obsessed with his abstract ideals. Most of the cadets follow Moreland with the same unquestioning loyalty.

Just as the summer session is about to begin, it is announced that Bunker Hill will be closed and the land used for real estate. The school will remain open for only one more year. Bache pledges to fight the decision but is unable to, so Moreland decides to help in the fight and with the other cadets, literally take over the academy with the help of a full supply of weapons and ammunition stored there. His demands are simple and just and ask that ways be considered to keep the academy open, but Moreland's seemingly simple and clear thinking and military ethics fall apart around him and the situation becomes a horrible nightmare. Moreland is not dealing with the neat world inside the gates of Bunker Hill, where the military and its goals are respected, but he is now in confrontation with the outside world with its "civilians" and its reality.

Tim Hutton's performance in Taps proves that his Academy Award winning performance in Ordinary People was no accident. He is a superbly sensitive actor. George C. Scott is also excellent

On The Cowtipping Trail

By EDDIE HOLLANDAR

The assignment should have been easy. One of those whipped up — 750 words, with none of that filler crap stuffing its frame jobs. Just facts, then put her to bed. A breeze sure, just a soft blanket breeze, no loose threads to get tangled in here, no inside scoops or clandestine phone calls. This was my kind of work, Woodward and Bernstein flake off, I need a little snooze time, too.

It should have been. Subjunctive case—a desire—not accomplished, too many cow paddies fouling my pasture. But I did my homework anyhow. Learned the behavioral characteristics of Mammalia Chordata Ungulata — the walking mammary gland — the four hoofed cow. Not just cows, mind you, but tipped cows, that is, cows who are pushed over on their sides.

First to the library, through those white washed Ionic columns into the fold of pristine walls, that stalk patiently to trap you in their glare. Immaculate knowledge, lined in horizontal dewy decimal waiting to paw your eyes out with their brightness. I approached a wrinkled lady stationed perpendicular to the "return books here" sign. She watched me approach, from just above her bi-focals, the lower half of her face guarded behind a copy of "The Good News Bible." "Excuse me," I said with polite but positive assurance. Her eyes wandered upward, aiming just below my nostrils but her nose was raised farther. I thought that perhaps her spectacles were slipping, but rethinking I figured she was body talking a complex message — "look how much you don't know" and simultaneously "Home sweet home," for one could not live without the other. She said neither, but replied "Can I help you?" Yes, I'm looking for some information on cows . . . specifically, cow tipping." I should have asked for a book on the sexual deviations of Herman Goering — cow tipping was definitely too much for her. "Cow-what?" "Tipping," I said, was I turning green? "like money . . . you give cows money?" She began to stutter, this was obviously not covered in Genesis. "Uh, no ma'am, you push the cow over." "Cow punching?" . . . Zane Grey is in the fiction upstairs." "No, it's more like bull fighting" . . . I was hoping to find a happy medium. "They don't have bull fights in Farmville!" This she was sure of. Back on solid ground, she led with a blunt assertion of authority. "Young man, I'm quite busy, if you can't define your subject a little more clearly when you get in here, then you needn't come at all." Lacking a crystal clear image of what cow tipping was other than what I'd said, and feeling somewhat threatened by the Monocled dame who was now pressing her chipped fingernails into the pages of her book (I could tell by the white knuckles) I thanked her and left, in search of cow tipping. Leonard Nimoy had nothing on me, except the ears maybe.

Where to go next? Who would know of cow-tipping? "O.K., let's be logical," I thought. If somebody were to cow-tip, he'd have to find a cow. Now where are the cows — in pastures. Where are the pastures — on farms. Who runs the farms — farmers. Easy then — just find a farmer. But I didn't know any farms, which in itself is a small miracle that is, to live in a town named Farmville and not to know any farmers. I had connections in the town council, the police department, the fire department, even the sanitary engineers know my name, but among that large clan of agrarians who put eggs in my broiler, carrots in my stew and tobacco in my cigarettes, I knew no one. Like most voids, it made itself noticeable only when needed.

I hit the cobblestone walkway leading from the library in an irritated confusion. My skull felt like it was filled with cotton balls. There must be an easier way to get this story. Someway to just snap the old pencil and presto farmers with stories of cow tipping rolling off their tongue would be standing in front of me. I could almost smell the manure, felt the wrinkled jowls, and watch the yellowed teeth, stained from countless tobacco plugs. "Yep," caught three of them jokers last night tipping my favorite heifer, I says to them, I said . . . I had the twelve gauge on 'em at the time you understand . . . I said, 'Now y'all just don't move another muscle lessen ya want to be paralytics for the rest of your days' and let me tell you they stopped right then and there like some bodied dripped gasoline down their back and was holdin' the match 'bout an inch from their noses. I told 'em to get the hell off my land . . . my land mind you and my heffer, payed for 'em both with these two hands. I told 'em to get the hell off and if I ever saw their scrawny hides again I'd blow their eyeballs out."

But it was a no go. No farmer, no shotgun, nothing except me walking past Perini's watching visions and wrinkled sidewalks smacking the pads of my hush puppies.

I stopped in front of the red light and wondered which road to choose, the less traveled, the most it didn't matter. Where was it going? Know where you're going! Who'd said that? Never start a story without a lead, I had a name, wasn't a name, a lead? Yes, but which road, left, right or reverse thrust. A small laser bounces around inside my cranium and on occasion it will hit the proper neuron stimulating the hell out of it, like sunlight through clouds and hovering lightbulbs — all that stuff — it came to me — to pastures, yes, I would go to the pastures.

Next week: Cowtipping round-up and the inside story.

"NO MORE MR. NICE GUY."

"I'm not my old lovable self when I'm around cigarettes. I get real cranky. So I want all you smokers to quit once and for all. And who knows? You might even put a smile on my face."

The Two Personalities Of Virginia Weather

Swann, RA's Agree Ignorance No Excuse

By ILONA WILSON

"We all have a responsibility for our actions — whatever we do," said Miss Terrie Swann during an interview this past week. She is concerned with the students' responses of late when they are written up for violations of college policies.

"If we make a poor choice," she stated, "we should be mature enough to accept the consequences of that choice." Miss Swann said that there had been an increase in the use of illegal drugs, especially marijuana on this campus. Repeatedly, students rely on excuses rather than accepting responsibility. "Excuses range from 'I didn't see it in the handbook,' 'It isn't illegal where I live' to 'Everybody has pipes and papers in their room, and I don't know how the residue got into my pipe.' The number of cases heard or misuse of illegal substances no where near represents what I think is the usage in campus," said Swann.

She went on to say that, from what students say, it is not unusual to walk down a floor and see towels under a door or smell smoke. "If a student is willing to take the chance and use illegal substances, then he or she should be willing to take the consequences, which include possible suspension."

Bill Todd, an RA in Frazer feels that in the highrises, without sign-in sign-out, more people are willing to take the chance of getting caught. "People are responsible for their actions. You are supposed to be mature adults and if you break rules you have to be willing to accept the consequences. Bill feels the guys on his hall respect him and "because of this, if they get caught and have to be written up, they are pretty honest."

It seems that the general view of the students is that they feel visitation rules are too strict. In speaking with a senior female student, she, like many others supported this view. "We have more freedom at home. We like it here and pay to be here. As long as students aren't causing trouble they should be allowed more visitation rights." When asked about students' use of illegal substances on campus she felt that if someone wants to smoke pot then it's their business as long as they don't do it around her. "If they do," she said, "then they should know that it's illegal and accept the consequences of their action."

"As much as I like to see students in my office, I don't like to see them for disciplinary reasons," said Swann.

Baseball Team Could Be Best Ever

From Sports Information
Coach Buddy Bolding will unveil his 1982 edition of Longwood baseball Thursday afternoon at Duke and Bolding feels this year's squad could be his best ever.

The Lancers played one game in Durham Thursday, visited Francis Marion in Florence, S.C. Friday for a single contest, played at Morris (Sumter, S.C.) Saturday for a doubleheader and scoring 5.5 runs per contest. Bolding believes his pitching will be improved.

"We have the potential to be one of the best Division II teams in the South Atlantic Region," said the coach. "Our goal is to qualify for the NCAA Div. II playoffs and no team was chosen last year that didn't win at least 30 games."

Longwood lost only two starters from last season —

Bowlin (.395) and Toombs (.339) accounted for 128 runs-batted-in last season.

Moving into the starting lineup will be junior Dwayne Kingery (ROANOKE), a transfer from Ferrum College. Kingery, who has good speed and a potent bat, will play shortstop.

Heading up the mound corps are five returning hurlers: seniors David Mitchell (ROANOKE), Bill Catron wound up the four-day road trip at Benedict in Columbia, S.C. for one game Sunday.

As coach Bolding approaches the upcoming baseball season he has reason to believe Longwood could field its strongest team ever. The Lancers will have depth, experience and speed in abundance and seem to be good bet to make significant improvement on last year's 24-13 mark.

"I think we can have the best team we've had here," said Bolding. "We should have strong leadership from a group of seven seniors, all of whom have made major contributions to the program. We also have pitching depth and good team speed."

A year ago the Lancers had a team batting average of .319 and averaged 8.9 runs per game to rank sixth in Division II in runs scored. While Longwood scored a lot of runs last season, opponents also were productive at the plate national base-stealing champ John Crosby, who graduated, and rightfielder Jim Thacker who was knocked out of action by a separated shoulder.

Crosby, who holds all NCAA college division stolen base records, and Thacker, a top hitter (.333 last season), will be hard to replace.

Returning starters include: first baseman Denny Ulrey (ROANOKE), second baseman David Rumburg (ROANOKE), shortstop Sonny Bolton (CHESTERFIELD), who has been moved to left field, leftfielder Bruce Morgan (DILLWYN), now in center, catcher Doug Toombs (CHASE CITY) and designated hitter Rusty Bowlin (POWHATAN). Veteran John Sullivan (EAST QUOGUE, NY), a third baseman, and Ron Jones (GOODE), a rightfielder, saw considerable action a year ago.

Rumburg (.412), Bolton (.394),

(MONTVALE) and Donnie Mowbray (ROANOKE) and juniors Mickey Roberts (CREWE) and Richard Vaught (BLUE RIDGE). The five combined for 21 of Longwood's 24 victories last season.

Newcomers John Di pierdomenico (HAMPTON BAYS, NY) a freshman righthander, and David Brown (LYNCHBURG), a junior lefthander who transferred in from Ferrum, are expected to play major roles in Bolding's plans for the coming campaign.

Senior catcher Tim Kendrick (CALLANDS), who drove in 17 runs last season, and reserve outfielder Duayne Kendrick (Roanoke), who hit .423 in 16 games, will also see considerable action for the Lancers. Newcomers to the team include freshmen Mike Alves (HAMPTON) and Allen Lawter

Hankinson Player of Week

From Sports Info. — Freshman standout Dayna Hankinson (Springfield), who took first place in beam at last week's VAAW Gymnastics Championships, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period February 26-March 5. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Longwood's top gymnast all season, Hankinson had an 8.9 score in beam to win first in the state meet. Hankinson's mark is a school record in beam. In addition, the freshman finished second in all-around with a score of 33.65, just .05 behind the state champ. Her all-around score was the highest by a Lancer gymnast this season. Hankinson also placed second in floor exercise and tied for second in vaulting at the state meet.

While leading Longwood to a 7-4 regular season record against rugged competition, Hankinson either won or placed in the top three in floor exercise all season. She is a good bet to qualify for the AIAW Div. II Nationals as an individual if Longwood fails to qualify as a team.

Selected as a high school All-American in 1980, Hankinson is a business major at Longwood. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Hankinson of Springfield.

Poor a Standout Rider

Coach Mary Whitlock and her Lancer equestrian team got back into action in February and in the February 26 show at Virginia freshman Amy Jo Poor (Alexandria) pulled off a feat that only one Lancer rider had been able to do previously.

Poor won two divisions in her Novice class. The freshman won both horsemanship on the flat and over fences and ended up as Reserve High Point rider of the show.

"Amy showed super athletic ability in her two blue ribbon wins," said Coach Whitlock. "She competed in the largest division of all (Novice) with 36 competitors in the flat and 30 in over fences."

Longwood finished fifth out of eight college teams competing in the show as Pam Svoboda (Oldfield, NY) qualified for regionals in over fences in the Open Division and Bryan Farrar (Newport News) qualified for Intermediate on the flat.

Northern Va. Gymnasts Compete For Longwood

By LISA SPENCER

Three Longwood gymnasts from the Northern Virginia area, Gina Tabone, Monica Chandler, and Dayna Hankinson, have begun preparations for the upcoming Region II, Division II Regional Gymnastics Championships which will be held Saturday, March 13 at Radford. Reflecting on this almost-completed season, these gymnasts have found many enjoyable moments as well as disappointing ones.

Gina Tabone, a freshman from Fairfax, is a graduate of James W. Robinson High School. She has found that most important facet of competing with Longwood is the closeness of the team; "Everyone is so close on the team," she commented. "In high school, gymnastics is more of an individual effort, but here everyone is cheering for you. Everyone is helping you."

A beam specialist for the Lady Lancers, Gina has found the adjustment to college gymnastics a slightly difficult one. "It's hard coming from where you're one of the best on the team, to where everyone is on the same or a higher level," she said. Gina was injured in practice last week when a small balance beam was dropped on her foot, but she hopes to be back in competition for regionals. "This (regionals) will be the highest competition I've ever been in," Gina stated.

"It would be so exciting if we won and the whole team went to nationals!"

Competing in her second season with Longwood, sophomore Monica Chandler now feels that her adjustment to collegiate competition has been completed. A native of Sterling, she is happy with her progress as a gymnast, but she finds that Division II competition has stiffened. "My scores have all been higher this season," said Monica, "but I haven't been placing as much. It's hard to get used to."

Monica has had a successful career with Longwood thus far. An all-around competitor, she qualified for the 1980 Division II Nationals, placed third all-around at regionals, and was selected to the 1980 All-Championship team at the state finals.

This season, however, has been tougher for Monica, and she has found that her expectations both of herself and of the team have changed. "When the competition gets tougher every year you find that your goals change," she said. "Since I'm not placing as high this year I find that with each meet my performances have become more for the team than for myself."

Monica's major goal now is for the team to qualify for nationals.

Longwood Cleared of Title IX Charges

From Sports Info. — The Office for Civil Rights (OCR) of the U.S. Department of Education has informed Longwood President Janet D. Greenwood that the college is in compliance with Title IX in the operation of its intercollegiate athletics program.

The findings resulted from an OCR review and on site investigation at Longwood last summer after former men's athletic director and basketball coach Dr. Ron Bash charged that the college discriminates against male athletes in the provision of athletic financial assistance and practice and competitive facilities.

Dr. Greenwood received notification of the findings in a letter from OCR dated February 18. In part the letter stated: We have now completed the review and have concluded that Longwood College is in compliance with Title IX in the operation of its intercollegiate athletics program. We conclude that no violation of Title IX has occurred.

"We are grateful to OCR for notifying us of their findings," said Longwood interim Athletic Director Carolyn Hodges. "The OCR team which visited us last summer performed a thorough investigation and their findings should set the issue to rest."

Tennis Outlook; Women Should be Improved

Men in 2nd Season with 3 veterans

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood women's tennis coach Carroll Bruce has a very young team this spring with four sophomores and four freshmen on the squad, but Bruce feels the Lady Lancers are capable of turning in a successful spring season.

sophomore Diane Rardin (LEESBURG) at No. 6. The Lady Lancers visit Hollins Friday.

Veteran Bland Hotchkiss (RICHMOND), who played last spring, could move into the top six in challenge matches this week. Also on the squad is freshman Sarah Lynch (CENTER VALLEY, PA).

Only Hotchkiss and Justice, who was a member of Longwood's 1-9 fall women's tennis team, have had previous collegiate experience, but Coach Bruce is impressed with her team's attitude.

"The players have worked very hard since we began working out inside in January," said the coach. "They have shown improvement already and a very competitive spirit."

Dr. Al Yoder welcomes back three members of Longwood's first ever men's tennis team from last spring and the Lancers, after going 1-13 in their first season, figure to be much improved. Juniors Gus Leal (MEDELLIN, COLOMBIA, S.A.) and John Todd (ALEXANDRIA) and sophomore Beck Haviland (CHARLOTTESVILLE) return from last year.

Currently Yoder rates Haviland as No. 1, Todd as No. 2 and Leal, an All-South performer and Longwood's leading scorer in soccer, as No. 3. Newcomers Brian Kersey (NEWPORT NEWS) at No. 4, Carl Schwab

Meadowlark Lemmon and the Buckateers to Appear March 16th

Meadowlark Lemon and the Buckateers will play the California Coasters in an exhibition basketball game at Longwood College's Lancer Hall Tuesday, March 16, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

The appearance by Meadowlark and his team at Longwood will be the only area showing for the group who will be coming from Bristol, Tennessee and heading for Philadelphia after their appearance in Farmville.

Meadowlark Lemon is, of course, the basketball magician and showman who helped the Harlem Globetrotters win international fame with his skill, showmanship and crowd pleasing antics.

Tickets for the game are $6 for adults and $4 for students and will be on sale at the door. In addition tickets will be available for advance sale at various locations in the Farmville area.

The Longwood College Athletic Program, which is co-sponsoring the event along with the Longwood Lancer Club, will receive a substantial portion of the profits generated by the game.

Gymnasts Seeded 2nd at Regions

The Longwood gymnastics team will travel to Radford Saturday to compete in the Division II, Region II Regionals. Longwood is seeded second behind state champions Radford, with William & Mary and Western Carolina seeded third and fourth.

Coach Ruth Budd is confident that the Lady Lancers can defeat Radford, although they have failed to do so twice this season.

"I think if we can stay on bars and beam we have a good chance at beating them," commented Budd. "The two points they (Radford) beat us by at state can be easily made up if we can stick those two events."

The regional title is especially important to Longwood since the regional winner receives an automatic bid to the Division II National Championships. Longwood has sent individual qualifiers to nationals the past three years, but the entire team has never qualified.

Last season, Longwood finished second to William & Mary in regional competition.

Ride to Gym Meet

Longwood's Gymnastic Team will participate in the AIAW Regional Meet at Radford, Saturday, March 13, at 1:00. A Longwood van will be available to transport interested persons to and from the meet. The van will depart in front of Lancer Hall at 9:45 a.m. and return to campus directly after the meet. The cost of the round trip will be $5. To reserve your seat, sign up and pay in advance in the Athletic Office located in Lancer Hall (2-9323).

in bringing his character to life instead of creating a caricature. Other fine performances come from Sean Penn, who handles the character of Alex, Moreland's questioning roommate, with extreme exactness of emotion, and Tom Cruise gives us a believable portrait of a blood-thirsty cadet.

Director Harold Becker creates a movie that is sensitive to both sides of its issue. He also brings the environment of Bunker Hill to life with detail. In the opening scenes, with the help of Owen Roizman, Director of Photography, the audience is treated to a Commencement parade with its color, beauty and tradition. The world of this academy becomes a real place where the characters live and achieve. From the parade to such a small detail as the folding of a shirt, the world of the academy is brought to life.

Some may complain that the world of the movie is unrealistic. Where are the faculty and its leaders? It is true that we never see them and that in this aspect and others, the movie is somewhat unrealistic. But like the novel, The Lord of the Files, which is comparable, all guiding authority is taken away from the children and they are left alone in a microcosm to live as they will. In Golding's book, that world is the island and in Taps it is Bunker Hill Academy. For the events in the movie to occur, certain liberties must be taken with reality.

Taps deals with children and their interpretation of ideas and values. Even though the military is not presented in a favorable light, the movie is not a campaign against militarism, but a study of how its ideas may be distorted. The movie is filled with violence, but violence and death does have its place and is pivotal to the plot and to the characters. Such scenes may be shocking to the audience, but they are effective and achieve their point. The only complaint is that the violence tends to be sensationalized. Moreland learns that honor in death is not a simple and beautiful idea, but he realizes that, as one character says, "Dying is only one thing — bad". All of the deaths in the movie are accidental. None are in response to a cause or a high ideal. They are pointless. As Moreland says to Alex in a memorable scene, "Honor doesn't mean a shit when you're looking at a dead little boy."

Greeks

worst in mental stress, isolated incidents of hazing or assault for pledges to prove their worthiness of membership. Before a respective member gets to this stage they fork out "X" amount of dollars for this brother or sisterhood, they also encounter many unannounced expenditures along the road of acceptance. Hell week has had tragic implications for the NIFC, schools and parents: A Texas Freshman has criminal charges pending against three brothers of Alpha Tau Omega for assault, at LSU a Theta Xi pledge was killed and five others injured by a moving car as they were led blindfolded across a darkened highway. A man died of suffocation when a grave he was digging collapsed over him, another man died of alcohol overdose when he (a non-drinker) was locked in the trunk of a car and was not released until he drank a pint of bourbon, bottle of wine and six-pack of beer. Seventeen girls in diapers and bonnets paraded through restaurants and fraternity houses. Girls rarely suffer physical abuse but mental stress hits them head on.

The last youth's death triggered the formation of CHUCK (Committee to Halt Useless College Killings) nearly 25 deaths last year involved hazing and alcohol abuse while no charges were filed! Anti-hazing laws have been enacted in Virginia and around the U.S.

Why do they do it? J.L. Yanis, a Yale University psychologist says peer pressure causes submission. Many members think "hazing is a common experience that holds the group together"; the reason more incidents are not reported is because pledges have the promise of leadership glaring at them.

Why do they join a program that may be detrimental to their health? Several reasons. At large universities student relationships may be too impersonal and Greeks fill the void, companionship, life long business and social contacts. These reasons were also selected by two anonymous Greeks at fraternity and sorority. Both are graduating seniors.

The two pledged for different reasons. Mr. X thought four years ago activities lacked organization, so he looked for organization and drinking buddies. While Mrs. X had a relative already in a particular sorority, the sisters really impressed her with their attitudes and were obviously impressed with her because they extended her an open bid. Both learned history, customs and traditions and experienced stress during pledging. Mr. X's pledging had its "hair raising" moments while Mr. X and other pledgers were gripped by mental aggravation. Neither of them have any regrets for the roughly $150 investment.

James Epperson Associate Professor of English at Dartmouth has made five charges against the Greek system and Mr. and Mrs. X responded differently to the charges: It perpetuates racial stereotypes, blacks and other minorities are not encouraged to join; it is uncivilized, destructive behavior, theft and vandalism are frequent; it is anti-intellectual, drug culture with drunkenness used to justify behavior, it is sexist men abuse women and exclude them from membership. Mr. X agrees with all the above except the first charge and Mr. X disagrees with the first charge and the non-intellectualism. The only sexist aspect of the system is fraternities having little sisters and sororities having a little brothers. Mr. X adds that it would be a good idea if the little brothers served a purpose, it would not work out if they didn't. Both stressed that fraternities and sororities on each campus are different in these ways. (example: Some schools allow fraternity or sorority houses on campus while others like L.C. allow neither) even though they may have brothers and sisters at those institutions. Although the public image of a Greek is clouded with misunderstanding and sparse knowledge.

Once again, Longwood will play an extremely tough schedule with seven Division I opponents and a total of 10 games against Division I foes. The Lancers face Virginia Tech, James Madison, Virginia, William & Mary, Duke, Virginia Commonwealth and Colgate in Division I, and Shippensburg State, Maryland Baltimore County and Mount St. Mary's in Division II. The Lancers face the unenviable task of playing 27 of 44 games on the road.

Also on the squad are junior Keith Haviland (STAATSBURG, NY) and freshman Tony Finocchiaro (CAPE MAY, NJ).

The Lancers will open their season Tuesday at Averett in a match that was rained out Saturday. Saturday Coach Yoder's team travels to Radford to take on the Highlanders and Charleston (WV).

We'll be stronger at the bottom half of the ladder," says the coach. "Right now there's a lot of competition for the number two, three and four spots. This kind of balance should make everybody work harder."

Dr. Yoder says that Beck Haviland (no relation to Keith) seems highly motivated to hold down the top spot. "Beck is playing better now than he did a year ago."

"I've competed at nationals as an individual," stated Monica. "Now I want to compete with the whole team there."

Monica is a government major who plans to be a free-lance journalist.

The third team member from the Northern Virginia area is a Springfield native. Dayna Hankinson, a freshman, came to Longwood from West Springfield High School. She has proven herself to be one of the top collegiate gymnasts in the state. Dayna has also found that the team closeness is the Lady Lancers' biggest asset. "Competing in college is very different from competing in high school or with a private club," she commented. "Here there's more of a team feeling. Everyone is very supporting."

Although she has competed for Longwood only one season, Dayna has certainly made a place for herself. She currently holds the Longwood scoring record in balance beam (8.90), and has set season highs in floor exercise (8.75) and all-around (33.65). She won the state balance team title at the VAIW Championships while placing second all-around, second in floor exercise, and fourth in vaulting. She is looking forward to doing as well at regionals. "I'm excited about regionals," said Dayna, "but it's scary at the same time. I really want the team to qualify for nationals."

Dayna, who was selected a high school All-American in 1980, is probably Longwood's best bet as an individual qualifier. She has either won or placed in the top three in floor exercise in every meet this season. Dayna is a business major.

Last Sunday 61 students jumped rope for three hours to raise money for the American Heart Association. This year $1,503.20 was raised.

Proposal to Bolster Computer Literacy

By JOE JOHNSON

A proposal has been sent to the state council of higher education requesting funding in support of a program designed to enhance computer literacy among the faculty staff, students and administration of Longwood College. The money will be provided by a "funding mechanism" entitled Funds for Excellence, which is administered by the S.C.H.E.

Mr. Al Carpenter, chairman of the Academic computing Planning Program described the criteria which must be met to submit such a proposal. "A proposal for the funds for excellence should be designed to offer a unique or outstanding service to the Commonwealth. 'The target of our computer literacy program is all people at Longwood College, that's why it's unique.'"

Salters In Auto Mishap

The week end of February 26-28 Dr. Leo Salters, Dean of Students for Longwood College was reported to have been in an automobile accident. He is now recuperating in Tennessee.

At last Tuesday's press conference Dean Swann reported that Dr. Salters would most likely not be able to come back to Longwood until after spring break. In addition, Salters position will be left vacant this summer after his resignation. But Dr. Greenwood, president of Longwood College, reported that the college has stopped taking applications for Dean of Students and will be making an appointment to the position in the near future.

NATION

In a letter delivered to vice president George Bush, Harrison A. Williams Jr. resigned from the U.S. senate. Williams, a New Jersey Democrat, faced exclusion or censure for possible wrongdoing in an FBI Abscam case.

Members of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees indicated to President Reagan they are unable to cut an additional $14.2 billion from their budget. Reagan last week gave the green light to Senate Republicans to find a bipartisan budget alternative.

The Senate subcommittee heard reports from four military service senior planners last week that it will cut over $1.6 trillion of their budget to accomplish all defense missions for the next five years.

WORLD

In Frankfurt, West Germany, a demonstration with 10,000 people resulted in street fighting and seven arrests over the U.S. policy in El Salvador. The Salvadoran Commander of Guerrillas, Ferman Cienfuegos, has planned a major offensive prior to election, Cuba and Nicaragua allies fear a strong response by President Reagan.

State Department officials displayed photos in Washington last week showing evidence that Nicaragua is bolstering its military forces threatening neighboring countries. An American offensive to overthrow the Sandinista revolutionary government in Managua would be confronted with violence from Panama and Guatemala Sandinista officials revealed.

Walter J. Stoessel, Jr., Deputy Secretary of State charged the Soviet Union's chemical warfare, artillery and air strikes with more than 3,000 deaths in Afghanistan since 1979. Stroessel, testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee cited "use of chemical weapons in war is a violation of the 1925 Geneva protocol, to which the USSR is a party."

Recognition Award Honors Students

Joan of Arc never got an award for being burned at the stake. All she probably received was an occasional stick or two under her feet and snide comments from bystanders "lousy heretic"...etc. Nobody cared back then.

No need to fear however (also no need to get burned at the stake, or even steamed for that matter) Longwood has an award for all those unsung heroes. It is entitled appropriately enough the Arc Award and is presented to those students who have contributed service to Longwood College in an unusual and outstanding manner. The award tries to honor those students who work "behind the scenes" and receive very little recognition for their endeavors.

The Arc Award was established by Legislative Board (now known as the student senate) in the spring of 1971.

Initially it was presented to selected junior and senior undergraduate women. However, in recent years the award has been changed so that men and women are now eligible to receive it. No more than ten juniors and seniors combined may receive the Arc Award in any given year. Students who hold an office voted on in a major election are not eligible nor are presidents or vice presidents of classes, members of Geist, students recognized by Geist as Festmeister, Mittenmeister, or Geistmeister, and juniors and seniors commended by Chi are not eligible to receive the Arc Award during that year.

Each year, about March 10, nomination forms are distributed to the faculty, the presidents of all organizations, the junior and senior classes, the Vice President for Student Affairs, and the Vice President for Academic Affairs. These individuals may nominate junior and senior students. During the first few years of the award, the selection committee received 50 to 60 nominations. During 1981 there were only 11 students nominated and 6 were selected to receive the Arc Award.

The selection committee is composed of the senior recipients of the Arc Award from the previous year (at which time they are juniors), a dean, the sponsor of Geist, the sponsor of Chi, and a faculty member.

The Arc Award was initially presented at Senior Assembly. However, last year the Arc Award was presented during the Honors Council Awards Assembly and will continue to be presented at the Awards Assembly.

Today, as in 1971, many students serve Longwood College in a variety of ways. Some receive praise and recognition while others do not. The Arc Award remains as one manner in which students, who normally do not receive formal recognition, can be honored and rewarded slightly for the service they render to their college.

Campus Police Justify Actions In Family Dispute

By MARK SEGAL

An altercation between campus police and a five foot ten inch 230 pound vietnam veteran last Saturday night has Alpha Chi Rho members in bewilderment. According to AXP members an intruder entered their party at the Lankford Building. Campus police were called to the scene and John (not his real name) left the party with his alleged wife.

John and his mate returned to the party and he made physical threats to members of AXP. Reportedly he even made accusations that a member of the fraternity had beaten his wife the night before. Campus police were called a second time and told John that he must leave or he could be arrested for trespassing in the Lankford Building.

According to Campus police, they asked a member of the fraternity if he would be willing to press charges against John. "They told me 'no'," said officer Husky.

To complicate matters, John then tried to purchase beer at a local food store and was refused.

He reportedly then struck his alleged wife in the parking lot and drove away without her.

She then went back to the AXP party looking for aid. "I think she came back to the party looking for the cops," said Barry Driver, a member of AXP.

But then John came back on campus at approximately one a.m. clutching a six-month old baby and was intercepted by police at the front of the Lankford building.

Winkler Offers Talents To Public Affairs

By BILL BRENT

Don Winkler, the new head of Public Affairs at Longwood College, has sparked like a diamond for the past 24 years in this field. Winkler comes to our "remarkably friendly campus" under an avalanche of awards and national recognition for 24 years of hard work at various other institutions across the country. He is married, with two sons at the University of Hawaii.

Winkler studied Journalism at McKendree College in Illinois. He earned his masters in Journalism from Ohio University and after work as a graduate assistant at OU he went to North Dakota. At North Dakota State he was an instructor in communications and assistant director of Communications, before leaving he became Acting Director of Communications. He moved to Lynchburg and Randolph-Macon Women's College to direct Information Services. Winkler then travelled to Washington, D.C., to direct Public Relations at George Washington University. Packing once more he went to California's Fresno St. University to direct Public Affairs. Then on to Hawaii to the East-West Center as an Executive Administrator for Public Affairs. Now, he directs Public Affairs at Longwood; during Winkler's travels he has been blanketed by awards and national attention.

Along his 38 national awards, Winkler founded the "East-West Respectives" in Honolulu. In 1980 the magazine won the "Top Ten" award among outstanding educational magazines in America and Canada from the "Council for Advancement and Support of Education" (CASE). Also in 1980 the publication won the Exceptional Achievement Award and Special Merit Award, also given by CASE. Last year "Perspectives" won the "Top Ten" award from CASE and the Golden Lamp Award for the top magazine of the year award by the Educational Press Association of America. Alumnus Dazzles Audience With 'Down Home' Style

By CINDY CORELL

I could almost smell the honeysuckle bushes that had perked into my imagination along with the vision of a half-dozen barefoot children dressed in starched, overcleaned clothes, with crewcuts or straight pony tails, depending on their sex and impish grins on freckled faces. But no, I wasn't sitting on a cabin porch in the Appalachian Mountains. — far from it. I was sitting in Wygal Auditorium right here on campus.

Molnar Recital Hall was temporarily transformed into a "Mountain music" concert hall Thursday night as a Longwood alumnae and friend took to the stage. Madeline MacNeil graduated from Longwood in 1962 as a vice major and she returned with friend Seth Austen for a Visiting Artist recital. The two from Winchester, Va. sat on the low stage on plain wooden chairs with various folk instruments such as mountain dulcimer, hammered dulcimer, fiddle and guitar, and their cases haphazardly nestled around them. She wore a long red plaid skirt and a white blouse while he was attired in Wranglers, a red flannel shirt and a pair of worn farm boots, good for keeping time while he played. With Madeline (or Maddie, as she's called) on mountain dulcimer, or hammered dulcimer, and Seth on the fiddle, guitar, or mountain dulcimer (he left his mandolin at home.) They encouraged the audience of about 150 to help them out on "I'll Fly Away," a familiar Southern hymn, and "Angels We Have Heard on High", a Christmas song that Madeline and Seth do not like to ignore in months other than December.

Madeline and Seth have recorded an album together and Madeline recorded an earlier album alone. Both have original songs that they performed

Thursday night. Madeline wrote "Many Butterflies" and dedicated it to friends in Farmville. Seth soloed on a tune he claims he wrote in three different states and it "came together" in a fourth.

The program ended with the George Gershwin classic performed on two guitars with Madeline singing "Summertime."

Students Choreographed Water Ballet

By CINDY CORELL

The 1982 Catalina Spring Show opened Thursday night before a crowd of two hundred and ran through Saturday night in Lancer Pool. The 45-minute program was an excellent variety of choreographed water ballet. The choreography was done by members of the team and each number had from two to six swimmers.

Some highlights of the evening's performance were "Relections" which was choreographed by Mo Rogge and performed by Bernie Toner and Judy Luck. The two swam in symmetrical form, matching stroke for stroke, at times intermeshing their moves while keeping perfect synchronization. Kim Guthrie choreographed a number entitled "Flying Free" to the music of Jonathan Livingston Seagull. Denise Goodie, Lynda Stratton, Bernie Toner, Debbie Bucsko, Cynthia Seltie, and Cheryl Compton performed in the rhythmic number, splashing and diving in excellent time.

Following these and five other numbers, the entire Catalina team joined together for a grand finale to the music of "Hooked on Classics" by the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. The number was called, of course, "Classics."

RED AND WHITE ROOMS

Award To Give $750

From Public Affairs

The Longwood College Foundation has announced the establishment of the Thelma Garrett Mottley Award for Meritorious Service to Longwood College.

To be given for the first time during Longwood's Founders Day activities on April 17, the award will recognize a member of the "College family" who has an extended record of exemplary service to the institution. The award carries a cash gift of $750.

The award was established in honor of Mrs. Mottley by her four children. The donors — Harry E. Mottley, Jr., James V. Mottley, Robert A. Mottley, and Carolyn M. Dixon — are setting up an endowment of $10,000 to support the annual award.

Persons in the following categories are eligible for nomination for the award: Longwood students with a minimum of two years of exemplary service or achievement; faculty and staff members with at least five years of service to the activities of the college, including extracurricular affairs and community relations; alumni with a minimum of 10 years of constructive service to the college; and citizens of the Farmville community who have voluntarily participated in college activities for at least 10 years.

Any member of the college or Farmville communities may submit nominations for the award. Each nomination must be accompanied by a written statement detailing the qualifications of the nominee.

A four-member committee, representing each of the categories of persons eligible for the award, will select the recipient. Members of this year's committee are: alumna Carolyn S. Baber, of Cumberland; student Beth Joles, a senior from Chester; Mrs. Mottley, representing the Farmville community; and a faculty representative to be named in the near future.

Deadline for nominations for the 1982 award is March 12. Send letters of nomination to Donald L. Lemish, Vice President for Institutional Advancement at Longwood.

By JOE JOHNSON

"Ghost Story" is probably the most accurately titled movie of this year. It is, from all perspectives and insidious angles, just that — a ghost story. From the decrepit house with iron spiked gates and broken shutters, to the cracked door, to the old men forming ritual societies, it possesses all the elements of an intricate spook plot.

An audience looking for the macabre sensationalism of "Friday the 13th" should look elsewhere. The frights contained in it are brought about through a well synchronized camera shot and frequent eye-popping false starts, not particularly explicit special effects. Like a hand placed on your shoulder from behind, you're never quite sure if the face you turn around to see is a mugger or friend. The tension this technique creates is most effective and occasionally results in that silly laughing at yourself for fear.

What made this movie entertaining, though some have criticized it for being slow moving, is the intricate step by step unraveling of plot. The order of the movie is not in the truest sense chronological; we are led through the tale in gigantic leaps backward by stories told in firelight and forward through cut up dream sequences. The audience is left to put it all together. Sorry, no Holmes to pat you on the back and say, "elementary, my dear Watson." Although after putting the pieces in place, the plot seems elementary; so is calculus after you get the right answer.

Fred Astaire gives a fine performance as the tough old cookie, not too scared, but scared enough to play it smart. In his eyes, as in the eyes of the other characters (Melvin Douglas, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and John Houseman), we see the burden of guilt. Like Lady MacBeth's blood reddened hands, the stain is persistent. In this case, guilt does out and the result is four corpses. John Houseman plays a part similar to the one he plays on PBS's Paper Chase, the high handed guardian of his particular society. However, he manages to break his mold and let the strain of a crime 50 years old tell in his lines.

When Director John Irving chose his lead actress, he must have had a vision or two himself.

She has the face and ability to hauntingly seduce the entire audience. Her character, though extremely malignant, seems almost vulnerable — an exceptional quality for a ghost.

Perhaps this dualism of character is best represented in the final scene of the movie. Where most directors would have gone for lavish gore and special effects, Irving takes the opposite route and siphons horror away. Some might call that anticlimatic. I call it a successful denouement.

Davidson Slated For Recital

From Public Affairs

The Longwood College department of music will present senior Lonnie R. Davidson in a saxophone recital on Tuesday, March 16, at 8 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building, on the Longwood campus.

Davidson's program will include works by Vivaldi, Villa-Lobos, William Duckworth, and Walter Hartley. Two of these works feature contemporary techniques for the saxophone.

Assisting Davidson will be pianists Emily Sue Wilkinson, Charles A. Moshene, and Renee Williams. The recital is open to the public at no charge.

Davidson is president of the Longwood Jazz Ensemble and received the music department's Performance Award last year. He is chairman of the college's committee for the Performing Arts Series and a member of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia fraternity.

He is a graduate of Midlothian High School where he received the Robert Morrison Award for his participation in the band.

Backpacking Course Offered

By CINDY CORELL

A backpacking course is offered this summer from July 14-18. The class, which will earn three credit hours, will consist of two days in the classroom and three days hiking and camping on the Appalachian Trail.

"The direction of the course is to give those who plan to work with people in the future the opportunity to learn how camping and backpacking can fit into a program, especially in the area of working with school-aged children," said David Jones, instructor of the course.

The course will be offered to a maximum of fifteen students. They will sleep in tents, eat dehydrated foods and hike to a new camping site each night. Each student is expected to provide their own sleeping bag, a backpack, and a sturdy pair of hiking boots. Anyone interested should contact David B. Jones, Longwood College, Farmville, Va., 392-9266.

Campus Police

Alpha Chi Rho feels John should have been arrested well before he ever came back with the infant.

According to officer Husky: "After the second time we responded I called Ms. Ferrell from social services to find out what (options were available)." But, said Husky, Ms. Farrell wanted to talk to the wife and by the time Husky went to find her she was gone.

An arrest was never made and according to Dr. Peale, vice president for administration, he feels campus police did everything they could have done to prevent a serious situation: "we were in the middle of a family quarrel at that point" (when he came back with the baby) and were judging criterion for arrest on a new set of circumstances.

"I don't think my officers are qualified to take care of a 6 month old child," said Chief Neil Smith. "There are no facilities between Lynchburg and Richmond for the baby," added Husky.

Chief Smith felt confident that the situation was handled correctly. According to him the officer that could have arrested John could have been liable for suit. If the circumstances were to be repeated Smith said "No, we wouldn't make an arrest."

Ulrey Player of of Week

Senior tri-captain Denny Ulrey (Roanoke), who had three hits and drove in three runs in Longwood's 9-3 baseball victory at Hampden-Sydney Thursday, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period March 5-12. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

"Denny had a super game for us Thursday," said Longwood coach Buddy Bolding. "He had two key hits with two outs and a stretching catch at first base to help kill a Hampden-Sydney rally. He demonstrated strong leadership and broke the game open for the Lancers."

Ulrey had a double and two singles in the win with three RBI's. His two-out single in the first plated two runs and got Longwood off to a 4-0 lead. The senior has helped Longwood compile a 1-2-1 record thus far.

A four-year starter with Longwood baseball, Ulrey is a graduate of Northside High School. Also a four-year starter at Northside, he was team MVP two years and leading hitter in

At Longwood, he has had averages of .309, .330 and .194 while excelling on defense as well. He was also a Lancer tri-captain in 1980. Ulrey ranks among Longwood's career leaders in doubles (14) and hits (71).

The physical education major is the son of Mrs. Virginia Ulrey of Roanoke.

Lancers Sweep Bears Prepare for Tough Tests

Longwood exploded for 22 runs and 21 hits to sweep a doubleheader from visiting West Virginia Tech Sunday afternoon, but three tough tests loom on the horizon this week as Virginia Commonwealth, Washington & Lee and Division II power Shippensburg St. visit Longwood for single games Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. All three contests are slated for 3:00 starts on Lancer Field.

Juniors Richard Vaughn (Blue Ridge) and Mickey Roberts (Crew) hurled complete game victories while David Rumburg (Roanoke), Doug Toombs (Chase City), Mike Alves (Hampton) and Allen Lawter (South Boston) were the hitting stars as Longwood swept WV Tech 9-3 and 13-3 Sunday afternoon.

Vaughn tossed a five-hitter and struck out eight while Roberts allowed only four hits in the nightcap. Rumburg clouted a three-run homer and along with Toombs went 3-4 in the opener. Alves collected three hits with two doubles and three RBI's and Lawter a double and triple in the second contest.

Longwood stretched its record to 3-2-1 with the twin killing. Sunday's victories gave the Lancers three wins in their last four games. Thursday Coach Buddy Bolding's team visited Hampden-Sydney and came

Gymnasts Place Second at Regions-Individuals Hope for National Bids

By LISA SPENCER

Longwood's attempt at an automatic berth to the AIAW Division II National Gymnastics Championships was crushed Saturday in a heartbreaking second place finish to VAAIAW champ Radford. Radford scored 129.95, Longwood totalled 129.65, William & Mary had 125.30, and Western Carolina finished fourth with 106.35.

Freshmen Dayna Hankinson and Kelly Crepps were Longwood's top individuals in the competition. Dayna captured the regional all-around (33.5) and floor exercise (8.8) titles. Her floor score was a new Longwood record in that event. She also placed second in beam with 8.25.

Crepps, the Virginia vaulting champion, captured the regional title with 8.45. Her 32.5 all around score was a second place finish. Senior Kathy Idelson finished third in bars (8.3) and sixth all-around (31.7).

Although the team failed to qualify for a national berth, Coach Ruth Budd feels that the team had a good showing.

"The team did really well. We had a few mistakes that cost us the meet, but this was the first time that the whole team was really ready," she commented.

KELLY CREPPS:
Virginia and Region
Vaulting Champ

"And we still have a slim chance for one of the four open bids to nationals."

If the team doesn't get a bid, several individuals should have a good chance at qualifying. Hankinson is a sure bet for the Lady Lancers, and Crepps should be invited. Idelson, who has been to nationals the past three years, may also qualify.

The AIAW Division II Nationals will be held March 26-27 at Denver.

5th Annual Mini Thon To Be Held

Longwood College will host its fifth annual mini-thon on April 1. The 6.2 miles course starts at Hampden-Sydney and follows Route 643 to the finishing point at Longwood. The best time ever recorded was by Richard Ferguson of Appomattox. (32.46).

Applications can be picked up at the Lankford Student Union building.

away with a 9-3 win before bowing to Virginia 8-4 Friday.

Junior pitcher David Brown (Rustburg) hurled a complete game and senior first baseman Denny Ulrey (Roanoke) delivered three hits and three RBI's as Longwood whipped the Tigers of Hampden-Sydney 9-3 Thursday. Brown scattered eight hits, struck out six and walked two in the win while Ulrey had a key first inning single which drove in two runs. Sophomore John Sullivan (E. Quogue, NY) also had three hits in the win.

Lady Netters Lose To Mason

Longwood's women's tennis team opened its season at home Wednesday hosting George Mason and Coach Carol Bruce's team dropped a tough 5-4 decision to the visiting Patriots. Lisa Barnes (Suffolk), Terry Justice (Richmond) and Bland Hotchkiss (Richmond) took singles wins but only the team of Hotchkiss and Sue Harvey (Amherst) at No. 3 were able to win in doubles.

Friday the Lady Lancers fell to a strong Hollins College team 9-0 as their record slipped to 0-2.

After a match Wednesday at Ferrum, Longwood will be on break until play resumes April 2 at Bridgewater.

Golfers 7th out of 17 at Sanford

Longwood's men's golf team placed seventh out of 17 teams in the District III Tournament Monday-Tuesday in Sanford, N.C. Highly regarded Div. III teams Methodist and Greensboro tied for first with 621 totals while Longwood nosed out Hampden-Sydney for seventh place with a 665 total.

Senior Tim White (Richmond) rebounded from a first round 85 to fire a 73 Tuesday giving him a Longwood best 158 score for the two rounds. David Moore (Danville) was next at 83-83 - 166.

Other Longwood scores included: Bryant Reese (South Hill) 86-84-170, Stan Edwards (Bedford) 85-86 - 171, Richard Miller (Pulaski) 90-86 - 176 and Glen Bugg (Chase City) 88-94 - 182.

The Lancers visit Newport News Friday for a three team match with Newport News and Old Dominion. The match will be played at Sleepy Hollow Golf Course. Coach Steve Nelson's team resumes play March 28 in the three-day Elon College Tournament.

Lady Golfers Finish Fourth in Invit.

Longwood slipped from second to fourth on the final day of the Longwood Invitational Spring Golf Tournament Sunday afternoon as North Carolina State took first place, but sophomore Emily Fletcher (PRINCE GEORGE'S) and junior Robin Andrews (WOODLAWN) finished third and fourth among the individuals.

The Wolfpack had a 54 hole showing of 321-324-331 - 976 to top second place William & Mary (986) by 10 strokes. North Carolina Wilmington, led by medalist Darci Wilson's 76-75-78 - 229, was third at 989 while Longwood carded a 334-325-335 - 994.

Fletcher had the third best total in the tournament with a 79-

80-82 - 241 while Andrews, her Longwood teammate, was among three golfers who tied for fourth place with a 242. Robin fired a second round 75 to go with scores of 84 and 83.

Other Longwood scores included: Pam Othen (Ann Arbor, MI) 82-84-82 - 248, Morgan (Massapequa Park, N.Y.) 89-86-88 - 263 and Sharon Gilmore (Patchogue, NY) 92-91-89 - 272.

Earlier in the week the Lady Lancers participated in the Lady Wolfpack Invitational in Raleigh, N.C. Longwood finished fifth out of eight teams. Team scores were: South Carolina 875, Duke 992, Wake Forest 996, NC State 1048, Longwood 1049, Purdue 1067, James Madison 1087 and Appalachian State 1141.

Othen and Fletcher paced the team at Raleigh. Othen carded a 246 to earn seventh place while Fletcher finished 15th with a 258.

Following two weeks off, Longwood's women's golf team swings back into action April 2-3 in the Sweet Briar Invitational.

Food Prices Rise In March

The Farmville Market Basket cost $62.19 in March versus $62.11 in February. The increase was a slight .13 percent.

For the year, food prices in March 1982 actually went down a surprising 1.93 percent from March 1981.

The market basket survey for Farmville now includes only three chain stores — Safeway, Big Star, and Winn-Dixie. With the closing of Bob's Supermarket last month, there are no independent stores included in the local study.

In the Farmville basket for March, the price of 19 food items went up, 20 went down, and one item was priced the same as last month. Generally, the prices of pork products, milk, cheese, juices, frozen vegetables, fruits, some vegetables, coffee, cola drinks, and sugar went up.

Offsetting these increases were lower prices for cereals, crackers, bread, beef products, some frozen fish, ice cream, evaporated milk, eggs, shortening, peanut butter, and margarine. Corn was the only item showing no price change from the previous month.

The local survey in April will measure "trivia" items as well as the regular market basket list. Pricing for gasoline and oil products should be of interest.

The Farmville market basket study is a project of the Economics Seminar class at Longwood College under the direction of Dr. Anthony B. Cristo. Financial support for conducting the study is provided by the Longwood College Foundation.

Despite Reagans Ax, Pell Saves Government Money

From U S Department of Education

Improved management of the Pell Grant Program saved $21 million in interest last year and enabled the Department of Education to recover and return to the U.S. Treasury an additional $66 million over a 2-year period, Secretary T.H. Bell announced on March 21 despite Reagan's attempt to cut $91 million by 1983-84 and eliminate one million students.

"I find it significant that we were able to accomplish savings of this magnitude simply by making better use of our existing resources and requiring institutions to do a better job of bookkeeping and report," Secretary Bell said.

The program was authorized in the Education Amendments of 1972 and the first awards to students were made in the 1973-74 school year. Since that time, more than 13.4 million grants totaling more than $10.5 billion have been awarded to financially needy students for postsecondary education.

At the beginning of each Pell Grant award period, the Department of Education "banks" with a Federal disbursement system the amount of money an education institution is estimated to need for initial payments to students. As needed, additional funds are banked for subsequent payments.

Through a more careful analysis of the amount needed for initial payments, only $1 billion of the available $2.4 billion was credited to institutional accounts at the beginning of the 1980-81 grant period. In the year before they had been credited with $1.4 billion — a $400 million excess. By holding the excess for later release, the Federal Government's interest obligation was reduced by nearly $21 million. Total awards to students were approximately the same in both years.

The $66 million returned to the Treasury Department came from unused Pell Grant funds remaining in school accounts. The surplus was identified when school reports of payments to students were reconciled with Federal records of disbursements to the schools.

Currently, 96 percent of all participating school accounts have been reconciled and closed. However, before the concerted reconciliation effort began in November 1979, only 23 percent had been reconciled.

Preacher Blends Experiences With R.S. Position

By PAUL GILLESPIE

Let's face it, the most potentially disastrous choice imaginable for resident supervisor in a college dorm would have to be a part-time preacher, right? After all, it's common knowledge that preachers have been known to condemn rock 'n roll as the devil's music, demand sober, stuffy, straight-laced lifestyles of their flock, and generally demand that anything unpredictable and crazy enough to make college life less boring and more bearable be treated as a sin to be avoided. In short, a preacher would only make the demands of college life even more demanding, wouldn't he? Or would he?

John Robertson, who became the new R.S. for Main Cunningham this past September, is a part time preacher who has been active in Baptist Student Union ministry, done missionary work to New York City, and was ordained a minister in 1979. He was educated at Southside Virginia Community College in 1976, has taught many high school and college Sunday School classes, and was licensed and ordained for preaching at Crewe Baptist Church. Residents of Main Cunningham have reacted quite favorably to his approach to duties there, saying that he keeps rules enforced, but doesn't write people up without thinking; that he is "not overpowering", and shows definite concern for the students; that he's "there when you need him", and even "fun to live with".

Robertson does not spend a lot of time imposing his view of right and wrong on the residents, it seems. He has stated from the start of his time here that he prefers to give individuals as much responsibility for their own actions as possible. "Of course, what goes with responsibility is accountability," he added, "and using your freedom wisely. Most of the problems come from vandalism and people from other buildings' breaking things, and from drunkenness, in which people cease to be accountable for their own actions. Most of the people I've met here, though, have been pretty responsible as to how they handle parties."

Yet Robertson is willing to be firm if students aren't even trying to stick by the rules. When the end of visiting hours comes, for instance, "If they're already on their way out and trying to cooperate, then I try to cooperate with them as much as I can. But it becomes a different matter if it's forty-five minutes later and they're still up there with girls in the room, or there's drunk and disorderly conduct."

Robertson has much the same attitude about loud stereos. He has warned tenants at dorm meetings to be careful not to let them become a problem for those trying to study, saying that he'll deal with problems they cause as they're reported. Yet tenants at Main Cunningham still get ample opportunity to crank up their music loud enough to get their minds off their pressures several times during the week and on weekends as long as no one reports the music's disrupting desperately needed study time.

Robertson thinks his experience as a minister has been helpful in his job as an R.S. His time with the church has shown him that "...if people are held in high regard, if we know that God created us all, that no matter how much we mess up what He created (Robertson chuckles slightly) He still loves us, then we ought to want to show respect for one another and to care for people around us as much as possible. I think that's the main reason I'm here ... I felt this type of position would tell me a lot about myself, whether I'd like a job in campus ministry in the future, but mainly, I am here because I care about people and to show a little bit of guidance and concern... to do what I can where I can."

Like a full-time preacher, Robertson does want to encourage others to look to God for help in their lives, but he remains cautious about when and how he does it. "Having seen some potential alcoholics, drug addicts and those who'd even be thieves because of a lack of inner fortitude or fulfillment," he says "I've been waiting for the opportunity, not forcing myself on anyone...to share a word of faith and encouragement, to let them know someone does care for them...I think that's very important."

---Movie Review---

By JOE JOHNSON

Knee jerk reactions are generally the worst. They tend to over simplify and congest what may become clear with a minute or two pause. It is with such an attitude that one should approach "Porky's." Let us be humble in our opinions and review the facts — slowly, meticulously.

True, the plot of Porky's if we can call it that vibrates with after shocks of "American Graffiti" or National Lampoon's "Animal House." True, highschool pranks and sexual gimping are the order of the day, carrying the movie through a sluggish muck of Bad Guy, Good Guy machinations. True the ending drolls on in useless melodrama, the middle is bloated with standardized subplots and the beginning is like a corny joke.

Okay, for all these truths how come one remains, which is so inconsistent, so obtuse, so completely undefinable that I have spent three nights in a packed State theater, chewing fingernails and scratching my cranium trying to figure it out. Namely — Why did all these people mob this movie?

Perhaps the answer lies in the first scene. The center of action is presented — Porky's Establishment. It is a shock on water with a neon sign "Get it at Porky's". The sign has little piglets on it, one male — with tongue hanging, one female with fanny waving in the breeze."

"There is something significant in that sign" I think. Something ominous which captures the eye of the audience. It is perplexing. It ravages the imagination and demands to be fulfilled. "A symbol by God!" I yell shoving fingernails and popcorn down my throat. "Yes, the neon light stands for our deteriorated age of electronic satisfaction the use of piglets reemphasizes my consensus". But there was a problem. What's the fanny for? It was a hopeless cause.

I looked elsewhere. Perhaps the truth lies in the herds who attend. Perhaps there is a certain class of people who go to see such a movie of flagrant laughs and redundant actions. (I must humble myself enough to admit that I also laughed. I tried not to, I even bit my tongue. But when one brown haired youth straddling an oversized inflated prophylactic jopped coach Gorilla Ape right in her yazio, I couldn't help myself) perhaps these people are the fueling source for Hollywoods Empire, more so than "Reds" or "Charriots of Fire" — "Porky's" cost 4 million to produce and in the first week grossed over 21 million. On the assumption that there is such a prototype who attend this genre of movie I have developed a survey. For those of you who have seen "Porky's" please fill out and turn it in to the information office. The results will be tabulated and if there is a specific character, a general character sketch of him/her will be sent to 20th Century Fox, Columbia and Mary Tyler Moore Productions to farther the capitalistic cause. Check one. I am a...

Rugby Gives One To Richmond 14-3

It was the day. Yes, it must have been the day. Had it been any other day, the Longwood College Rugby Football Club might not have taken such a stomping at the hands of the University of Richmond Rugby Football Club. But on this day there was no chance.

It was Saturday, April 10th, and as far as days go, it was a pretty sad one. The temperature, about 40 degrees or maybe a little more, was right in between two more desirable extremes, making it necessary for people to sit outside their cars, but not comfortably, for a wind would kick up every now and then that just annoyed the people who were just before being fooled into thinking that they were warm by a rather piercing sun. It was a terribly deceptive, potentially dangerous, paradoxical kind of day in which it was obvious that Longwood's Rugby team was destined for the 14-3 humiliation that Richmond handed them.

It was on this day that Longwood's players must have left their brains at home because although they pushed Richmond all over the field they made several dumb mistakes and were constantly outmaneuvered by Richmond which displayed itself as a well-coached, highly polished, thinking rugby team. Or maybe it was the Slater.

Maybe there was something in the Slater that day, some dangerous mind-altering substance smoothed down to a tolerable level by all the grease that simply waxed over any swift cognitive ability that the victim might normally possess, which would easily explain why both the players and the spectators and anybody but Richmond seemed to be in an intensely apathetic state of mind, ignorant of how rotten this day really was. Whether it was the Slater or not, the apathy on Longwood's part was highly visible and especially shown by the fans.

Victims of highly-gearred parties of the night before, for the most part, Longwood's fans were of no help at all during the course of the game. They simply sat around and shot the breeze while the biggest hand of the day went to a golfer who hit a very nice chip on to the green directly behind the row of cars that the spectators were sitting around.

But the players did not seem to mind this as they had problems of their own on the field. Mainly, why were they losing? Longwood was knocking Richmond silly, physically. Their scrum was pushing Richmond around at will and they were hitting soundly but Richmond had all the points. A nice, ironic twist, perfect for this truly disgusting day.

Richmond simply out-thought Longwood. Longwood was the more animal of the two clubs, relying too much on instinct, thinking only to punish the enemy and drive them back to their goal. But like a charging animal, they could easily be sidestepped by anyone with some sense, which Richmond did often by releasing pressure in the scrum and allowing Longwood to wheel it, but usually too far, thus giving Richmond an advantage many times in the game. Richmond's main advantage was the difference in play between their's and Longwood's backs. For while Longwood's backs were lucky to make a succession of passes without dropping the ball, Richmond's backs advanced and defended well, kicked at opportune times and almost always managed to have an advantage in numbers. Their first try was a good example of this as good passing left most of Longwood's men out of position and freed some old man to make a nifty run from about 30 yards out, dodging through the last two Longwood defenders and finally making it in. The score was now 4-0 after the extra points attempt failed.

After some more action, Richmond successfully kicked a field goal and later, got a try on one of the most bone-headed plays this reporter has ever seen. Longwood won a line-in but the first pass out to the backs went right in to the hands of a Richmond man who had stepped in the way. It was all over after that as the man went in untouched to give Richmond command of the game at a score of 11-0.

Well, Richmond just could not resist kicking one more field before the end of the half and on the last play, they put one through. Their lead was now 14-0.

As the fact that Richmond scored no more points for the game would indicate, the second half went a little better for Longwood than the first. The backs were largely ineffective, still, and the amount of penalties, mostly for late hits, was astonishing, but the Slater must have been wearing off or something because in the second half, Longwood started to think.

It was becoming quite obvious as the game wore on that if need be, Longwood could push Richmond off a building. The result was more scrum-downs, rucks and mauls than would usually be seen due to the fact that Longwood could actually move the ball this way for appreciable distances by simply keeping the ball underfoot while moving. The most extreme example of this came when Longwood very nearly got a try by using this method and pushing Richmond over the goal line, although the goalpost was in the way for awhile. But when they fell on the ball to complete the play, the referees view was obstructed and he could not award the try to Longwood due to the fact that he could not be sure as to who really fell on the ball.

The game mercifully ended, soon after that, and the players did the usual hand shaking, talked themselves out of having a B game and proceeded to the cabin where everyone gave the keg a serious workout. When a day goes like this one did, it is best to just party hard for a few hours and then, maybe, you won't have to think about it so much. Truly a pathetic day.

Player Of Week

Freshman Allen Lawter (South Boston) had a homerun, five hits and four RBI's in a doubleheader sweep of visiting Maryland Baltimore County Friday, and for his efforts, the first-year infielder has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period April 2-9. Player of the week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

A reserve infielder who has seen action in nine games, Lawter was pressed into service when starting shortstop Dwayne Kingery was kept out of action because of illness. The Halifax High School graduate responded in a big way, going 4-4 in the first game with a homer and three RBI's and getting a hit and scoring a run in the second game. Longwood won the doubleheader over UMBC 15-6 and 7-5.

Lawter, who also performed flawlessly in the field, raised his batting average to well over .300 with Friday's showing. He has driven in nine runs to help Longwood compile a 16-3-1 record and win 15 of its last 16 games through April 9.

Lancers Sweep UMBC, UDC

From SPORTS INFO

Longwood's nationally ranked baseball team swept doubleheaders from Maryland Baltimore County (15-6, 7-5) Friday and District of Columbia (23-0, 11-1) Sunday, upping its record to 18-3-1. The Lancers have now won seven straight and 17 of their last 18 games.

This week Longwood hosts St. Pauls Friday for two, visits William & Mary Saturday and hosts Division III power Lynchburg Sunday at 3:00 after traveling to Richmond to take on Virginia Commonwealth today (Monday).

Coach Buddy Bolding's team, which has its sights set on a berth in the NCAA Division II Playoffs, is currently ranked 19th in Division II by Collegiate Baseball.

Longwood's top two hitters' sophomore Sony Bolton and junior David Rumburg, were the hitting stars of last week's four victories. Bolton, who raised his average to .431, had three hits, five RBI's and a homer in the 15-6 win over UMBC Friday. Bolton has scored a team high 30 runs and collected nine doubles this far.

Rumburg, who blasted his fourth homer of the year in Friday's nightcap, ripped five doubles in Sunday's twinbill with eight RBI's. He upped his batting average to .455 with a 7-14 showing at the plate last week. He has eight doubles and 20 RBI's in total.

Freshman Allen Lawter stepped in to replace starter Dwayne Kingery who was out with illness. Lawter played flawlessly in the field at shortstop in the four games and produced at the plate with five hits in eight trips to the plate and five RBI's. He went 4-4 with a homer in Friday's opening contest and upped his batting average to .385.

Other top hitters for Longwood last week were senior tri-captain Bruce Morgan who went 3-3 with four RBI's and a homer in Sunday's nightcap and senior first baseman Denny Ulrey who had a two-run homer and three RBI's in the 23-0 win over UDC. Soph John Sullivan raised his batting average to .361.

Junior catcher Doug Toombs raised his batting average to .392 with another strong week. He had four hits in nine trips in the four games.

Longwood pitchers also did well last week as Richard Vaught went the distance in Friday's opener to run his record to 4-1. David Brown is 3-0 after pitching six innings in the nightcap.

Sunday, Mickey Roberts and Donnie Mowbray hurled a pair of onehitters and each struck out eight opposing batters. Roberts is 3-0 and Mowbray 2-0.

Rain Posed Little Threat To Inauguration

Greenwood Inaugurated:
"...a sense of direction..."

By CINDY CORELL
"There's an easier way to make a living," warned Ronald E. Carrier, at the Inaugural Ceremonies of Longwood's new President Saturday afternoon. President Janet D. Greenwood obviously wasn't listening, however, as she was installed as Longwood's 20th president and the first woman president of public four-year college or university in Virginia.

The ceremony began with a procession of seniors, faculty, delegates of more than 100 learned societies, colleges and universities, and the President's party. Darrell Harbaugh directed the Longwood College Concert Band performing the processional which included Longwood's former Alma Mater. The Army ROTC presented the colors of state and national flags and Rebecca Nunez, senior music major led the audience in singing the National Anthem. The Rt. Rev. C. Charles Vache, Bishop of The Episcopal Diocese of Southern Virginia presented the Invocation.

Thomas D. Rust, rector of the Board of Visitors, welcomed the alumni, faculty, staff, administration, students and visitors to the ceremony. Susan May, president of the Organization of Teaching Faculty, and Cherie Stevens, president of the Student Government Association both extended a warm welcome to President Greenwood. The Camerata Singers performed a revised version of Virginia's state song, "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia," under the direction of Louard Egbert.

Opening remarks were then made by members of the President's party. These included The Honorable Dan Daniel, United States Congressman, Duvahl Ridgeway-Hull, alumna and Roanoke Physician, Gene Dixon, Jr. president of Kyanite Mining Corporation, J. Bryan Brooks, president of Southside Va. Community College, Josiah Bunting III, president of Hampden-Sydney College, and Ronald E. Carrier, president of James Madison University.

Mr. Rust then proceeded with the ceremony and installed Dr. Greenwood president of Longwood College. As she finished speaking her vow, the Cameratas broke softly into song with "Morning Has Broken."

As President Greenwood began her inaugural address, a slight sprinkle began and grew stronger, blooming umbrellas throughout the crowd. As she continued though, the sun returned, summarizing the brief shower as a mere respite of the sun's heat. In her speech, Dr. Greenwood outlined educational goals for Longwood students and emphasized "we must project the reality of the world as it will exist in the year 2,000 and must seek to prepare students for living in that world...or at least to retain one's sanity in a world that is bound to become more complex and more frustrating." She said that Longwood must be "especially concerned with preparing students not only for earning a living but also for learning how to live...and for learning how to live a complete life, a fulfilling life in the 21st century...if students are banking on money and jobs for their ultimate satisfaction in life, they may be in serious trouble when the jobs aren't there or job dissatisfaction occurs..."

Dr. Greenwood urged Longwood faculty to restructure course offerings, including "a more effective merger of career education and liberal arts education," in order to provide all students with saleable work skills as well as skills in communication, economics, technology, rearing a family, and in engaging in social and political activities.

Life Style Residence Halls To Offer New Visitation Hours—Renovations To Start Soon

By ILONA WILSON

With the arrival of Dr. Janet Greenwood, Longwood College has seen many changes. Such changes will become more observable in the future especially in the residence halls. Among these changes are residence life options and building repairs.

Mr. Tom Nanzig remarked over visitation changes saying "These changes took so long because the administration was much more conservative (in the past) in their attitudes. Dr. Greenwood has a much different attitude. She has been instrumental in encouraging life style residence halls."

Housing Preference Surveys done in February of this year showed high interest in coeducational options, Greek options, no smoking options, freshman only areas and extended visitation. Of the 1875 surveys that were distributed, 895 were returned. Following are residence options for 1982-83 Coeducational Options:

South Cunningham 2nd floor will be for men; Main Cunningham 3rd fl. annex will be for women; Frazer and North Cunningham will also be coed. Greek Options:

Expanded Housing will be in Cox and Frazer for two fraternities; Stubbs will continue as a sorority area; one sorority area on Curry 2nd will be added.

Freshman:

French, Tabb, North Cunningham and Curry 7 and 8 will be reserved for freshmen.

Extended visitation: Sun.-Thurs. noon to midnight and Fri.-Sat. noon to 1:30 a.m. will be in Frazer, Main and South Cunningham, Curry, Stubbs, Cox 1, 2, 3, and Wheeler ground floor and floors 1 and 2.

Moderate Visitation: Mon.-Thurs. 3 p.m.-11 p.m. Fri.-Sat.—noon-1:30 a.m. Sun. — noon-11 p.m. will be in North Cunningham, Tabb, French, South Ruffner, Wheeler 3rd floor and Cox ground floor. Single sex options will continue in Tabb, French, South Ruffner, Stubbs, Wheeler and Curry for women and Cox for men.

Co-op maintenance will have Cox Hall as a student custodian program area for men and Wheeler for women. High Quiet zones will be in the areas of Tabb Hall 3rd fl. for women and North Cunningham 3rd fl. for men. Commented Dr. Salters: "We started working on life style

College To Be Hurt By Campus School Closing

By JOE JOHNSON

"Only if a sudden miracle from Heaven occurs" said Dr. Greenwood in reply to a question covering the J.P. Wynne Campus School's ability to stay open for next year. The question was answered at a meeting between the college administrators and parents of campus school students earlier this March. The outlook for the Campus School still remains bleak.

The decision to cut funding for the campus school was made in June of 1980 by the State Council of Higher Education. The Campus School is a laboratory facility housing students from kindergarten through 7th grade, and is dependent on state funds for financing.

The result is no Campus School for next year. The repercussion of which will touch everybody from the students who attend (approximately 200) to Longwood's students who use the school as an observation facility, to the teachers who work there.

Where the students who now attend the campus school will go next year is undecided. But since approximately 130 of them live in Prince Edward County, the local county schools will carry the brunt of the influx of children into the public school systems.

Dr. Crayton Buck, director of the Campus School who attended the State Council of Higher Education's meeting which decided the fate of the J.P. Wynne School said, "The decision was based solely on economics. There will be no funding for next year, because the council had to find a way to cut cost."

But Dr. Buck feels that "in the long run it's not going to save money...they are going to have to replace what they lose here in some way. We do about 11,000-12,000 contact hours per year...if you're going to maintain that in your program, you're going to have to pay for it some way."

The contact hours consist of everything from pre-student teaching and basic tutoring to observation hours for a wide variety of Longwood's departments including psychology, social work and elementary education.

Lynn Hoeton, a social work intern, who has over 180 work hours at the school said, "This place is a human laboratory. The smallness of the school and the closed circuit television make recognized values of liberal-arts education, she said that students need to have a "world consciousness so that they recognize that the needs of one person and one nation are related to the needs of other persons and nations...the desire and the capacity to use leisure time well...an appreciation of the importance of human values...and a sense of direction, if not a meaningful philosophy of life, so that our students know where they are going and why."

Dr. Greenwood said that the College would be developing "a closer and more productive partnership" with the private sector through increased internships, co-op programs, and other opportunities for businessmen and students to interact. She emphasized that Longwood has been working closely with community leaders to assess the needs of the region and "to develop, cooperatively, Longwood's participation in helping to meet those needs."

"We stand ready," she said, "to offer special workshops, seminars and programs to business and industrial personnel, educators, professional people, and other segments of the community...and we are proceeding to raise private funds to build a Fine Arts Center as the center for the arts in Southside Virginia."

Following the address, the audience sang the Alma Mater, led by the band and the Camerata Singers. After the Benediction and Recessional, the crowd attended the reception in Lankford Building where they admired and tasted Dr. Maria Silveira's huge inauguration cake on display there, and were entertained by the Music Department's brand new Show Choir, directed by Dr. Louard Egbert.

options last spring. We in student affairs implemented ideas received from surveys and this has resulted in options for fall of 1982."

On April 2nd Roy Hill, Tom Nanzig and Dr. Greenwood toured the residence halls. Security, general hallway conditions, and improvements that had been made were noted.

To help with security approximately 700 locks (dead locks) will be put in all the Cunningham, Tabb, Curry and Frazer. So, for example in Curry and Frazer, there will be a key to enter the suite and then locks and keys to each of the two rooms in the suite.

"I have been trying to remedy the situation (of needed locks) since July of 1979. Credit goes to Dr. Greenwood for supporting requests for money," said Tom Nanzig.

Much work is proposed on Cunningham areas. Director of Physical Plant, Mr. Roy Hill, described the plans for North Cunningham, the annex and Main Cunningham. Such changes include: new bath fixtures, new floor coverings, a sprinkler system, new light fixtures, painting and finishing of both areas. The basement of North will be turned into a nice kitchen area and lounge. The annex basement storage rooms will become lounges and a kitchen with a small storage space. Roof work will be done on North, Annex and Main; the roof of South was done in '76. There will be heat controls on all radiators (like French has) in the Cunningham and fire petitions will be added at different points. Work on the Cunningham will begin in January if it is finalized through the board.

Painting in Tabb and Curry will be done this summer as much as possible and is fundable.

There is also a proposal for handicapped bedrooms in the South Cunningham basement.

"If plans go through (fee tuition as scheduled and proposed presently) and are approved by the board there will be significant increase in the amount of funds available for repairs and other improvements in the residence halls," said Dr. Salters.

"If students would quit vandalizing rooms, we would do work that needed maintenance. Students will be billed more strictly in the future for damages as many things (such as doors) will be completely repaired this summer," remarked Roy Hill. "We hope in the future," said Nanzig, "that students will find ways to improve residence hall life here at Longwood."

Oedipus Wrecked

By JOE JOHNSON

Probably the most difficult thing about producing Sophocles' Oedipus Rex is retaining a modern audience's attention. The play has very little onstage action and it would not be an understatement to say that Sophocles fell in love with his own dialogue. (Although after reading the play one surely can't blame him). Faced with this dilemma and the demands of a contemporary play watcher for entertainment, one can only say that Director Patton Lockwood has made a most noble effort in the Longwood Player's production of Oedipus The King.

It was an effort, in that it did not always succeed in riveting the audience's attention. There were too many actors and actresses who did not carry the full power of their lines to their parts, leaving the audience distant and not fulfilling what Aristotle claimed a tragic play should be—namely, a catharsis of emotion. The audience should have left this production of Oedipus The King feeling drained mentally and emotionally. Instead one is left with a vague feeling of wonder at the originality of the special effects but little or no empathy with Oedipus, his eyes now blood filled pores.

Jim Greene, who played the chief priest in the opening scene of the play, ought to be banished from Longwood's stage. His lines, which told of the awful plight the city of Thebes was suffering, were delivered in an Atari like monotone. Somehow, I think the chief priest of a city, that was suffering a fiery plague, might bring a bit more spunk to his plea.

The same is true of Faith Lancaster, who played a shrewish Jocasta. Although she raised the volume of her speeches and did quite a bit better than Jim Greene, Faith still needs to work on the subtle pause and voice inflections which are so necessary to this type of play.

After watching Lisa Magill's rendition of a bitchy queen in "Once Upon a Mattress," Faith's pales by comparison.

Which brings up another sore point for this play. Why wasn't Chris Conner casted as Oedipus? His performance as Creon was the most powerful of the play. Although Fred W. Campbell did a good job, his movements were stilted and the effect of the headstrong king, impulsive in proclamations, quick to anger and slowly working out his own fate is almost lost. Chris Connor's movements and acting were smooth and eloquent. He made a noble figure and out-Oediposed Oedipus.

Bob Lemieux as Teiresias came off as a timid character, holding on to his cane as if it could ward off Oedipus' wrath. His scene which was so potent with ironies and subtle double meanings and even to a certain extent comedy was lost on his performance. It is hard to believe the oldest and wisest man in the world was a wimp.

The Corinthian messenger, Jeffrey Thomas, was obviously used for comic relief. He trotted onto the stage looking like something out of a Ringo Starr movie and played his part excellently. The only question is why does a noble messenger from Corinth look like Fred Flintstone? For that matter, why does Jocasta, who is supposed to be Oedipus' mother, look like his daughter? Why does the Theban herdsman look like he's wearing a bee's hive? And, finally, why does Teiresias have a page boy haircut?

The play had its good points though. Ronald Hurley's musical scores were excellent and brought about a mystical excitement, which beautifully complimented this play. His scores for the chorus were highly original and contained an interesting language rhythm, which sounded similar to the Roman Catholic religious chants at Good Friday Mass (with the exception of clapping hands, of course). The only complaints in this area — it was difficult to understand their lines and choreography should have been more precise.

The stage design of vertical sideprops, over the entrance backlighting and slanted stone court by Richard Gamble was fantastic. Lighting for the play was beautifully done and the last scene with the floodlights on Choregos in blood red was stupendous. But as happened so much throughout this play, Choregos, like certain other actors and actresses, did not live up to the lines.

Winners Of The April Artist-Of-The-Month Award

The winners of the Longwood College Art Department's Artist of the Month Award for April are David Volz and Elisabeth McGuinn.

David, whose plexiglass sculpture, "Space, the Final Frontier," won the studio art award, is presently a sophomore at Longwood. He is working toward a B.F.A. degree and will be concentrating in Printmaking and Graphic Design. A native Virginian, he resides with his mother, Mrs. Marguerite G. Volz, in Fairfax. During his last year at Oakton High School, David was responsible for designing and printing posters for the school. It was then that he became interested in Printmaking.

Currently an officer in Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity, David is responsible for designing and printing the annual Oktoberfest poster. He has also designed his fraternity's hall mural which was just completed on Third Floor Frazer.

Although his concentration as an Art Major is in printmaking, which he plans to make his career, his prize-winning work was done in three-dimensional design.

Miss McGuinn was the winner in the Art History section of the competition, for her paper discussing the architecture of the Dulles International Airport. Lis is presently a Junior working toward a B.F.A. degree in Drawing, with a Minor in Art History. Born in Munich, Germany, she currently lives in Northern Virginia with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. McGuinn of Vienna. She is a 1979 graduate of George C. Marshall High School.

Second Place in the Studio competition went to Mary Ruth Shields for a plaster sculpture, "Monica," and Third Place was awarded to Kathryn DeHaven for her "Rocking Horse," a mixed media piece.

Second Place in the Art History area was awarded to Michael Lewandowski.

The "Artist of the Month" competition is a monthly competition for all students enrolled in art classes at Longwood. The award carries a $50 cash prize for first place winners and the winning work is displayed in the Bedford Art Building first floor hall. The competition is now in its second successful year.

... "Quote" of the week...

Dr. Greenwood, during her inauguration speech, had the quote of the week: "... if students are banking on money and jobs for their ultimate satisfaction in life, they may be in serious trouble when the jobs aren't there or job dissatisfaction occurs."

Greeks Continue To Eat Dirt

Barry Driver ran a one-man campaign against the unfair treatment Dr. Armstrong and Dr. Salters rammed down the throats of the Greeks. Both fraternities and sororities really have no voice in decision making at Longwood because: 1.) The administration is more concerned with the hypothetical problems of drinking than the actuality that drinking is reality; 2.) A weak interfraternity system and 3.) Greeks that independently will not fight for their rights.

The Greeks are exactly where they were in February when Dr. Greenwood promised Dallas Bradbury that action would be taken immediately.

The Rotunda Is Dying

The Rotunda is a disgusting newspaper. In the past it has been a newsletter for Sally-Red-and-White, Gang Green and every other assanine antic at Longwood. Finally it seems all the class color crap is dying. Thank God! It once seemed that the only intellectual thing reported on was where in the hell those rag dolls were hidden or when Chi walked. And nobody really cared except the few that were involved.

The sad thing now is that we do not even have students to write bathroom wall graffiti. There are only 4 people that write the entire paper every week. The Rotunda is a disgusting newspaper.

Students Denied Right To Effective Government

Editor, the Rotunda,

There was a time when the message of young people held some weight. Whether or not that is still the case, I am not sure. At least it does not seem to be at Longwood College. As a student, and particularly a member of Student Government, I become frustrated when considering any kind of attempt to bring change here on behalf of the student. Recently, the frustration has increased to anger. As Campus Life Chairman, I was approached by the leadership of the Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council, two organizations that represent a large number of people on this campus. These individuals asked me to make a proposal to the Student Senate that regulations regarding visitation and the use of alcohol in fraternity and sorority chapter rooms be changed to match those of regular dorm rooms. This would mean that the classification would be changed to private areas. I supported this proposal fully in view of the fact that use of a chapter room may be restricted to the members of a particular organization only, plus the fact that fraternities and sororities spend a substantial amount of their budgets to use these rooms. The proposal was made to the Student Senate and was passed unanimously — not one no vote.

According to the procedures for student proposals, the issue went on to the administration where it was acted upon selectively. They agreed on the issue of visitation, but rejected our request to reclassify the rooms and allow the consumption of alcohol. The main issue surrounding the proposal was undoubtedly the use of alcohol in the chapter rooms. Myself and other advocates of the proposal were quite disappointed when our request was denied. We were not only disappointed at the denial of our request, but also the effectiveness of student government. As students, we followed all the guidelines for student input to college policy and all the many efforts went for nothing. I am an active member of Operation Care and recognize the need for responsible use of alcohol in our community, but is to restrict student freedom the way to promote responsibility? Asking a friend what was the purpose of student government, the reply was "to make the students feel that they have a say in the policy of the school." Right now it seems that student government is a symbolic gesture amidst authoritarian rule. Personally, I feel confident that the newly inaugurated president will bring about positive changes to this college. The students need and want a say in what is to be here at Longwood. We are what the school is all about. I ask the administration to be more responsive to the students' desires. I also ask the students to become more active to ensure that you receive the benefits that are rightfully yours.

William G. Frazer

Justifying The Boycott

Editor, the Rotunda,

I would like to take this opportunity to explain why I asked the Greeks to take the stand that they did this past weekend. As many of you know I made public on Thursday an editorial on how I felt the administration had been handling Greek issues. Also, I asked the class of '82 to boycott the inauguration. During the week I contacted each fraternity and on Thursday I presented my editorial and request before the Panhellenic Council. Not once did I hear any opposition and much support was provided.

On the day of the inauguration I did not pass out copies of my editorial. Up until that time I told everyone that I planned to do this. I never actually intended to embarrass the administration in front of Dr. Greenwood's guests and I do not think we did. What we did achieve was to bring this issue to the attention of everyone on campus. This is not just an issue over Greeks having alcohol in their chapter rooms. More importantly, it is an issue over students and student groups such as student Senate not having a voice on this campus.

There were several results that came out of this weekend. Many people stood up and backed our issue. Some students stood up and strongly objected to our stand. A few previously respected student leaders did not stand up for what they or their groups stood for because they did not wish to jeopardize their reputations. The Dean of the college totally lost her composure over the issue. And finally the College President did not let herself get put in a bad situation. Those students who took our stand and also the President have my gratitude and admiration. Those students who stood up against us also have my respect because what this college needs is people who stand up for what they believe in.

Now that we have brought this issue out in the open I hope that we the students and the administration can work together to iron out the problems. Copies of my editorial will be available so everyone will be able to see the facts leading up to this situation. I hope that there will be no hard feelings or loss of respect from either side because the Greeks and administration can work together in a positive manner. But, in order for this to happen there must be an equal effort on both sides.

Campus School Closing

observation in this type of school really advantageous. Plus Longwood is so close by it makes it easily accessible for education students to get here. It's an excellent training area for teachers to get their feet wet."

Students of the Campus School feel no better about the upcoming displacement. "They are running a petition with over 50 signatures or so to send to the President," said Lynn. The students probably have a right to be disgruntled. They will be shifted from a school with some of the best developed Art, Music and Physical Education programs to such schools as Prince Edward County, "where the established music and art program is a one hour class twice a week," said one teacher who had substituted at the county public school.

Dr. Buck has pointed out that there are local alternatives for students choosing a school next year, but for the 130 who live in Prince Edward, it is a choice between attending Prince Edward Academy where tuition per student is about $1,000 or the public school system.

The teachers at the campus school are also put in a bad position. Even those who are tenured are job hunting. Sandy Stauffer, a teacher at the Campus School said, "All of us are having to find a job, even those that have tenure. It's difficult for those who have been here for quite a few years. For a teacher that has taught for more than 10 years, it's hard to find another school that will pay the same wage...that is willing to pay for your experience and expertise." Thus far only one of the 12 teachers has found another position.

Longwood has had several suggestions on what to do with the soon to be empty facility. One of the most hopeful was housing the Southside Special Education Consortium (currently housed at Prince Edward Public Schools) at the campus school. But the consortium proposal (which was voted on by school superintendents from seven surrounding counties) did not get the support of Prince Edward County.

Don Winkler, Longwood College's director of Public Affairs said that there are currently no plans concerning what will be made of the Campus School next year. Dr. Buck hopes that the building will be used in a manner that enhances the educational program for Longwood College. "Longwood has a fine reputation as a teacher training college...without it (the Campus School) that reputation will be tarnished".

Show Choir Comes To Longwood

By CINDY CORELL

It all started at the beginning of the spring semester of 1982. Flyers were distributed over the campus advertising auditions for Longwood's Show Choir which was trying to get off the ground. Tentatively entitled Vocal Arts Ensemble, the few (fifteen) performers, accompanist, and director finally came together. They rehearsed several times a week for hours at a time, hoping against hope and using the tremendous amount of faith they all share to become the professional performers that they proved themselves to be Saturday when they debuted at the Inaugural Reception.

"This is the maiden voyage of a brand-new group who's time has come," said Director Lee Egbert to the audience, dedicating the first performance "to you, and to President Greenwood, and to Longwood College."

The hundreds of people who drifted around through the Gold Room and A-B-C rooms stopped for the two 15-minute shows that the Show Choir put on. The electricity moved like lightning into the room, leaving the audiences thoroughly entertained and highly complimentary. They were moved from body swaying rhythms when the number "Great Jubilations" opened the show to tender emotions from numbers such as "It Was Almost Like a Song" and "You're the One" and back to spine tingling excitement as they closed with a "Fame" medley including "Fame," "Out Here On My Own," and "I Sing the Body

Electric."

Their voices blended like a rainbow's colors and their moves, choreographed by Horace Scruggs, Sabra Seneff and Eileen Mathes, were similar to a Broadway chorus line. This group is definitely here to stay, much to the satisfaction of Longwood College. Students, faculty and administration alike were moved by the show, the enthusiasm of the group and the talent finally being shown. But the Show Choir needs more than just this support at performances, though they greatly appreciate it. They need several musicians (drummer, electric bass player and a jazz pianist) more singer-dancers to audition for next semester. Members of the ensemble receive one credit hour. They also need equipment and funds to build on the strong foundation they have managed to construct. The investment seems worthy to anyone who has seen the lively group.

The Show Choir plans to travel to high schools, spreading their enthusiasm and talent to easily inspired high school students. This is in addition to performances on campus throughout the semester. But the music costs money; the microphones and amplifiers cost money. With help and financial support this group will find no limit to their abilities, and students across Virginia and audiences here will have no limit to their enlightenment and entertainment.

Greenwood Named To Study Commission

Longwood College president Janet D. Greenwood has been named to a national study commission of the Association of Governing Boards of Universities and Colleges (AGB) assigned to examine the academic presidency and make recommendations on ways to strengthen presidential leadership.

The commission will serve as an advisory board for this new program, which is supported by a two-year grant from the Carnegie Corporation to AGB.

Directing the project will be Clark Kerr, former president of the University of California, chairman and executive director of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education and chairman and staff director of the Carnegie Policy Council on Policy Studies in Higher Education. David Riesman, Henry Ford II social sciences professor emeritus at Harvard University, will act as special consultant to the project.

Prominent trustees, presidents, foundation officers and educational leaders have been appointed to the study commission.

The project, to be completed by December 1983, will culminate in a position paper on the current state of the academic presidency and a set of recommendations addressed to governing boards, presidents, presidential aspirants, and educational associations on ways to support and strengthen presidential leadership.

Jazz Specialist To Speak on April 21

Lancers Beat Indians, Lynchburg

Team Ranked 16th With Mark of 22-4-1

From Sports Info

In perhaps its biggest week end of baseball ever, Longwood beat Division I William & Mary 11-6 and Lynchburg, ranked 3rd in Division III, 9-7 to boost its season mark to a sparkling 22-4-1 with nine games left to play. Coach Buddy Bolding's team is heading toward the end of its finest season ever, ranked 16th in NCAA Division II.

Backed by a grand slam homer from Ron Jones and shutout relief pitching from David Mitchell, the Lancers handed perennial power Lynchburg its fourth loss of the season Sunday afternoon at Lancer Field. Saturday, Sonny Bolton and Dwayne Kingery drove in three runs each as Longwood downed William & Mary on the road.

Coming on the heels of a 10-0, 12-3 sweep of St. Paul's Friday, the weekend wins gave Coach Bolding plenty to smile about as he looks ahead to his team's chances of advancing to post season play for the first time ever.

"If we continue to play as we are, we should have a good shot at a bid to the NCAA Division II Playoffs," said the coach. "This is the first time we've ever had two wins this big back-to-back. When you demonstrate that you can win the big games back-to-back, it should establish you as a legitimate playoff contender."

Longwood faces a tough slate of nine games over the next eight days. After a trip to Virginia Monday, the Lancers visit James Madison Wednesday, Lynchburg Friday, St. Mary's (MD)

Saturday and Bowie St. Sunday before returning home to host Hampden-Sydney April 26. Longwood closes out its season at Washington & Lee April 27. St. Mary's and Bowie St. are twinbills.

Ranked 16th in Division II in Collegiate Baseball's latest Top 20, the Lancers did nothing to tarnish their reputation last week despite a tough 9-5 loss to Virginia Commonwealth Monday. Longwood swept St. Paul's Friday as Mickey Roberts pitched a three-hit shutout in the opener and Bill Catron came back with a four-hitter in the nightcap. Roberts struck out seven and Catron nine.

David Rumburg, who leads Longwood in average (.459), hits (39), doubles (11) and is tied with Kingery (25 for the RBI leadership, had five hits in seven trips with two triples, a double and a homerun, plus three RBI's).

Leftfielder Sonny Bolton had a big three-run double in the 6th inning and Dwayne Kingery drove in three runs also as Longwood beat William & Mary Saturday 11-6. Richard Vaughn limited the Indians to three hits and three runs in 6 and one-third innings to pick up his fifth win against one loss.

Bolton is hitting .405 with 10 doubles and 13 stolen bases while leading the team in runs scored with 32. Kingery is batting .424 with 25 RBI's and six doubles.

Rightfielder Ron Jones, the leader in stolen bases with 15, delivered the big blow in Sunday's win over Lynchburg when he clouted a grand slam homer in the third inning. Denny Ulrey and Kingery had three hits each in Longwood's 14-hit attack.

Senior David Mitchell registered his third save of the season when he came on in relief of David Brown and shut-out the Hornets over the last three innings. Brown upped his record to 4-1 while Mitchell is 5-2.

Other top performers for the Lancers are freshman Allen Lawter with a .424 batting average, Duayne Kendrick .375, John Sullivan .373 and Doug Toombs .371. Ulrey has driven in 19 runs to tie for second in that department.

David Rumburg stretches to get the out.

White Leads State Title Bid —

Named Longwood Player of Week

From Sports Info

Senior Tim White had rounds of 76-74 for a 150 to lead Longwood to the College Division State Golf Title April 10-11 and the Lancer golfer has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period April 9-16. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Longwood's top golfer the past three years, White has been playing particularly well in his senior season. He finished in third place among College Division competitors and eighth overall in the Virginia Collegiate championships while leading Longwood to its first state title and first tournament title.

A Manchester High School graduate, White shot a 77 Tuesday to help Longwood win a four-team match at Randolph-Macon and over the weekend he carded a 147 to tie for seventh place in the Gobbet Classic out of a field of over 80 golfers.

Another impressive performance by the Lancer golfer came in the William & Mary-Kingsmill Invitational when White had rounds of 74-76 for a 150 and a second place finish out of 80 competitors.

After leading Longwood to a 12-2 match record last season, White has helped compile a 9-1 mark thus far in fall and spring of 1981-82.

Named a Division III All-American in 1980, White finished 14th out of 120 golfers at the NCAA Division III National Tournament and won the long drive contest.

Todd And Kersey Pace Longwood Netters

From Sports Info

Coming off a 1981 season record of 1-13, Longwood's tennis record now stands at 6-4. One of the major reasons for the team's sudden turn-around is the outstanding play of members John Todd and Bryan Kersey.

Todd, a junior business major, has found that the team's sudden change can be attributed to a better attitude on the part of the players.

"Everyone pushes each other a lot more this year," he commented. "Last year everyone was working on an individual level, but this season has been a real team effort."

A graduate of Fort Hunt High School, John has also found his own tennis career undergoing a major rehab. His current singles record is 6-4, a sharp contrast to his 1981 mark of 1-12. He plays in the No. 2 position.

"I guess the major difference in my playing this year has been in my attitude," John said. "When I step out on the court now I have a lot more confidence than I did last season."

John attributes his change in attitude to hard work and steady improvement.

"We worked out all year round this season," he stated. "If it was too cold or too messy, we played indoors. I think that the extra practice really helped boost my game and my confidence."

John's teammate and doubles partner, Bryan Kersey agrees that the team shares an unusual closeness.

"There is a good atmosphere on the courts, both at practice and during the matches," Kersey commented. "All of the players are very close — we even hang around together after practice."

Bryan, a freshman majoring in biology, has had little trouble adjusting to the pressures of college competition. His singles record is 7-3 in the No. 4 position, and he and John lost their first doubles match only last Saturday.

"In a way, I guess I'm glad we got that first loss over with," he joked. "Now we can settle down and win the rest of our matches."

Kersey admits that his long-term tennis goal is basically one oriented.

"I want to win all of my remaining matches, mostly because I want the team to be able to qualify for post-season competition," Bryan stated.

In doubles, Todd and Kersey have been a force to reckon with. They have teamed up for a 7-1 mark at the number 2 position. Both players feel that their personal friendship has contributed to their success.

"Sometimes we get a little irritated with each other when one of us makes a mistake," John offered. "But we're such good friends that we get along well together on the court. We like to play together."

Kersey participated in cross country, basketball and tennis at Peninsula Catholic High School and was captain of the tennis and basketball teams. Todd participated in tennis and basketball at Fort Hunt and has played rugby at Longwood.

Thursday the duo teamed up to win their seventh doubles match of the year at No. 2, topping Virginia Wesleyan's No. 2 team in three sets. The victory broke a 4-4 deadlock, enabling Longwood to win its third 5-4 match of the season.

While only in its second year, Longwood's men's tennis team has made great strides. With players like Kersey and Todd returning next season, the future looks bright.

Jipner Takes Mr. Virginia Title

By MIKE LYNCH

Remember Vaughn Jipner. It's hard to forget Vaughn Jipner once you've seen him. He's the one who dressed up as The Hulk on Halloween and looked pretty convincing. He's the one who rolls kegs down entire dorm halls, does nasty things to the bodily parts of opposing rugby players and recently won his class in the Mr. Virginia, AAU Bodybuilding Championship.

The contest calls for six to eight mandatory poses with all contestants on stage at first, followed by callback rounds for closer inspection by the judges. Finally, the contestant gets to display his own choice of poses by music. Jipner was allowed to skip the callback rounds due to the fact that he had already wrapped up first place.

In order to be in form for the event, Jipner dropped 18 pounds in 15 days by going on a tuna and water diet which put his figures at just under 5'-10½", 192 pounds, with 17½" upper arms, 24½" thighs, 47½" chest over a 31½" waist and 16¾" calves. "I was torn to shreds and had muscles everywhere," Jipner said of his condition for the event. In analyzing his victory in the medium-height class, he stated "my legs were my advantage," going on to relate that there wasn't much difference in upper body statistics between him and the other competitors.
